A good many years ago Herbert Spencer directed the attention of the public of Great Britain to the fact that legislation in free governments tended more and more to place restrictions and impose penalties upon all of the various activities of the individual, repealing statutes upon the same subject when the original ones proved unavailing or unsatisfactory, until its societies were irritated and pestered with multitudinous statutes and laws of a regulatory character necessarily requiring the multiplication of bureaus and official agencies for their enforcement, enlarging the burden of taxation because of the enormously increased expenditure necessary for their administration, and ending, or threatening to end, in a despotic legal condition or in the collapse of the social and economic fabric. This he declared to be the most serious of all the consequences of so-called free government, when the statesmanship and the caution of those in authority yielded to and thus accelerated that tendency.

I think that the history of the United States and of the 48 States composing it during the past quarter or half a century abundantly confirms the existence of this evil, the difficulty of checking its operation, and the unfortunate and sinister consequences which must flow from its repeated exercise. I am told that during the last 20 years the States and the Congress together have placed 79,000 laws upon their statute books, all of them designed to produce a better social and political condition by legislation, and many of them relating to the same subject, which seems to have been improperly or unsatisfactorily dealt with at the beginning.

The Nation is not as happy now as it was 25 years ago. We are more discontented, more dissatisfied with our condition and that of the body politic, and therefore we are clamoring for more statutes, like the inebriate who, prior to the 16th day of last January, was prone to cure his malady by prolonging his debauch. Of course, having enacted prohibition he can not do that any more, but we all know that the Nation is as dry as the Reed amendment would have it dry, because one-half of the people of the United States are spying upon the other half, which, notwithstanding this espionage, manages somehow or other to meet an ever-increasing bill for smuggled whisky. Of course the remedy for that is another constitutional amendment of some sort, a bigger appropriation, and a vast increase of the bureau or the agency designed to enforce it; and I have no doubt, Mr. President, that when those who honestly believe that prohibition will prohibit discover as time goes by that there is a vast distinction between an act that is prohibited and a country that is dry they will demand additional legislation, possibly in the shape of blue laws to take the sun out of Sunday and make it a crime for a man to kiss his wife on the Sabbath day. When that good time comes, if it fails to restore all morality of the public to the extent and to the degree for which men clamor, other legislation more drastic in character will in all probability be enacted, in consequence of which husband and wife will probably be locked in separate rooms, the children put in the barn with the horse or taken from their parents, the gasoline tank emptied late Saturday afternoon, and the chauffeur put in jail until the holy time shall have elapsed, so that men and women shall be good, virtuous, and happy in the freest country under the shining sun.

This is part of the same legislation and it is the germ of repeated acts upon the same subject bound to come, among which will be the clamor of the governors of the States for legislation imposing the whole financial burden of the operation of this law upon the Federal Treasury, while the bureau for its administration, extending over the vast area of the Republic to deal with a condition which is as universal as mankind, will have multiplied its employees beyond comprehension and this $4,000,000 a year for which provision is made year after year, another extraordinary provision of the bill, will only be a drop in the coming bucket of expenditures.

A man is a fool who in the Congress of the United States questions the constitutionality of any bill in these days. He only provokes ridicule, if not pity and contempt. What is the Constitution between appropriation bills and their exponents? What does it amount to in the face of an overwhelming petition of those who are interested in a given measure?

In the first place, there will be very few who will question it in the courts unless it immediately concerns them, and in the next place any and every thing seems now to be in the power of the Federal Congress that the judgment, the whim, or the caprice of our several Members seem to think desirable. So I shall say nothing about the constitutionality of the measure beyond asserting that in my judgment if such legislation as this had been supposed even a remote fantastic possibility in the early days the Constitution of the United States would never have been ratified.

I concede that it is no worse than scores of statutes that have been placed upon the statute books during the eight years of my service in this body. I concede that the purpose of the bill is a most benevolent one, a most beneficent one, a most humane one, and if benevolence and beneficence and humanity measure the limit of our powers as a Government of delegated authority then there is no question about our right and perhaps our duty to enact measures of this sort.

Governments, and especially those existing by consent of the governed, constitute an agency formed by the people for governmental purposes, to protect life and limb, to give security to property, to levy taxes for public necessary purposes, wage war, make peace, conduct domestic affairs not reserved by the States to themselves, and to conduct at all times our relations with foreign Governments and people.

Such was the conception of this Government of delegated powers by those who framed it and by the first two or three generations who lived under it. But in these days the Treasury of the United States having long ago become the most attractive temptation in the world to all the people of the United States, both our actions and our purposes have revolved around that Treasury as the center of practically 90 per cent of all our legislation. As a result, our States have become practically innocuous and irresponsible Commonwealths. They have become so accustomed to the extension of Federal activities within their dominion, to the exercise by the Federal Government of police and other local authority and power, that they have long ceased to be indifferent to the process and are actively inviting further invasion.

So long as money obtained by appropriation bills from the Treasury is to be administered and expended locally, so long will we continue to saddle upon the National Government both the possession and the performance of those important duties and obligations, which is but another name for the exercise of local self-government. In other words, we are wiping out the actual distinctions between the States, with their consent and approval and active cooperation, and substituting a huge central authority in its place, and substituting also for the local powers Federal bureaus and boards and agencies, with their headquarters in Washington and their myrmidons spread all over the country. The lice in Egypt were scarcely thicker than the Federal employees of the United States, scattered from the Pacific to the Atlantic, each representing in his own opinion the sovereignty and majesty of the Republic and sometimes making and enforcing his own rules upon the people, occasionally in harmony but frequently in conflict with statute law, thus making the city of Washington the county seat of practically every county in the United States.

Why, the hotels here are constantly filled with men, sometimes with women, whose business at great expense brings them to Washington to secure the arrangement of some matter of entirely domestic concern which now is represented by a bureaucrat, clothed with the authority of Federal law and exercising his duties through a red-tape process that generally means from two to six months before anything can be accomplished.

We are multiplying that situation with almost every statute we enact. Hence the man who speaks of the United States to-day as a democracy either speaks hastily or in spite of the fact that this Government is a bureaucracy pure and simple.

Mr. KING. It is worse than Prussia as a bureaucratic Government.

Mr. THOMAS. What has not yet been bureaucratized will be before the Nation is five years older. I think I am safe in asserting that one-half of the bills that are enacted into law by Congress require for their operation and administration a bureau or a board or a commission, and once it is created it is immortal. It defies time, tides, and the threatening processes of political instability. It is here to stay, and any attempt to remove it is met by the opposition of the organized employees and representatives of it, backed by every other organization of similar character, with the result that we damn them in the cloakroom and vote for them in the Senate.

I know, Mr. President, that even to criticize these conditions is useless. You can not stem a tide that seems to be irresistible, and as long as there is any money in sight this tide will rise as it is rising.

I had occasion a day or two ago to remind the Senate of the fact that the lobby which Wilson is said to have destroyed in 1913 has been succeeded by 125 separate lobbies, political, racial, social, industrial, some of them sectional, every one of them having no concern whatever for the general welfare, no desire to decrease the expenditures of the Government, but determined by threats, by persuasion, by entreaty, or by other processes to secure for themselves and to defeat for others legislation in which they may be interested. We are afraid of them, especially since they now help each other and expect mutual favors. The only thing on earth that stands between most of these organizations and legislation is the absence of a roll call, and as soon as it is ascertained that a roll call will accomplish all that is desired, some one will at all times see that it is had.

Let me illustrate. The bonus bill came up in the House of Representatives shortly before the last session died, and a vast majority of the membership was opposed to it. That was demonstrated by every viva voce vote that was cast upon the measure. Those behind it finally demanded and obtained a roll call, with the result that a bill increasing the indebtedness of the United States by more than two and a half billion dollars was passed with scarcely any opposition whatever.

Will you tell me, Mr. President, that such a situation is promising for the future or that a nation already burdened and overburdened with the most colossal debt in history can long keep its head above the waves if we continue to accumulate additional appropriations upon that burden on the one hand while the taxpayer is defaulting upon the other because of his inability to secure the means which are essential to meet the demands of the Government? The newspapers yesterday announced that in the great city of New York taxpayers owing more than $40,000,000 defaulted in their payments because, they declared, it was absolutely impossible for them to meet their last quarterly payment upon income and excess-profits taxes. One concern whose taxes were $2,800,000, which had paid three of the installments, found it impossible to raise the remaining $700,000. You may say as to any institution whose revenues are so enormous as to make them liable for such a tremendous sum in taxes that it serves them right, since they have made no provision for such an emergency; but the unfortunate fact is that we are confronted upon the one side with falling revenues and upon the other with increasing expenditures.

What are we going to do about it? The Republican Party has just swept this country and has achieved the most enormous victory that a political party ever won. It is in control of the Government for the next four years absolutely. What will they do under those circumstances?

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator mean for two years?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I said four years. I do not, however, believe their majority will be quite so big two years from now; not because the Republican Party will not do its best, but they can not satisfy the taxpayer on the one hand and the man who wants an appropriation on the other any more than we could. I think much of the vote which went to the Republican ticket in the last campaign was attracted there because we had failed to enact such financial legislation as some of the people demanded. I do not mean that we were not willing to do so. If we on this side shied at any appropriation bill that has been introduced since I have been in Congress it must have been when I was out of the Chamber, and I have been here practically all of the time, or simply because we either did not have time or there did not seem to be enough push behind the bills which were defeated.

I am not myself willing to add to the existing burden. I think the individual members of the Republican Party are the best fellows I ever knew in my life, but collectively I never did and never will have any use for them [laughter], and yet I feel too friendly to the incoming administration to do anything that will increase the terrible burden which they must carry, because if we do we must take our share of the consequent responsibility. I want to see prosperous times return. If the prayers of the wicked availed anything, I would pray that the next administration would restore prosperous conditions; I think as common Americans we should all feel so; but I greatly apprehend, Mr. President, that the very influences to which I have referred will be exercised quite as potently upon Republican human and official nature as they have been upon Democratic human and official nature.

The Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] called attention to the fact that the pending bill was nonpartisan because a Republican had introduced it in the other House and he had introduced it here. I have no doubt it is nonpartisan, not because of the manner of its introduction—for that is shrewd legislative business—but because the purpose of the bill really appeals to both sides of the Chamber, and the 30 or 40 women's associations which have indorsed it appeal more strongly now that they have the votes. I think I have received about 25 or 30 letters and telegrams since yesterday morning from the good women of my State calling upon me to support this measure; and I am satisfied that the ladies of the other States have been just as busy with their representatives here as mine have been with me. It is pretty hard to refuse a good woman, a conscientious woman, and it is equally hard to refuse a good and conscientious man.

I know how hard it is. Therefore, while we wish them in Tophet when we are in the cloakroom, we are going to sing their praises here upon the floor and tell them how anxious we have been here for years to vote for this and similar legislation. Consequently the bill will pass.

Mr. President, before I take up the bill I wish to refer to one or two of the reasons which have been assigned for it by the Senator from Texas. He tells us that he has letters from 30 governors showing that they are all for it. I said a few moments ago that State officials were apt in these days, no matter what their politics, to be for anything to get money out of the United States Treasury for local expenditure. I am surprised that the Senator has not a letter from the governor of every State. What is a poor governor going to do when the representatives of 30 women's associations come to his office, gather around him with pleas and with tears, with flattery and with threats, and with suggestions regarding his ability and the need for reelecting him—what is he going to do? In nine hundred and ninety-nine cases out of one thousand he will not only write a letter to the proponent of the measure, but he will publish the fact of his adhesion as broadly as possible. I have no doubt I might do it myself if I were the governor of my State and wanted to be reelected. That sort of support to me, however, means absolutely nothing. I will guarantee that I can take any measure that has promise of an appropriation for local expenditure and I can get the support for it of practically all of the men and all of the women of the State where the money is to be expended. It counts, of course; it counts so much that we legislate here not according to our convictions but according to the demands of our constituents; in other words, we are no longer Senators; we are delegates; we are rubber stamps. We used to keep one ear to the ground, but now we keep both, and as soon as we think we know what the prevailing sentiment is at home we make up our minds. As a result leadership, statesmanship, originality of legislation, the standards of the Congress and of legislatures have been transformed, and when the whip cracks outside we get into line. This is bureaucracy in action. With our civil service organized and affiliating with the American Federation of Labor, and with all the other organizations of a kindred character united we can now, under such pressure, easily pass a resolution in Congress dissolving the Union or declaring war against Great Britain or opening trade with the Bolsheviki or take any other action that seems to have behind it sufficient pressure of a potential political character.

Mr. SMOOT. And a sufficient appropriation.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, the appropriation is inevitable. There used to be a play when I was a young man called Mulberry Sellers in the Gilded Age, the chief character in which always ended his rhapsodical statement to his friends, "I go in for the old flag and an appropriation." So do we; we stand when we hear the music of the Star-Spangled Banner and proclaim our 100 per cent Americanism, and support all the appropriation bills for which we get a chance to vote.

I do not believe that sort of patriotism to be good for the present or the future, Mr. President; but there is a great deal of it on hand.

But the Senator reminds us that the last Democratic platform indorsed this measure. Now, there is an argument that appeals to me, and especially since the election. I am sorry to say that what this country failed to do for the last Democratic platform is beyond my comprehension. There is nothing left of it; and if it means anything now, it means "Beat this bill." The other convention—I do not know why; I do not know how they got around it—seem to have dodged this particular measure. Perhaps they were so taken up with phrasing their plank upon the League of Nations so as to include the bitter-enders and the nonbitterenders, and they succeeded in doing it, that they had no time for trifles like this.

As platform makers, gentlemen, I take off my hat to you. You drew a plank concerning the League of Nations that meant nothing, yet everything to everybody; and under its benevolent phraseology the bitterenders, the ex-President of the United States, and the Lodge reservationists all found ground to stand on. Now, if that is not the height of political statesmanship, then it never has been and never will be reached in this country.

We were not so successful; consequently we were snowed under, not once but several times over. Hence I can not help feel that I am relieved of the obligation imposed upon me by my party with regard to the particular plank which involves this measure.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Republican candidate for the Presidency indorsed this measure.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. He commended the measure in a public speech in the course of the campaign.

Mr. THOMAS. To be sure; and if I had been in his place I should have done the same thing. He did not know then as well as he does now that he did not need any extra votes. The other man indorsed it, and where, oh where, is he?

Mr. President, there is a good illustration of the way in which both parties make votes by voting pensions. Both sides are ready to give the old soldiers or the young soldiers all they want. Why, then, should they change their politics? We have been doing that for some time.

I have the highest respect and a warm personal affection for the President elect. I have the honor to consider him one of my best friends in this Chamber. I am willing to do anything for him that I can do conscientiously, but I can not support this bill even though he indorsed it; and, of course, if that be the case, the appeal, while it may be effectual with some, breaks harmless at my feet. In other words, I am getting to be a pretty tough old opponent, hardened by unsuccess and the misfortune of constant defeat during my otherwise very pleasant career in this eminent body.

Now let us come to this bill.

If it had been introduced before the armistice, it would have been entitled "A bill for the more successful prosecution of the war and for the public protection of maternity and infancy, and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States"; but the Senator drew this measure after the war was ended, and consequently it can not be considered a war measure, first because it does not say so, and second because there is not any war. I beg pardon of Senators on the other side; there is still a state of war, but no necessity for longer promoting its successful prosecution.

The bill, Mr. President, to begin with, authorizes the annual appropriation of $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921; $2,400,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922; $2,800,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; $3,200,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924; $3,600,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925; $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926; and annually thereafter the sum of $4,000,000, making down to and including June 30, 1926, a total of $18,000,000, plus, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] reminds me, $480,000 a year, which shall be paid annually to each State at an equal rate, $10,000 to each.

Here, then, is an authorized appropriation running over a series of years. Now, a very good lady in urging my support of this bill called my attention to the fact that this was such a poor little mite of an appropriation that it ought not to be considered in the general condition of affairs. It is a small appropriation, relatively. Millions of dollars are only chicken feed for us in these days. They are so insignificant that a bill carrying only half a dozen millions is hardly of sufficient consequence to provoke either opposition or debate, but the multiplication even of millions, little millions, by an accumulated number of bills, sometimes aggregates quite a sum.

Until we were overtaken by the recent high-price wave which, now that it is leaving, is frightening us to death, the municipal traction companies over the country met all their expenses and paid their dividends upon a common fare of 5 cents for each passenger. I mention that illustration as showing the cumulative power of money or of figures. This is one of a large number of bills, and their addition now to the annual fixed charge upon the Government revenues is a subject that ought to receive, I venture to submit, no matter what the amount of the sum, the most serious consideration.

We listened the other day to the ominous figures presented to the country by the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. The deficiencies we are bound to confront are so appalling in their magnitude that I scarcely dare to repeat the amounts; and the revenues, as I have stated, are falling off. In the face of that situation we propose, if we follow this calendar, perhaps several times over, to make other fixed charges upon the Treasury which will not only make the reduction of taxes impossible, but will inevitably lead to their increase if the business and productive interests of the country can stand an increase.

"Oh, but," it is said, "this is for a good purpose," and so it is; but should that now be the test of our legislation? I know of a great many good things I should like to see helped. I wish in some way we could abolish poverty altogether. I know that the precedents we have set in this body, if the House shall approve them, will inevitably result in bills for the relief of the unemployed, whose numbers are large enough now, too large for comfort, and in my judgment will be very much larger next spring. We can not legislate for the financial benefit of one class of people and refuse to legislate for another—indeed, we should not do it—for, once the Government enters entirely into the scheme of paternalism, the equality of man will be more manifest in appeals to Congress than it ever has been heretofore.

Candidly, Mr. President, I think, as I said the other day, that the man who is thrown out of employment because of changed economic conditions is as much entitled to the financial consideration of the Government as the producer who has lost his market, the difficulty in both cases being that we are advancing beyond the domain of governmental action, that we are not using our taxing power for public purposes, but that we are yielding to the doctrine that the people were all made for the government, and not the government for the people.

Hence, from the standpoint of our pecuniary condition, I can not support this or any similar measure at this time. If it is a good thing it must go over, in my judgment, until our Treasury is in a very different condition from that in which it unfortunately is at the present time.

This bill is devised so that the benefits of the appropriations can be enjoyed only by the States which appropriate similar amounts. Upon the face of it, that makes it a joint affair; the Federal Government pays half of the cost of its administration, and the State governments pay the other half. A great many similar measures in the past have carried, and they lead inevitably to the effort, at least, on the part of the States to shirk their part of the burden, and to pivot the entire thing upon the shoulders of the Nation.

I have several times been requested by some of my constituents to support a measure here relieving the States from their required contributions to the fund for good roads, on the ground that it was too heavy a burden for them to carry; and, of course, the United States, having plenty of money, possessed of some invisible and mysterious and never-failing source for securing it, and getting the benefit of these improvements, ought to do it themselves. Hence I do not think it is an unreasonable statement to predict that the progression of this bill, or of the law after it becomes a law, will constantly tend in the one direction to increase the burdens and in the other direction to double them through the exemption of the States; and when the attempt is made letters will be read here from every governor in the Union recommending it, especially those who are candidates for reelection, because it will be a big thing for themselves and their constituents.

But in addition to that, Mr. President, I affirm that this board can not function, and in its functionings comprehend the entire subject among one hundred and odd millions of people, on $4,000,000 a year or twice that sum. If it is to save the lives of thousands of women and infants now offered as a sacrifice upon the altar of our negligence and incompetency, it will need a fund ten or fifteen times greater than the amount which this bill now carries.

You tell me that if it does, the object it accomplishes is worth it. I grant you. But then I come back to the proposition, where are we to get the money? I wish it were possible for a Government like ours to be able, either automatically or by some other process which would relieve the taxpayers, to keep its Treasury full all the time. The age of miracles has passed. We can no longer feed a vast multitude with a few loaves and fishes. The widow's cruse of oil in these days does not last overnight.

It must be replenished, and replenished from some source, and the only source I know of for the replenishment of the Treasury is the property of the people, and unless our taxes are diminished, and sensibly diminished, in the next four years, millions of votes which were cast last fall for the Republican ticket will be cast against it when the next presidential election comes around, for we have educated the people, Mr. President, by yielding to their wants to believe that the Government is the source of all their misfortunes, of all their evils, and of all their misery; therefore that the Government is capable by legislation to heal their misfortunes, to replenish their wealth, and to restore to them, at any time we see fit to do it, their prosperity. That is the job you gentlemen have. I am glad that after the 4th of March I will be in respectable life. It is a job that can not be performed if we are going to constantly enact appropriation bills, and especially those which increase the fixed charges of the Government.

This Nation is going through the travail of reactionary conditions, through the operation of inevitable economic laws whose processes have already begun. The next year is going to be a hard year for producer and consumer. Business is already depressed. These untoward conditions breed discontent and sometimes disaster. There is no royal road to prosperity, no legislative road, certainly, through which these conditions can be avoided. We must meet them and overcome them in the good old way, as we did in 1857, in 1873, and in 1893, and those whom we have educated to believe that they will find their panaceas through legislation will be bitter in their resentment toward those who fail to extend them, or who, attempting to extend them, shall not measure up to the limit of the expectation.

So I protest, Mr. President, in all seriousness, against the addition of legislation like this to our statute books, and this is from the standpoint of our financial condition.

But, Mr. President, this subject, in my judgment, is one which, if it is as serious as claimed, it is the duty of the States in their respective jurisdictions to meet. If the Government of the United States has authority and jurisdiction, as a Government of delegated powers, over a subject like this, then we should create a bureau to see to the decent burial of every citizen, man, woman, and child, not only aiding in the bringing of people into the world, but in seeing that they pass away amidst surroundings at least of Christian decency. I might mention other illustrations, but it is not necessary. I know that each of these successive measures constitutes a precedent for others, and every man or woman, conceiving an idea of something which will be of beneficial result to the human race or to reform it, will not only hasten to Congress to present the measure here, but will inevitably have behind it the support of everybody who will give his assent to it, as being more pleasant than either to refuse or to be indifferent.

UMI

The mortality in maternity cases given here from some unstated official source as being 23,000 last year out of a population of perhaps 25,000,000 adult women, while very serious and deplorable, is not much less than the number of murders that have cursed this country during the same period. I will not say so, because my information is not sufficiently definite, but I think, Mr. President, that this is a normal mortality, and if it is, then it will persist.

We do know this, that as woman rises in the scale of civilization and refinement the dangers of maternity increase, and the lower this scale the more easily that ordeal, which in the course of nature is essential to the perpetuation of the race, is borne. I do not mean to say for that reason that this measure is not properly devised, but I do say, Mr. President, that if it is to be administered by a Government bureau, it is a failure, for if bureaucracy means anything it means a decrease of efficiency and capacity, and a substitution for both of a red-tape program that is the most expensive thing to the people of the United States that I know of.

We have another bill here for the purpose of taking over the educational interests of the country and then in creating them into a bureau or department and binding it with the irremovable fetters of Washington red tape, all because the States have the notion that the Government of the United States ought to carry the expense of education; and yet the education of the young is one of the supreme elements of local self-government, one of the things which perhaps of all things should remain under the dominion and control of local authorities everywhere. There is no educational system in the world like that of the United States, beginning with the district school and ending with the State university. That is coming to Washington, I am told, with its additional appropriation. School-teachers are all for it, and I do not blame them, for God knows their compensation has been a shame and a disgrace to the people of the United States for many years. They may get more money, but the injury that such a bill, in my judgment, will do to local self-government in the United States, to say nothing of the cost of education itself once it became bureaucratized, is far greater than any monetary compensation, even if the Government were wealthy, that could flow from that direction.

So I believe, Mr. President, that we have gotten along pretty well in the good old way, the people attending to their own business the best they can, the Government attending to its business the best it can. Jefferson is the idealized statesman of this side of the Chamber. He once said that that government is best which governs least; but we honor Jefferson on this side—or have since I have been here—by going contrarywise to every sensible thing that he ever advised us to do. I know that that government which governs least must be better than the one which governs most, because it is that kind of a government that I have been accustomed to during the last 25 years of my life.

It is said here that heretofore Congress has appropriated large sums for hogs and cattle. That is true. Most of the hogs have walked on two legs, and since we began to squander money on these hogs their appetites have increased amazingly and will continue, in all probability, to do so as long as their threats and their commands are heeded by this body and the one at the other end of the Capitol. It is true, Mr. President, that a great deal of money has been appropriated for the animal industry of the United States. It is easy to draw a comparison between a hog and a child, and to say if you do so much for hogs, why do not you do something for children? Hogs form a part of the interstate commerce of the country, therefore peculiarly within the jurisdiction of the United States Government. The child is supposed to be under the guardianship of the family and the family to be the foundation of our form of government.

Every well-regulated parent tries, as soon as possible, to look after the welfare, both physical and mental, of his offspring. Mr. President, we should beware of the first move toward the physical control of children, lest we end with the system which prevails to-day in a country which possesses 180,000,000 of people.

You may say that there are many who have not the means to properly nurture a child or to care for a wife in the throes of maternity. It is to them that the duty of the separate Commonwealths should go. When I was governor of my State I advocated something of that sort, and it is to them, Mr. President, that this duty will go, if we by our legislative action compel the States to do their duty—to carry their share of public responsibility and enable the Government of the United States to properly function along the lines it was designed to occupy.

This report says there is no difference of opinion among the women as to the necessity of this measure. I do not doubt but that is true. I think I am safe in saying that not 1 per cent of the women of the United States have ever read this bill. They may have heard something of it. I have known bills to pass here which were said to have the support or approval of practically all the women in the country. They did not appeal to me particularly for that reason, because, while it is something that should be considered at all times respectfully and seriously, it never should be the controlling influence of legislative action. Why were we sent here, Mr. President? Was it not to exercise our own powers of thought and action, to take an oath to support the Constitution of the United States, and give our time and our talents to such legislation, and to the prevention of such legislation as seemed to be essential at the time, and to correct such former legislation as experience has shown to be unnecessary or inexpedient? Hence that should be the basis of our action, and while welcoming opinions of others, not be overswayed and taken from our seats because of their numbers, but from the sense of our duty, of our obligations, and of the effect upon the body politic, all the people, of any laws that we may pass upon the statute books. Hence the first question is, in my judgment, to what extent does a measure like this affect all the people of the United States? Some one ought to speak occasionally for all the people of the United States.

I say, in the first place, that it is a usurpation of State authority, and, in the next place, that we bureaucratize—I wish I could find a better word and a simpler one to express what I mean—all these various domestic duties and conditions, and aggravate the evils that they are designed to cure rather than give the benefit which it is hoped they will bring. It is inevitable that a Federal board in the city of Washington, charged with a duty of this sort in a remote village in the State of Washington or of Maine or of southern California or of Florida, can not be as effective under any circumstances as those directly upon the ground, ready to act, and who ought to act by every impulse of humanity, to say nothing of the duty resting upon the broad shoulders of the particular Commonwealth.

God knows where this sort of legislation will end. I have called the attention of the Senate to the views of Herbert Spencer upon the subject. I suppose he was the keenest and most profound political and philosophical thinker of his generation. His works are immortal. His warning has never, in my judgment, been answered. Indeed, I question if anyone could do so.

If we continue this infinite series of legislation affecting the person, affecting his association with his fellow man, affecting domestic affairs, affecting his business, we will soon affect his politics, arouse his hostility, and, by our irritation, possibly alienate his loyalty to the Republic, which is charged with the duty of protecting and not persecuting.

Now, Mr. President, I shall not occupy the time of the Senate any longer upon this measure. As I stated at the outset, I know that I have been wasting my fragrance on the desert air. In the first place, only a meager half dozen of Senators have done me the honor to listen, even in part, to what I have said.

In the next place, I think they are precommitted to the bill. I have no doubt a large number of them believe just as honestly and conscientiously that it is wise and necessary as I believe that it is not; but it carries an appropriation, and that is the open sesame of Federal legislation. Indeed, let me close by relating an incident that occurred on this floor during the consideration of the good roads bill immediately after the war.

You will remember, Mr. President, that our lamented brother and colleague, former Senator Bankhead, chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, reported an amendment to the Post Office appropriation bill of that year appropriating $250,000,000 for good roads. Some of us thought it was unwise, I still think so, and did at that time. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] asked the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead] this question: "Does the Senator know where the money is coming from to make this appropriation?" The Senator from Alabama retorted, "You had better ask the Finance Committee. It is their business to supply the money, and it is simply our business to vote it." And it is; he answered correctly. You gentlemen who are to control the Finance Committee next year should remember that. It is your province to supply the money, to regulate taxation, and as you discharge your duty, so, in my judgment, will the fate of your party be.

IMMIGRATION LEGISLATION.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to address myself for a moment to another matter. Recently a bill restricting immigration passed the House. That measure is now before the Senate Committee on Immigration. A number of bills were introduced by Senators dealing with this important subject, and those measures are now before the committee.

I have seen the statement in a number of newspapers that in all probability nothing further would be done with this legislation during this session; that the Senate would take no action whatever upon the House bill or any other pending measure. I do not know where this information came from. Conceding accuracy, generally, to the press, I am inclined to think, however, that in this matter an error has been fallen into.

Speaking for myself—and I think for other members of the committee—I desire to say there is no disposition to delay the passage of legislation at this session dealing with the question of immigration. I know that a number of Senators, members of the Committee on Immigration—and I am a member of that committee—have asked for speedy consideration of either the House bill or some of the measures which have been introduced in the Senate. I am reasonably confident that within a short time the Senate committee will take up for consideration the measures now pending before it and report some bill to the Senate. I believe that some legislation should be enacted before we adjourn. I believe that the information which we have obtained relative to the purpose of millions in Europe to come to our shores in the immediate future calls for some prompt action upon the part of the legislative branch of this Government.

Of course, no policy will be adopted which will permanently exclude aliens from our shores. Our country for more than a century has been the asylum for the oppressed of all nations, and we have welcomed to our shores millions of people from all parts of the world. Our composite citizenship testifies to the fact that we have drawn peoples from nearly all parts of the world. There is yet room in the United States for millions of honest, intelligent, and progressive people. But the situation in Europe and other parts of the world to-day is such as to call for restrictive legislation. Indeed, there seems to be strong reasons calling for a law that will forbid for a limited period practically all immigration. During such period an exhaustive investigation can be conducted and full information obtained, so that at the end of such period we will be ready to put into operation a law which will be fair and just and which will preserve the ideals of this Republic and make for the happiness and welfare of the American people.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is it the intention of the Committee on Immigration to hold hearings?

Mr. KING. My understanding, responding to my friend from Texas, of the attitude of the Senate committee is to hold hearings.

Mr. SHEPPARD. After the holidays?

Mr. KING. I am advised that the chairman of the committee—though I have not heard it from him directly—has stated that there will be no hearings until after the holidays. In my opinion, we should have the hearings immediately. I hope the committee will refer these bills to a subcommittee, if it shall not conclude to consider them in the full committee, and that the subcommittee or the full committee will grant hearings to those who desire to be heard.

I think there has been some propaganda in the United States and a good deal of hysteria calculated to inflame the minds of the American people, so that they would oppose for a long period any migration to our shores. This subject is of vital importance and should not be treated lightly. A sound and rational immigration policy should be adopted, but we are not in possession of sufficient data to formulate a permanent law. But, as I suggested, the chaotic conditions of Europe and the imminence of a flood of undesirable immigrants, among whom would be thousands of persons who desire the overthrow of this Republic, not only justifies but requires the immediate passage of a measure which will practically prevent any aliens from coming to the United States for a period of from six months to one year.

I sincerely hope that the committee will immediately consider the question, and that before the holidays or immediately after the holidays the House bill, with suitable modifications and amendments, or a similar one, will receive favorable action upon the part of the Senate.

CALL OF THE ROLL.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FERNALD in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Capper	France	Heflin
Borah	Curtis	Harris	Henderson
Brandegee	Fernald	Harrison	Jones, Wash.
Kendrick	Overman	Smith, Ariz.	Thomas
Kenyon	Page	Smith, Md.	Trammell
Keyes	Phipps	Smith, S. C.	Warren
King	Pittman	Smoot	Watson
Kirby	Poindexter	Spencer	Wolcott
McNary	Pomerene	Stanley
Norris	Ransdell	Sutherland
Nugent	Sheppard	Swanson

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-one Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present. The Secretary will call the names of the absent Senators.

The Assistant Secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. MCKELLAR, Mr. NEW, and Mr. STERLING answered to their names when called.

Mr. NELSON and Mr. COLT entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-seven Senators have answered to their names. There is not a quorum present. What is the pleasure of the Senate?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. If a motion to adjourn were made and carried without the unfinished business being laid before the Senate after the consideration of the pending bill, would that change the status of the bill which is now the unfinished business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that it would not.

Mr. SMOOT. The unfinished business was temporarily laid aside and we can adjourn now without affecting its status as the unfinished business. It will come up to-morrow as the unfinished business at 2 o'clock.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is that the ruling of the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK entered the Chamber and answered to his name.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum of the Senate is present.

RECESS.

Mr. FRANCE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, December 17, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, December 16, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Teach us, O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, the simple, the normal life, that we may live in consonance with the laws thou hast ordained, loving mercy, doing justly, walking humbly with Thee, our Father, and thus possess a conscience void of offense toward Thee and our fellow men, after the similitude of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order there is no quorum present. Evidently no quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Ackerman	Clark, Fla.	Eagle	Goodwin, Ark.
Anthony	Copley	Edmonds	Gould
Ayres	Costello	Ellsworth	Graham, Pa.
Babka	Crago	Emerson	Griest
Baer	Crowther	Ferris	Hamill
Bell	Cullen	Fess	Hamilton
Blackmon	Currie, Mich.	Fields	Hill
Bland, Ind.	Davey	Fish, jr.	Holland
Booher	Davis, Tenn.	Freeman	Igoe
Britten	Dent	Fuller, Mass.	Ireland
Butler	Dominick	Gallivan	James, Mich.
Campbell, Kans.	Donovan	Gandy	Johnson, Ky.
Candler	Dooling	Ganly	Johnston, N. Y.
Cantrill	Doremus	Godwin, N. C.	Kahn
Casey	Dupré	Goldfogle	Kelley, Mich.
Christopherson	Eagan	Good	Kendall

Kettner	Madden	Radcliffe	Smith, N. Y.
King	Maher	Rainey, Ala.	Snyder
Kitchin	Mason	Reed, N. Y.	Steenerson
Kleczka	Mead	Riordan	Stiness
Kraus	Moon	Robinson, N. C.	Sullivan
Kreider	Mooney	Romjue	Taylor, Colo.
Langley	Morin	Rouse	Taylor, Tenn.
Lesher	Mott	Rowan	Thomas
Lonergan	Nelson, Wis.	Rubey	Vare
Lufkin	Newton, Mo.	Sanders, Ind.	Venable
McCulloch	Nolan	Sanders, La.	Vestal
McFadden	O'Connell	Sanders, N. Y.	Volk
McGlennon	Padgett	Sanford	Williams
McKinley	Perlman	Scott	Wingo
McKinley	Peters	Scully	Winslow
McLeod	Phelan	Sells	Wise
McPherson	Porter	Small

The SPEAKER. Three hundred Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

LEAVE TO SIT DURING SESSION.

Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have permission to sit during the sessions of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries have permission to sit during the sessions of the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products, had requested a conference with the House on the bill and amendments, and had appointed Mr. NELSON, Mr. DILLINGHAM, and Mr. OVERMAN conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 13264) to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America.

The message also announced that, in accordance with the provisions of the concurrent resolution of the Senate (S. Con. Res. 34) for the appointment of a joint committee to make the necessary arrangements for the inauguration of the President elect of the United States, the Vice President had appointed Messrs. KNOX, NELSON, and OVERMAN as members of the committee on the part of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed House joint resolution 407, authorizing payment of the salaries of officers and employees of Congress for December, 1920, on the 20th day of said month.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4565. An act extending the time for the doing of annual assessment work on mining claims for the year 1920 to and including July 1, 1921; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

ADDRESS OF REPRESENTATIVE MONDELL.

The SPEAKER. Under the special order of the House, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has leave to address the House for one hour. [Applause.]

ECONOMY IN APPROPRIATIONS THE ONLY ROAD TO RELIEF FROM TAX BURDENS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, of the many problems before the Congress pressing for solution none is more urgent than that of relieving the American people of the burdens, vexations, inequalities, and downright confiscations of certain features of our present war-tax policy. Our people have borne with extraordinary patience and patriotism a tax burden which has paid a much larger proportion of our war costs out of current revenues than has been paid by any other people engaged in the World War. While the war lasted, and during the succeeding period in which we were meeting our war obligations, there was comparatively little criticism or complaint of even the more burdensome, inequitable, and hampering of the war taxes. But with the passage of two full years since the signing of the armistice the demand for relief from the Federal taxes, which vex, annoy, and inequitably burden the individual and which seriously interfere with the normal flow of business and the development of industry, has become well-nigh universal. There is no appeal before the Congress more general, more imperative than this.

No considerable or satisfactory relief from tax burdens can be afforded, however, unless and until we shall have laid the foundation for such relief by a very considerable reduction in Government expenditures. There might, it is true, be adjustments or modifications of the revenue laws that would afford some relief, that would remove certain inequalities and lighten some burdens, but a very substantial reduction in Government expenditures must precede and form the basis for any material relief or reasonably satisfactory readjustment.

PROGRESS IN DEBT REDUCTION.

Fortunately we have in the past 18 months made real and substantial progress in the reduction of Federal expenditures. The total net ordinary expenditures of the Government decreased from $18,514,000,000 in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, to $6,403,000,000 in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920. This Congress in its first session reduced the appropriations carried by the eight regular supply bills for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, which had failed of passage in the former Congress in the sum of approximately $940,000,000 below what those bills carried when last considered by the former Congress and $1,685,000,000 less than the administration estimates for the same services. This enormous reduction in appropriations below the estimates of the departments and the sums carried by the appropriation bills as they failed in the Sixty-fifth Congress had the effect of transforming an anticipated deficit into a surplus of $291,000,000 of ordinary receipts over ordinary net disbursements for the fiscal year ending June 30 last. The exact figures are as follows:

Receipts and disbursements for fiscal year ending June 30, 1920.

Total ordinary receipts	$6,694,565,388.88
Net ordinary disbursements	6,403,343,841.21
Excess receipts over expenditures	291,221,547.67

In the second session of this Congress the total of appropriations carried by the regular supply bills was $1,474,000,000 below the administration estimates, and this stupendous saving bids fair to accomplish even more satisfactory results in Government finances for the current fiscal year.

Mr. HULL of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I be not interrupted until I have concluded.

For the first quarter of the fiscal year which ended September 30 last the ordinary receipts were in excess of ordinary disbursements in the sum of $289,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury in his annual report recently issued estimates total ordinary receipts for the fiscal year, including public debt receipts, at $5,799,758,375, and ordinary expenditures, including interest on the public debt and payments on the sinking fund, at $4,851,298,931, or an excess of receipts over expenditures in the sum of $948,459,444. This sum would be available and would be utilized for the reduction of the volume of certificates of indebtedness of which there were outstanding on June 30 last $2,509,550,500, coming due within the year.

The situation thus presented would under the circumstances be a very satisfactory one were we assured of a progressive reduction of Federal expenditures such as we have been able to accomplish in the last 18 months. Unfortunately, however, the estimates presented to us by the executive departments, through the Secretary of the Treasury, not only do not propose or contemplate a further reduction of Government expenditures, but an increase of over a billion dollars. The total of the regular estimates for the 13 appropriation bills are $1,098,535,805.71 in excess of the current appropriations for the same services. I leave it to others to properly characterize these estimates. My wonder grows as I examine these colossal estimates in detail and in their total after having read in his annual report the appeal of the Secretary of the Treasury, who submitted them, for the practice of rigid economy in Government expenditure, and the President's reminder of the necessity of economy in his recent message to the Congress.

But I turn from a contemplation of these measureless and unfathomable inconsistencies on the part of the administration to the consideration of the duty and responsibility which is laid upon us to reduce Government appropriations and expenditures for the good of the country in setting an example of wise economy and in order to render it possible to reduce tax burdens and remove the cloud and handicap on business and industry which some of the present war taxes impose.

THE GOAL OF OUR EFFORTS.

In order that we may lay the foundation for tax reductions it is highly important that we shall have some goal toward which we may strive; that we shall make some estimate of probable reductions in appropriations below the estimates which, by the practice of rigid economy, we may hope to accomplish. I am frank to say that in the face of the estimates that have been transmitted to us and the attitude of the departments toward these estimates, notwithstanding the plea for economy made by the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, it will, in my opinion, require even more courage and a greater effort on the part of Congress to reduce the estimates now presented to us as much as they ought to be reduced than it was to cut $1,474,000,000 from the estimates for the present fiscal year. And I here and now appeal to the Members of this House on both sides for support of the committees of the House in the efforts which I feel confident they will make toward the reduction of Government expenditures.

I make this appeal not only to the Members of this Congress, but to the constituencies they represent. I realize how trying and embarrassing it will be for gentlemen to vote for appropriations far below the estimates while their constituents are demanding liberal expenditure of Government money for purposes which, for one reason or another, appeal strongly to them. The demand for the lifting of the tax burdens and the tax handicap is practically universal, but unless those who are demanding reductions and readjustments of taxation will give encouragement to Congress in the reduction of expenditures the Congress can not afford them early or adequate relief.

WHERE REDUCTIONS MAY BE MADE.

It must be borne in mind that the very large savings, if they be accomplished, must be in items carried on three of our appropriation bills—the Army, the Navy, and the sundry civil. The excess of the estimates over current appropriations for services provided for by these three measures total over $914,000,000, nearly the total cost of government before the war, or if we add to this the Military Academy and fortifications estimates, the total is more than $935,000,000 of estimates in excess of current appropriations. More than $615,000,000 of this enormous increase of estimates over appropriations is for the Military and Naval Establishments and the construction of Army posts and works of defense. In other words, the administration is asking Congress for $1,414,467,768.06 for the Army, Navy, and fortifications more than two years after the close of the war, at a time when the world outside of our borders is largely bankrupt and everybody is praying for a reduction of armaments. [Applause on the Republican side.] The sum asked is about five and a half times the appropriation of $260,000,000 for all these services in 1916, our highest peace-time, prewar appropriation for these purposes ever made.

The appropriations for the Army and the Navy for the present fiscal year are higher than they otherwise would have been because the services were in a state of transition. The Army was being reorganized; the Navy was still carrying certain war burdens. The current appropriations for these services are, in round figures, Army, $392,000,000; fortifications, $18,000,000; Navy, $433,000,000; Military Academy, $2,000,000; or upward of $845,000,000 for these services. This is more than three times our highest prewar appropriations for these purposes. It is much more than we should appropriate for the coming fiscal year [applause on the Republican side], and yet the War Department is asking us for $567,000,000 more.

It is difficult at this time to estimate how much the items in these various bills may be properly reduced, but taking into consideration all of the services estimated for in the regular annual estimates, notwithstanding the fact there will be a considerable increase in the Post Office bill and an increase in the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which will be presented to us to-day, there ought to be a reduction by the amount of the excess of estimates over current appropriations and of at least $200,000,000 below the present total of appropriations for these services, or a total reduction of at least $1,350,000,000 below the estimates. These reductions should reduce the total of our regular annual appropriations to about two billions and, together with certain reductions in permanent annual and indefinite appropriations, ought to bring the total of our regular annual, permanent annual, and indefinite appropriations very near to $3,250,000,000.

UNWARRANTED DEFICIENCIES.

This sum does not include deficiencies the total of which, if the present policy of the War Department is continued, may be swollen indefinitely. At the last session of Congress provision was made for the reorganization of the Army with a maximum of approximately 280,000 men. It was not contemplated, however—it never has been contemplated under any of our Army acts—that the Army would be recruited to the maximum in time of peace.

The departments have understood heretofore that it was the Congress and not the departments that fixed the limitation of the burden on the American people. [Applause on the Republican side.] As a matter of fact the Congress appropriated for an Army of about 178,000 men, with the understanding and expectation that the War Department would recruit the Army only to the strength contemplated by the appropriations. Notwithstanding this action on the part of Congress the Secretary of War has carried on an expensive and questionable system of recruiting until the Army has reached a maximum now estimated at 208,000, and the Secretary of War has stated before the Military Committee that he expects to continue to recruit the Army to its maximum strength.

And on the way to the Capitol this morning I saw a recruiting booth down here on Pennsylvania Avenue actively at work, recruiting the Army far beyond the strength authorized by the action of the Congress. This action is in entire harmony with the contemptuous attitude which the War and some other departments have assumed toward Congress during this administration, and it becomes the duty of Congress to take such action as will effectually prevent the Secretary of War, or any other executive officer, from squandering the people's money by creating deficiencies in violation of law and without regard to the limitations of appropriations made by Congress. It would seem that there are still gentlemen occupying high places under this administration who have not given heed to the thundering rebuke which the people gave on November 2 for the squandering of the public funds and the practice of high-handed autocracy.

Before I leave this subject, may I again appeal to the Members of this body, and through them to the people they represent, for support in an earnest effort to bring Government appropriations and Government expenditures within reasonable bounds. There are certain works of development and improvement, certain activities of the Federal Government along helpful, beneficial lines, which I should like to see enlarged and expanded, but little can be done along these lines until we have appreciably reduced the total of Government expenditures. In the meantime, while providing reasonably for every useful and necessary work and activity in which the Government is engaged we may, and we should, not only wipe out the entire total increase of estimates over present appropriations but make a very considerable saving in addition thereto, which I have suggested.

LIFTING THE TAX BURDEN.

If we can and shall effect the economies I have suggested, we may, in my opinion, substantially lighten the sum total of the internal-revenue tax burdens on the business and incomes of the calendar year 1921. If we do not effect these reductions, then the best we can hope for is a more or less unsatisfactory shifting and readjustment of these tax burdens.

The Secretary of the Treasury, while urging in his annual report a revision of the internal-revenue laws, including a reduction of the higher income surtaxes, the repeal of the excess-profits tax, and of certain classes of consumption taxes, recommends a variety of new or modified taxes in order to accomplish a "revision without reduction of revenue." The Secretary states that the internal-revenue receipts may not greatly exceed four billions for the fiscal year 1921, and he would revise, with a view of raising that amount through internal-revenue taxes to the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923. In my opinion, we are not justified in laying any such internal-revenue burden on the people and the business of the country for two years after January 1 next—or for one year, for that matter. [Applause.]

If we are to follow the extravagant estimates that have been presented to us, then we must maintain the present high level of national income, but I am confident we shall not do that. I am hopeful we shall make as great or even greater reductions than I have suggested, and if we do there will be no necessity arising out of appropriations for a continuation of the present enormous total of revenues.

But the Secretary of the Treasury does not base his recommendation for a continuation of heavy tax levies wholly, or in the main, on anticipated increases of appropriations, but rather not only to meet current bills, including interest and sinking-fund charges, but also to retire the present floating indebtedess and a considerable part of the Victory notes before the close of the fiscal year 1923.

On September 30 last there were outstanding loan and tax certificates, maturing within a year, in the sum of $2,347,000,000; $800,000,000 war-savings certificates will mature January 1, 1923; and $4,500,000,000 of Victory notes become due May 20, 1923. All these tax and savings' certificates, totaling $3,147,000,000, and half a billion of the Victory notes, or a grand total of $3,647,000,000 of the war debt, the Secretary would pay out of current revenues before January 30, 1923.

Manifestly, if we are to continue to pay off our war debt at the rate of more than a billion and a half a year, in addition to approximately a billion and a quarter for interest and sinking-fund charges, we must maintain the present high rate of taxation; but I am of the opinion that by the end of the fiscal year we shall have reached a point in the reduction of our war debt from which the further reduction, except through the sinking-fund operations and returns from salvage, should not continue to impose war-time burdens.

We reached the peak of our gross war debt on August 31, 1919, when it amounted to a total of $26,596,000,000, of which about $4,000,000,000 was in short-time loan and tax certificates. On September 30 this year the debt had been reduced to $24,087,000,000, of which $2,347,000,000 was in certificates. We have thus accomplished a reduction of about two and a half billion in the public debt in a little more than a year out of the proceeds of taxation, salvage, and, to a limited extent, by reduction of Treasury balances.

The Secretary of the Treasury anticipates a further reduction of the public debt through the payment of certificates, as they become due, to the extent of perhaps $800,000,000 by the end of this fiscal year. If this reduction is accomplished, the public debt at the close of the fiscal year June 30 next will amount to about $23,250,000,000, of which sum about $1,500,000,000 will be represented by short-time tax and loan certificates.

LARGE REDUCTION OF FLOATING DEBT.

The reduction of the total debt by the payment and reduction of the floating debt has up to this time been highly important, in fact, almost imperative, for when the total of the floating debt amounted to over four billions the vast volume of certificates were a disturbing factor in business affairs, seriously curtailing the loaning capacity of our financial institutions. On the other hand, with the reduction of the floating debt represented by certificates, to about one-third of the former total, the fact that we will still have a certain amount of the floating war debt that should have been converted into Victory notes will not present a situation warranting the maintenance of the war level of tax burdens with a view of its immediate extinction.

In his report for 1920 the Secretary of the Treasury estimates that up to June 30 last we have paid 32 per cent of the net cost of the war, including foreign loans, out of current revenues, or 44.57 per cent if we exclude the foreign loans. Estimated reductions of the war debt up to June 30 next will raise these percentages to at least 35 and 48 per cent, respectively. This remarkable showing of war-burden bearing need not be improved upon by a continuation of tax levies of war magnitude. In due course we shall proceed to the refunding of the Victory notes, which mature May 20, 1923, and at that time, no doubt, we shall want to make a general survey of our total indebtedness with a view of taking such action as may seem wise and proper in the maintenance of the national credit. In the meantime I see no reason why we should keep up war rates of taxation for the purpose of reducing the public debt at a rate greatly in excess of the sinking-fund rate applied to the entire debt, including the floating debt.

AGREE WITH SECRETARY AS TO REPEAL.

I entirely agree with the recommendations that have been made by the Secretary of the Treasury for the reduction of the higher income surtaxes, the repeal of the excess-profits tax, and certain consumption taxes. Without regard to the question of the wisdom or unwisdom of these taxes when originally levied, everyone who has given the matter careful consideration must agree with the Secretary of the Treasury that these taxes can not be successfully defended at this time, either from the standpoint of justice and equity to the taxpayer or of a proper regard for the interest of all the people in the maintenance of sound and normal conditions in business and industry.

I do not pretend to know, I would not venture to suggest, what other sources of internal revenue it might be wise to tap to provide in part, at least, for the loss of revenue should the recommendations of the Secretary be carried out. That is a matter for the Ways and Means Committee to pass upon. I am quite sure, however, that with the practice of the economies I have suggested we need not, for the purpose of meeting any obligations which are now before us or would be presented by these reduced appropriations, to continue to lay a tax burden of internal revenue of upward of four billions upon the American people, as suggested by the Secretary.

No one can say in advance of the passage of a tariff bill along protective lines what increased revenues we may expect from customs duties, but without venturing an estimate of such sources of revenue, under proper economies and wise management our necessary income from internal revenue taxes ought easily fall far below the four-billion-dollar mark fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury.

APPEAL FOR ECONOMY.

In conclusion let me again appeal to the committees and the membership of the House for the practice of economy. This Congress so far has established an enviable record in the reduction of departmental estimates and in curtailing expenditures, particularly for purposes local in character, and on behalf of which there is always a strong local appeal.

There have been no pork-barrel appropriations. As a matter of fact, we have not been able to make the appropriations we ought to make in normal times for works of internal improvement, for public buildings to house and care for the public business, for rivers and harbors, and we never shall be able to make adequate appropriations for these purposes unless we reduce the enormous total of the appropriations carried in the Army and the Navy bills. [Applause on the Republican side.]

We have now reached a point in the progressive reduction of expenditures after the war where, if those reductions are continued for this session we shall also have laid the foundation for a substantial lightening of the public tax burdens. I have every confidence that the Congress will continue its good work; that we shall make the reductions which I have suggested and more. The people are tired of enormous Federal expenditure; they are weary of tax burdens; they are impatient of the handicap that enormous contributions to the Federal Treasury under present tax laws place upon trade and business enterprise and development. They expect relief, and they are looking to this Congress. We shall not disappoint them. [Applause on Republican side.]

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15130, it being the District of Columbia appropriation bill; and pending that motion I will ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] if he has any definite time fixed in his mind that we should consume in general debate?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15130, the District of Columbia appropriation bill; and pending that——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Practically any time that that side can get along with will suit us. I will ask the chairman to suggest the time.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, I have, I think, a little more than an hour spoken for on this side, so I suggest that we have the total fixed at two hours and a half, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] and one-half by myself.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That will be sufficient to cover all the requests that I have.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would like to have it understood, however, that if we can get through before that we will finish general debate and begin the reading of the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Does the gentleman expect to commence the reading of the bill to-day?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is the intention, if we can.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Of course, the bill has only been accessible since about noon to-day to anybody except the members of the committee.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think that we should push the bill along as fast as we can?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes, I think that; but I think that the Committee on Appropriations ought to bring in bills promptly instead of holding them up as they do. It has not been done in this case, but they have been in the habit of reporting bills on one day and forcing consideration the next day in order that no one will know what is in them.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not wish to force the consideration of this bill, but we thought we ought to begin reading the bill at the end of an hour and a half or two hours. But I will say to the gentleman that the hearings on this bill have been expedited more than the hearings on the District of Columbia bill have ever been expedited before. In order that we might proceed as fast as possible, we often worked as late as 10 o'clock at night.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Each of the appropriation bills will now be reported by the Committee on Appropriations, and for that reason the Committee on Appropriations ought not to prevent the House from seeing the bills before they are passed. I appreciate the fact that the Committee on Appropriations must necessarily be more or less in a rush in order to get these appropriations passed, and I am not going to object at this time, because, so far as I am concerned, I am somewhat prepared on this bill. But in view of the fact that the Members generally have not been able to see the bill and study it, I do not think the gentleman will be able to make very rapid progress in reading the bill this afternoon.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the general debate shall not exceed two hours and a half, one half of that time to be controlled by himself and the other half to be controlled by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN]. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, would it not be better to extend the time to three hours or three hours and a half and at the end of that time rise, so that we can have an opportunity to see and study the different elements in the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Certainly. So far as I am concerned, I would be willing to let the matter stand at three hours. I am not in a position to attempt to rush this bill through the Congress. I want it to be examined thoroughly and given proper consideration. That is my position. Only I know that we are a little rushed for time. If the gentleman desires, we can extend the time to three hours, and then perhaps we could take the bill up and read a little. I would like to begin the reading of the bill to-night.

Mr. GARD. I did not think the bill should be seriously gone into to-day with the intention of reading a great part of it, because we have not had opportunity to see what is in the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, we will go on with the debate, and I think we can satisfy the gentleman in regard to the matter.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota modifies his request and asks that the general debate be limited to three hours. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on next Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of the business on the Speaker's table, I be permitted to address the House for 45 minutes on the question of the tariff, particularly as it relates to our present conditions with respect to foreign trade.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that on next Tuesday, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, he may address the House for 45 minutes on the tariff. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15130, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House having resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15130, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for one hour and a half. Will the gentleman from Minnesota allow the Chair a moment?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman want to make a request to dispense with the first reading of the bill?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I hope all the gentlemen in the House will not leave the floor, and yet I shall not blame them, because I am satisfied that I can not, in the time I have proposed to consume, interest the House as did the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], who has just addressed you. I will be very brief, and for several reasons. One is it will be folly for me in this opening statement to go into many of the details concerning this bill. As you all know, a District of Columbia appropriation bill is composed of many, many items, and they will be carefully scrutinized, and then the details will be gone over minutely under the five-minute rule. Therefore I shall make only a comparatively brief statement upon some of the main features of the bill.

The first thing which I consider of importance in the bill is that the committee, not only the subcommittee, but the full committee of 35 gentlemen, have recommended to this House that the 60–40 plan be adopted, and it is contained in this bill.

From what I can learn from those who usually oppose anything that does not correspond to the 50–50, I do not believe that they are going to object at this time to the 60–40 proposition, and I believe from what I can learn outside that many of the business men of Washington are comparatively well satisfied with that proposition.

Also, you know at the last session we raised the tax rate here from a minimum of 15 mills, which had been on the statute books for many years, to a maximum of 20 mills; not to 20 mills, but using that as a maximum, so that hereafter the commissioners in making up their estimates can base the amount of revenue they desire to obtain by taxation up to 20 mills. This last year I understand they did not use the full limit, but their estimates this year are based upon 1.95, not quite 2 per cent.

The present bill is the largest bill that was ever presented to this Congress for the District of Columbia. It is about a million and a half dollars larger than that of last year, and last year was the largest bill that had then ever been presented. While we cut many estimates, still I believe that if the Members of the House had sat upon our committee and heard the various reasons given for wanting greater appropriations they would have agreed with the subcommittee, which was unanimous, and with the full committee, which adopted this report without a dissenting voice.

The present bill as we now present it to you contains appropriations amounting to $19,878,012.99. It is in excess of last year's bill by $1,505,008.12.

I wish the House to understand that this bill, containing appropriations of $19,878,000, is not all the money that goes to the District of Columbia. There is the sundry civil bill, there is the legislative bill, and there are other bills that contain each year a total of about $3,000,000 in addition to this, and this year the estimates of those amounts which are not contained in this bill but will be put into the sundry civil and other bills will amount to $3,382,943. So you see, if all the appropriations were put into this one bill, it would amount to about $23,000,000.

Now, the estimates based upon a tax rate of 1.95 would raise only $13,772,000. That would be a pretty close proposition. They have got to keep within the tax rate that they are allowed; and without going specially into details on that I will say that the passage of this bill now, with the money that they can raise under the 1.95 tax rate, in my judgment does not leave a disparity of $100,000. We have hewed so close to the line and considered the matter so thoroughly that I do not believe there is over $100,000 margin, and I know some little deficiencies will come in that will probably eat up that $100,000 and more.

So you see your committee have not made a running jump and guess at this matter, but we have figured it out scientifically and mathematically under the law as we understand it.

If we had appropriated the amounts estimated by the District Commissioners this year, they would have had to raise the tax rate, and instead of making it 1.95 they would have had to make it 2.29. Well, you know that there is quite an objection here to raising taxes in the District of Columbia. We did not wish to do that to them this year, so there was only one thing left to do, and that was to cut the estimates. That is all there was to it. We had either to cut the estimates or else raise the tax rate to 2.29. So we took the other alternative and cut the estimates.

There was one thing I would have liked to do which we did not do. We did not raise salaries. Last year we raised the teachers' salaries, and by legislation the salaries of the policemen and firemen were raised, but the clerks, and so forth, in the District of Columbia have not had their salaries raised. We could not raise them unless we went away outside of the money at our command.

Now, I heard the suggestion made the other day that we did not give enough for the improvement of streets. We gave only a little over half what we gave last year. But two years ago and before that we did not do enough for the improvement of the streets. Why? Because labor was so high and material was away up in the air. We really did cut down that item too much. But last year we gave them a large appropriation. We made up, so to speak, for what we omitted the year before that, and so on. Of course, we did not take care of all the streets, but we went a long way in that direction. Now, having done so last year, we cut the appropriation for repair of streets this year somewhat.

What did we do with that money? We added nearly $2,000,000 to their schools and school buildings more than last year, or in other words, $1,944,700 in all. We thought it was just and proper to curtail a little on the surfacing of streets, and to give that amount to the children, schools, and extra playgrounds. So we gave them every school building and every addition to every school building that the commissioners of this District requested. In other words, we have increased the amount for care and maintenance of schools and school buildings in this District nearly $2,000,000. Have we done right? We are going to leave that to you gentlemen to say. We can not do it all. I do not think we ought to do it all in one year. I do not think we ought to tax the residents of the District to do everything in one year, but I assure you that the subcommittee, of which I happen to be chairman, are willing to proceed just as rapidly as we possibly can without doing injustice.

Now, our floor leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], said that the appropriations ought to be cut down. Well, I am going to give him an opportunity. He can repeat what I say and make it more beautiful. While I want the appropriations cut down, while they ought to be cut down, and while they must be cut down, still I come in before this Congress and say, "Gentlemen, here is a District appropriation bill which is a million and a half or so greater than we ever gave you before." The gentlemen may say, "Why don't you practice what you preach?"

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. I think I can make all the speech I desire in a few minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will give the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not want five minutes. I am sure the gentleman from Minnesota is in full accord with the desire, as is the committee and the Members of the House generally, to reduce appropriations. I had no idea that the District of Columbia bill could properly be reduced below the present appropriations. As a matter of fact, I congratulate the gentleman from Minnesota, who has given the matter close attention, his subcommittee, and his committee on the fact that they have been able to bring in the District of Columbia bill, which I think reasonably meets the present situation, with so moderate an increase as the bill carries over the present appropriation. This was not one of the places, as the gentleman knows, where we expected to reduce appropriations this season below the last, but one of the places where the necessary work to care for the activities of the Government—education of children—required some increase.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I thank the gentleman very much. He, in a way, is my boss, if I may use that word, and requested a few minutes ago that I let him have 5 or 10 minutes, as he wanted to speak. I did not know but that I was going to get a reprimand for bringing in a bill $1,500,000 larger than the last.

Mr. MONDELL. On the contrary, I congratulate the gentleman and will not need any additional time.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Was all of the excess of a million and a half of the proposed appropriation for next year over the actual appropriation for this year used for school purposes?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Oh, no; not all. I think about a million and a half was used for schools and school buildings, and the other is divided along the line in many places—charitable institutions, child labor, playgrounds, and so forth—but the bulk of it is for the schools and playgrounds.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How much reduction is there in the matter of street improvements?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Pretty nearly cut in two—$250,000 this year and about $500,000 last year. There is another item of $500,000 or $600,000 on the assessment and permit plan, which we do and pass it up to the residents themselves. The other is what we take out of the Treasury. We cut that a little bit, because we were pretty liberal last year.

The committee spent two days in looking over the streets, and while we found some places that are not quite as smooth and oily as we would like to have them we found them in pretty good condition, and we did not want to run it up above a million and a half this year.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the appropriation of a million and a half dollars over last year precludes the school-teachers from any appreciable increase in salary this year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It does for the present. Let me say to the gentleman that the bonus continues, and the gentleman must bear in mind—and I speak from absolute knowledge—that two or three years ago the low-grade teachers were getting only $500 or $600 as a basic salary. Now, the basic salary of the lowest grade is $1,200, with a $240 bonus. I do not say that that is large enough, but they have been increased, doubled, and almost trebled in the last three years. Other employees in the District are looking a little sad because they have been raised more in salary than they have, and while all the teachers have not been raised in the same ratio, I am a believer that it should be raised more in the lower grades of teachers. It costs the teacher in the low grade just as much for a dozen eggs or a pound of butter as it does the teacher in the high grades.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I suggest to the chairman of the subcommittee that it might be well for him to say that besides the $1,200 basic salary and the $240 bonus the teachers have the longevity pay, which amounts to $50 a year, increased automatically for 10 years.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I forgot to state about the longevity pay, which is peculiar to Washington. They get $50 additional every year in some grades, and more in others, and that increases their pay materially.

Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY. Let me say to the gentleman that I fear if something substantial is not done for the teachers, by and by all you will have will be the buildings, and you will not have any teachers to take care of the children.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have heard a good deal about that, and the gentleman may be right.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is the only element which the gentleman took into consideration in increasing these salaries the cost of food and clothing?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Oh, no.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman stated that it cost the teachers of the low grade just as much for a dozen eggs as it did teachers in the higher grade. I was wondering if when the prices of food go down he intended to reduce the salaries.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman from Massachusetts wants my idea on the low-grade teachers' salaries, I will give it to him.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to know where we will stop.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I am willing to go on record that the most important school in the life and education of a child is the so-called kindergarten. I think the condition of the mind of the child and the character of a child is more impressed in that formative stage, before he is 10 or 12 years of age, than after, and if I had my way about it the kindergarten teachers who have made a success in that line should be paid just as much, nearly, as teachers in some of the higher grades. I know some teachers here in Washington who remained as kindergarten teachers when they could have been promoted to the other grades. They refused to leave that grade because they loved that particular work, and I admire those teachers, and I did want to give them an opportunity to live at least respectably. Hence, I was for raising them more rapidly than the others.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman's theory looks very fine in type, but he will admit, I think, it is entirely impractical that the kindergarten teacher should be placed upon the basis of the salary that is paid to the principals of schools of the common grades or of the high grades.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It may be impractical and it may be that it can not be done, but still I think the character of the child is formed to a very great extent before it reaches 12 years of age.

Mr. WALSH. I think the influence of the home has a great deal to do with that.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. From his action heretofore I believe the gentleman is in favor of granting better pay for the teachers. This House has without any apparent hesitation at all voted to pay salaries of $3,900 to examiners in the Patent Office. I would ask the gentleman what specific thing it is that each year keeps our District of Columbia Committee and now the Appropriations Committee from raising the salaries of these teachers to something like a living wage. The gentleman speaks of low-grade teachers. In my judgment, if we would raise the basic salary to $2,000, which it ought to be, we would not have any low-grade teachers. We might have teachers for the lower grades in the schools, but they would not be low-grade teachers. We must do something along that line or, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY] said, we are not going to have any teachers here that are fit to teach the children of any American citizen.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not wish to get into any controversy about that.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not court any controversy. I want to know what it is that keeps us from properly raising those salaries?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is a question that we will have to consider. I have always voted for an increase of salaries of the teachers.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there any move made in the committee to do it, and if there is, is there some influence in the committee that keeps it down year after year? I want to know the facts; I want to know what keeps it down.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know that this is any good criterion, but, as compared to the teachers in other cities throughout the United States, the salaries paid to the teachers in the city of Washington are pretty high. I do not know that that is any good reason for not raising them any higher. I know of only one or two cities in the United States that pay more than the teachers of Washington receive.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, since we adopted the budget system and concentrated all appropriations in the Appropriation Committee, the sentiment has gone around the House—it has been expressed to me by numerous Members—that the House would not tolerate any legislation on appropriation bills. An increase of salary is legislation and is subject to a point of order. That absolutely controlled my action on some increases that I thought ought to have been made, and as long as that rule maintains or as long as that is the dominant sentiment of this House, no legislation will come in on an appropriation bill, and people desiring an increase of salary, teachers as well as others, must go to the legislative committee to get it, or at least until the House reverses itself and will permit legislation on appropriation bills.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That was one reason why we left out a great many things. We were fully advised that points of order would be made on anything that was legislative.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. GARD. I notice in the report that the appropriations for public schools are increased from $5,018,000 to $6,114,000, an increase of $1,096,700. Then the report cites instances of increase in pay of $131,800 and an increase in the longevity pay of about $50,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is not an increase in the longevity pay. That is a statutory matter, and we have simply to comply with the statute.

Mr. GARD. The report says that the appropriation is increased from $520,000 to $570,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That comes as a matter of course, and it is not subject to a point of order. If we did not allow that, a deficiency would have to be allowed.

Mr. GARD. The other elements in the increase of $1,096,000 are contained under the retirement funds, the janitors, and appropriations for janitors. Is that it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There are a great many different items under the schools—repairs and things of that kind—that all come under that head.

Mr. GARD. I was wondering whether the gentleman could advise me without going into too much detail what constitutes the great volume of increase in this $1,096,000? The gentleman must understand that I am in favor of having the best schools in the country here in the city of Washington, or at least as good schools here as there are any place in the United States, both so far as the buildings are concerned and the personnel of the teachers. I do not know that they are entitled here to any better schools, but they are entitled to schools equally as good.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will give the gentleman the exact figures. The total for public schools is $1,096,700 greater than last year. The school building increase is from $395,000 to $1,243,000 this year. On that item alone there is an increase of $848,000, and that is the largest item going to make up the item of $1,096,700.

Mr. GARD. That is what I desire to know.

Mr. BUCHANAN. That and the new teachers.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have provided for 98 new teachers. We had to provide for them because of the increase in the number of buildings. There will be very soon completed 64 new schoolrooms and we have to have additional teachers to operate in those new schoolrooms.

Mr. GARD. My recollection is that we authorized last year the erection of new school buildings in certain places.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Quite a number of them.

Mr. GARD. How many of them have been completed?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not any of them has been fully completed.

Mr. GARD. How does it happen that notwithstanding the authority given last year to erect school buildings and the necessity for their erection they have not been completed?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is a matter about which there has been considerable discussion. I insist upon maintaining that Congress is not to blame. The money has been appropriated, some of it for two or three years. The buildings are not yet completed. Congress is not to blame.

Mr. GARD. Why is Congress called upon to appropriate sums of money for specific purposes when there is a need for the fulfillment of certain specific purposes, as in the construction of school buildings, and after the appropriation is made the money is permitted to lie idly by for a few years without anything being done?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is a matter I refer the gentleman to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to settle. For instance, we authorized the construction of a building at $190,000, full cost, and gave $50,000 the first year; that was all they could use, and the balance the second year, and the building is not completed. Is that the fault of Congress? I refer you to the gentlemen having charge of the District.

Mr. GARD. The fault is not that of Congress, because the power of Congress is simply to appropriate money for the utilities which the commissioners say are necessary.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All right.

Mr. GARD. But it seems to me not to be the proper policy—I do not speak in criticism of anybody connected with the Government—to make appropriations of money for a specific purpose in a generous spirit and then the appropriations are not used, but instead that money is held idly to the exclusion of some other necessity that might exist.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will refer the gentleman to the legislative Committee of the District of Columbia to pass any law that he sees fit for urging and hastening up the construction of buildings.

Mr. GARD. I do not believe that it is fair to suggest that the legislative committee do that, because that is not a matter on which the legislative committee could get any quicker action, because their all-powerful Appropriations Committee, which guides our destinies, both small and great, in this House, determines the policy of appropriating the money, and of course if they do not have the money they can not put up the buildings. What I am trying to get to the mind of the gentleman is that if they need the buildings and have the money, why not build them?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will ask the gentleman why; tell me why?

Mr. GARD. I am asking the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know, sir.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I would like to state to my colleague from Ohio that some of these appropriations were passed fixing a limit of cost on the buildings, and they claim they could not let the contract under such limit of cost. They started construction of some of them. If the gentleman will look on the report here, he will find six buildings now nearing completion. In this bill we carry the last item of appropriation to complete the six buildings. I will further state that never yet have I seen appropriations made by Congress for the District that the District was not as prompt as possible in spending the money. I believe they have spent everything we appropriate for them just as rapidly as possible, and I think the District Commissioners have done the very best they could to complete these school buildings at the earliest practical moment, but there have been many difficulties in the way. During the war they could not construct at all; since the war they have been hampered by the limitation put on in some of our appropriations, they not being large enough to let a contract, the best bids being above the limit of cost. The fluctuations in cost of material, labor, and so on, made any estimate unreliable and any limitation of the cost a mere guess.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman's construction of the difficulty is that, notwithstanding Congress had made the appropriations, conditions have developed that require a larger appropriation?

Mr. BUCHANAN. In some instances.

Mr. GARD. And therefore they have been compelled to defer from time to time——

Mr. BUCHANAN. Compelled to defer until Congress raises the limit of cost or the cost of material goes down or the cost of labor decreases so that the contractor could come within it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. And Congress has always promptly raised the limit of cost; in all instances we have always promptly raised the limit of cost.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. SNELL. I notice in the report the rate of taxation is fixed at 1.95, and there will be a deficit of $3,000,000 to provide for the funds of the District.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not a deficit.

Mr. SNELL. Lacking enough to pay the expenses?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There will be appropriations in favor of the District of Columbia in other bills—the sundry civil bill and other bills. I can give the gentleman the exact figures——

Mr. SNELL. Three million dollars is near enough.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is $3,382,943. That is aside from what is contained in this bill.

Mr. SNELL. Is there not some law which prohibits putting a taxation on the District of more than 2 per cent?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There certainly is on an appropriation bill——

Mr. SNELL. But is there some law somewhere that says we shall not levy a tax on the District of more than 2 per cent?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Until we changed it last year the maximum was 15 mills, and that was the case for many years. Last year we raised the maximum to 20 mills, and there it stands to-day. Now, they figure in the estimates this year they will use instead of 20 mills 1.95.

Mr. SNELL. If it is necessary to raise the money why should it not go to 2.29 and cover the whole amount? Is that the least amount of tax——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All the gentleman would have to do, or any man of the 435, would be to make a point of order that it was legislation and out it would go. We have been trying for years and finally succeeded in getting it raised from 15 mills to 20 mills, and we got that done last year.

Mr. SNELL. Does not the gentleman suppose it can be raised again so as to raise enough money to pay the proportionate share of the taxes?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not believe it can be done on an appropriation bill this year.

Mr. SNELL. Even with 2.29 they would be getting out with the payment of a less proportionate amount of taxes perhaps than people living in other cities of the same size and with the same conveniences.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. These are matters that have been discussed on this floor since I have been in Congress, for 18 or 20 years.

Mr. SNELL. Do you think it futile to try to do it any more?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think it would be useless to try it other than through the District legislative committee. I think there will be a fight, as there was two years ago on this little raise of 5 mills. I did not feel like doing it this year.

Mr. SNELL. What is the gentleman's idea of what ought to be done on that? Would the gentleman care to discuss it at this time?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would not care to do so.

Mr. SNELL. I am frank to say that they ought to pay all their bills.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman that at the present time the legislative committee of the District of Columbia has passed a bill on the subject of taxation, which is now pending in the Senate, and I think probably a conference has been requested. But that is not fixing any definite amount. The substance of it is that it taxes the residents of the District of Columbia a reasonably fair tax——

Mr. SNELL. That is my proposition.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Hold on. And whatever amount that raises, if the Congress wants to appropriate more to further and better improve the city of Washington, they can do it regardless of the amount, whether it is 20, 40, 60, or whatever it is. It would tax the residents of the District of Columbia a reasonable sum, and the amount beyond that, whatever it is, be made up by Congress. That bill is now in conference between the two Houses.

Mr. SNELL. That seems to be a fair and reasonable proposition. On what basis are the assessments made on a piece of property—what percentage of value?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is supposed to be made on a two-thirds basis.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman think they are somewhere near that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would dislike to express an opinion on that.

Mr. SNELL. I think it is pretty light even at two-thirds.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. LARSEN. I notice on page 3 of the bill you say:

Veterinary surgeon for all horses in the departments of the District of Columbia, $1,400.

How many horses does the District own?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think about 700 or 800.

Mr. LARSEN. Does this man give his entire time to that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not think he strains himself particularly.

Mr. LARSEN. What are these 800 horses doing?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They are doing all kinds of work that a horse ever did, but we are trying to reduce the horsepower of the District of Columbia as fast as we can and replace it with motor-drawn vehicles, and in every bill every year we are adding a few more motor-drawn vehicles to replace horse-drawn vehicles. We are doing it as rapidly as we can.

Mr. LARSEN. If you make that change, that would necessitate the employment of skilled mechanics to keep up that part of it. Is that correct?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think we have quite a number now. We have quite a number of motor machines also, you know.

Mr. LARSEN. The point I was getting at was whether or not the veterinary surgeon was needed in that department.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think so, when we have that number of horses.

I wish to say this, that here is a bill in which there are quite a number of thousands of employees in the District of Columbia—laborers, and so forth—and in this entire bill the new employments are as follows:

One clerk in the assessor's office, $1,200; one clerk in the collector's office, $1,400; one clerk in the auditor's office, $1,400; two attendants at the big Public Library, $900 each; and an allowance of $1,500 for temporary clerk hire in the license bureau.

That is the great extravagance we have gone into. I presume they needed many more additional, but we have granted them five or six clerks. And I think in another place over here we increased the list by three or four janitors because of the new school buildings that are going into operation. They had to have three or four additional janitors. So we put them in at the same price as we did the others. I hardly think that an extravagance in the number of employees.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will reserve the balance of my time. How much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 43 minutes.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is more than I anticipated.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] for an hour and a half.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not know that I will need that much time, but I want to say a word in answer to some criticism that I hear, not in justification of the committee, because it needs no justification, but in justification of the officers of the District government in reference to school buildings.

When the war broke out we had authorized all of the school buildings that had been requested by the school authorities. These school buildings were estimated for by the Supervising Architect and the money was appropriated by the Congress. However, before the law went into effect war broke out, and there were two reasons why these buildings could not be erected. First, there was the very sudden rise in the price of material and labor, which prevented the contracts being let at the figure fixed in the bill. At the next session of Congress the commissioners came back with the old amount unexpended—I mean by that, the amount that was first appropriated—and with a statement that these buildings could not be put up for less than a certain amount, and in each case the amount was either doubled or more than doubled in accordance with the bids which they had had. Again, the District Commissioners, in accordance with the law, advertised for bids, and they did not get a bid within double the amount that they formerly thought these buildings would cost. The second reason why your committee declined to appropriate any additional money for these buildings was for the reason that the war activities of the Government put an embargo on the use of the railroads in hauling material into the District of Columbia. Not only that, but labor was very scarce by reason of the fact that during the war all the available people, all the laboring men, were virtually taken out of the District of Columbia or used for military activities.

Many building operations were going on in the District of Columbia, but all of this building was for the War Department, for housing the various war activities. You will notice a number of buildings on the Mall and similar buildings in other parts of the city that consumed all labor in the District, and a private contractor could not have gotten this labor except that he was building for the War Department. Therefore the school-building situation, which is so much complained about, is neither the fault of Congress nor the fault of the District Commissioners.

Now, in this bill there has been carried as much money as the District Commissioners feel they can economically use during one year. You can not do it all in one year, frankly. If, when these buildings that are authorized in this bill are completed, they will use the portable buildings that are now in existence in the District, with the exception of the high schools, and if they will use these portable buildings in connection with the high schools, there will be ample floor space to accommodate the children.

You will recollect that when we found that we could not build the school buildings authorized the school board and the committee of Congress and the District Commissioners decided that the only thing that could be done was to build these portable buildings. Now we have them. My judgment is that these portable buildings are splendid school buildings, so far as the comfort of the children is concerned, so far as the heat and light are concerned, and while the æsthetic feelings of some people may be somewhat offended by the presence of one of these portable buildings, you will admit, if you look at it, that it is not an unsightly thing, and it will take care of the congested situation until this District can have the labor and the material to construct permanent buildings.

I think this statement is necessary, because Congress has been totally misinformed by the press, totally misinformed by propaganda that has been going on, and I imagine that some of the criticisms, maybe, of the chairman of this committee and of the subcommittee have been founded on that propaganda. But I want to say that the criticism is totally unfounded and unjust and does not comport at all with the desire not only that the chairman of the committee has, but with the desire of the committee to provide ample school facilities for the District of Columbia.

One other question that I want to call to the attention of the House is this: Congress made permanent law in this bill the division of 60–40 in the appropriation of money out of the District revenues and the revenues of the Treasury. In my judgment, that proportion is too large now for the Treasury. I think it only takes a casual investigation of the tax rate in all the cities and towns of the United States, excluding, if you please, the State and county taxes, which are all included in one tax here, to confirm the accuracy of that statement, and I think it will be conclusively shown that by all odds the lowest tax rate of any constituency in America is now in the District of Columbia. They pay only 1.95 on a two-thirds valuation of the property. I do know that there are many misinformed Members of Congress who, by virtue of propaganda by those interested in real estate in the District of Columbia—they may be interested themselves in property in the District of Columbia—take a different view, because, as was stated in the newspapers some years ago:

We find—

that a man changes his mental attitude toward the treatment that the District is entitled to as a Member of Congress the moment we can get a Member of Congress or a Senator to become an owner of real estate in the District of Columbia.

So when you find Members of Congress who feel that Congress is doing the District any injustice by virtue of this new arrangement, you will find either a man who has not made the investigation or a man who, if he knows, is interested in the matter perhaps from a selfish point of view. I do not mean that he is dishonest when he does it. It is human nature.

Now, in my judgment, this may seem a radical statement, but after some years of experience here I feel that every man who comes from a district in the United States representing the people, as long as any arrangement exists whereby the Federal Treasury could contribute to the expenses of this local government, should avoid the very delicate suspicion that might lie at his door by owning any property in the District of Columbia if he acquires it after he is elected to Congress. I do not believe that men that might own property in the District of Columbia are in the least dishonest, but human nature is weak the world over, however strong a man may be.

Now, after a number of years of investigation I have formed a definite opinion on this subject, as has also every man who has served these committees who has gone into the matter, even including the commission that was appointed for the purpose of recommending a readjustment of this tax. When Mr. Page was chairman of this committee and Mr. DAVIS was ranking member of the minority you will recall that we brought in a provision to change that arbitrary half and half. It was assailed on the floor of the House, but after several debates finally it was passed not only by two-thirds, but by so many more than two-thirds that the opposition could not even get a roll call in the House. Then the gentleman from Alabama, Mr. UNDERWOOD, was a Member of the House, and the Democratic leader of the House. When the matter came back from the Senate he offered, as you will recall, an amendment to create a commission of three Members from the House and three from the Senate to investigate the whole matter.

Mr. DAVIS was then the ranking Republican, Mr. Page was chairman of the subcommittee at that time, and I was the ranking member of that side of the committee, and we three were on the conference. We felt very much outraged that the Speaker should have appointed three men on the part of the House all of whom had voted regularly and consistently against the provision that we had put in. They had voted consistently for the half-and-half plan. All of those gentlemen are Members of this Congress now except Mr. Cooper, of Wisconsin, and he comes back in the next Congress, as I understand. But Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY, of Illinois, and Judge GARD, of Ohio, were members of that commission. After several months' session they brought back a report, very much to the delight of those of us who had been against the arbitrary half and half, and unanimously reported to change it—not only the three Senators who had always been against our proposition but also these three gentleman appointed by the Speaker of this House, who were men of intellectual integrity. Although we felt that we ought to have had one man on it at that time who agreed with us, yet the fact that the Speaker had appointed them, and all three had been against us, we realized that the Speaker had made no mistake in the appointment, because it only strengthened the position that we had always taken that the Treasury of the United States was paying too much of the expenses of the District of Columbia. Now, notwithstanding that fact, another body declined to yield, and for that reason we put the matter on the appropration bill in order to get it before the Congress. The conferees stood pat on the proposition, and eventually we got it effected at 60–40. That 60–40 is carried in this bill, and in my judgment that proportion is greater than the Treasury of the United States ought to pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did not the joint commission find against you on the question whether or not the taxable property in this District was paying a tax comparable to that in other cities?

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They did.

Mr. SISSON. I do not think so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But they reported that there is no reason any further for the half-and-half system.

Mr. SISSON. None in the world for the half and half. I ask any gentleman who has investigated it without having any interest in the District of Columbia, so that he can bring to bear upon it a fair, free, and open mind. I ask him to investigate the taxes in Chicago, in New York, in Cleveland, in Los Angeles, in San Francisco, in Louisville, in Memphis, Tenn., in New Orleans, in the villages of this Nation, including the State and county taxes, and he will be ashamed of himself if he shall say that the people of this District are being taxed in accordance with what the people are paying everywhere else. The man does not live who can investigate this matter with intellectual integrity and say that any injustice is being done the people of the District of Columbia. I would be just as far from doing these people any injustice as any man on earth. Now they are clamoring for school buildings. They are clamoring for great improvements and I am willing that they should have them; but when they shall get these enormous improvements for which other cities pledge themselves and their posterity, the people of the District ought to be willing to do the same thing. I would put a reasonable tax upon the people of the District of Columbia, no more and no less, and in order that it might be absolutely fair I would make it less than the average paid in other cities. Then if this Congress wants to appropriate more money for the beautification of the Capital, let it go as a contribution from Congress toward the beautification of the Capital in which the people of the District of Columbia have nothing but an indirect interest. I am tired of the idea that the people of the District of Columbia are contributing something to the beautification of the Capital. They ought not to do it as such. They ought to pay it as citizens, for what they get.

Mr. SNELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SNELL. Has the gentleman made any investigation in regard to the valuation put on this property, whether it is two-thirds or less than two-thirds of the actual value?

Mr. SISSON. I investigated that matter. Not this year, but if the gentleman will recall, I got reports from sixty-odd cities as to the rule of assessment. Now, of course, you can not tell with absolute certainty whether or not the law is literally carried out in any city, as to whether or not the assessment is in accordance with the law. So the only true test is to ascertain if you can what a man pays for property, the amount of money invested in this city and the amount of money invested elsewhere, and then take that investment as to the basis of taxation, as to the amount paid per hundred dollars in this city and in Chicago, or New York, or Cleveland, or other cities, and the amount paid on a like investment in this city. I made inquiries of various and sundry people who were frank and fair, who told me what they had invested here. The chairman of this committee has some personal knowledge of this matter. But I asked other gentlemen, friends of mine who had property investments here and property investments in other cities. One gentleman, whose name I withhold because of the fact that the conversation was a private one—I could mention many others—bought a house and lot here in which he had invested a certain amount of money. He showed me his tax receipts. He was rather abusive. I said, "Are you paying too much taxes here?" He said, "No; but at home on the same investment, dollar for dollar, I pay more than three times as much taxes as I do on my property here, and it is an outrage, because I do not pay what I ought to pay here."

Mr. SNELL. How does the rent on property here compare to the rent on property at home, compared to the taxation?

Mr. SISSON. If you take the present rental values I do not believe there is a place in the world, unless it is in the congested business districts of cities like New York, where the rents on residential apartment houses are as high as they are in the city of Washington.

Mr. SNELL. Is there not some way we can arrange the assessment so that they shall bear the same relation to rentals that assessments in other cities bear to rentals?

Mr. SISSON. If you can do it, I think that is the fairest way to assess property. Some of the cities, in reference to the rate of taxation, have taken into consideration the rental value of property for fixing the assessment.

Mr. SNELL. That is the way they do in New York City.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, that sort of legislation could not be handled in an appropriation bill. This item was handled in the appropriation bill because it came within the Holman rule as a reduction of expenditures out of the Treasury. I understand the chairman of the legislative committee is at work on that proposition.

Mr. SNELL. One of the reasons that my landlord gave for increasing the rent was on account of the increased taxation, and I wondered if the taxation increased in proportion to the increase of the rent.

Mr. SISSON. If the gentleman's landlord pays taxes in proportion to the tax he pays here and what other people would pay on like property situated in other States, the gentleman would get his rent for about one-half of what he gets it now.

Now, gentlemen, I thought this much ought to be said, first, in justification of the committee in reference to the school facilities in the city of Washington, and, secondly, in reference to some criticism that has been made in the press about the hardships on the people of the District of Columbia.

I want to say in conclusion that I do not know that all of the cities in all of the States tax choses in action, but I do know that the overwhelming majority of them do. This condition prevails in the District of Columbia, which is lamentable. There are many men who come to the District of Columbia who have large fortunes in choses in action, intangible property, because, as one man told me, by living at home he would have to pay 3 per cent on his choses in action and that he investigated the various cities and found that he could come to Washington, build him a home, pay his entire family expenses, and, in addition, save many thousand dollars in the form of taxes on his personal estate. There have been a number of people who, to evade taxes at home, come to the city of Washington and escape the payment of taxes with the exception of three-tenths of 1 per cent, which is the rate of taxation here.

Now, a great deal of it does not find its way to the light, even upon the payment of three-tenths of 1 per cent. It has been suggested by one member of the subcommittee, and I agree with him, that in reference to these needed improvements that if the Congress desired to do so we might meet these additional improvements alone by putting a reasonable tax on intangible property. I do not want the National Capital to longer labor under the imputation of being, with the consent of Congress, the haven of the tax dodger. I think it is doing the community and the people at home a great injustice.

Of course, the question of taxation is a vexatious one and it requires a great deal of painstaking, good judgment, and labor to adjust it fairly. I have never known any tax law that was not in some features unpleasant and sometimes working a hardship, but that is true in all laws that you pass. I do feel that a great deal can be done in the way of adjusting the relations between the District and the Federal Treasury.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. I will.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. Has the gentleman any information as to the total value of intangible property held in the city of Washington?

Mr. SISSON. It would be largely a guess, but my recollection is that it is somewhat over $300,000,000.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I can give the gentleman the figures: Real estate, $461,660,000; personal property, $77,000,000—that is, visible personal property; intangible property, $343,300,000, making a total of $881,960,000.

Mr. SISSON. My recollection was approximately correct.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. How did the gentleman secure his information in regard to the amount of intangible property?

Mr. SISSON. There is already a tax of three-tenths of 1 per cent levied on intangible property. That is a new departure, but the rate on intangible property is not high enough. Those of us who feel that intangible property ought to be taxed think that 1.95 or 2 per cent is approximately which the owner of the little home pays, while the owner of the vast fortune in intangible property pays only three-tenths of 1 per cent is an inequity.

Mr. FAIRFIELD. I think the gentleman is absolutely right, and it was his statement in regard to intangible property that interested me. As a matter of fact, if 1 per cent was put on intangible property it would materially take care of the improvements which the public and the District demand.

Mr. SISSON. If you will add seven-tenths of 1 per cent to the intangible property tax, which would make it 1 per cent in the District of Columbia, that increase in a few years would take care of every reasonable need of the District of Columbia without going into the Federal Treasury for a dollar.

Mr. LARSEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. LARSEN. What is the distinction between personal and intangible property?

Mr. SISSON. Personal property is made up of stocks, goods, furniture in homes, things of that kind which are visible. Intangible property is known in the States as choses in action, like notes, bonds, and moneys in the bank, certificates of stock, certificates of deposit in various trust companies, and so forth. In other words, choses in action in a broad sense about covers what is known in the District as intangible personal property.

Mr. LARSEN. Then, why should not it be taxed as well as any other property, and even taxed higher?

Mr. SISSON. I do not know about its being taxed higher, but I think that sometimes it is taxed too high, and if it is taxed too high you might run the deposits out of one city into another. I do not believe that you can tax intangible property as high as you are compelled to tax visible property and real estate. As a matter of absolute, eternal fairness, as absolute equity and justice, of course it ought to be taxed exactly alike, but as a practical proposition, if you tax money in the bank too much, you drive it out of the bank and into some other State, you drive it into hiding, and in taxation you have to make some distinction between money in bank and personal property.

Mr. WILLIAMS. One of the difficulties is as to the valuation. When a tax is levied on intangibles, it is on the actual value of the property, and often in the assessment of visible personal property the rate is fixed on a very small percentage of the actual value.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, that can be taken care of by the percentage of value, but still I appreciate the difficulty the gentleman has in mind. For example, here is a man who has $10,000 of money in bank on deposit. His neighbor does not have $10,000 in money in the bank, but he has a house that he rents which is worth $10,000. Like other people, his property may be assessed actually at $5,000, and he then would pay half the taxes that the man with $10,000 in cash would pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would be equitable and fair to have the rate on intangible and tangible property the same, if the basis of valuation were the same.

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the difficulties that confront the District are the same difficulties that confront every city and county and State. However, we must not avoid doing our duty and doing the right thing, because this is a matter that usually presents difficulties. These things will have to be worked out by the officers that shall administer the law, but we have made the most just and the fairest arrangement that it is possible for us to make and have left the details to be worked out.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. In the State of New York we had these same difficulties endeavoring to tax intangibles. It was solved by the method of income tax. It occurs to me that in the District of Columbia, it being an entity, the same as a State, the proper way to get taxation on all intangibles is by an income tax. That same thing is true not only as to personal property of individuals, but as to the personal property of corporations. We have done away in the State of New York and in the municipalities of New York with all of these difficulties about getting a tax from intangibles.

Mr. SISSON. I think perhaps that with proper inquisitorial powers as to incomes, the income tax is one of the fairest. Property that does not bring in income pays no tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has again expired. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, under our practice we are obliged to occupy time devoted to some committee, on Appropriations ordinarily, in order to speak on any subject that may be of importance, and that is my excuse for discussing to-day briefly the Philippine Islands. Communications have been given to the press, and people have assumed to speak for the party that recently went over to the Philippine Islands, and have expressed themselves so forcibly and contrary to my own opinion that I believe it is due to myself and to others who feel as I do to have ourselves understood on this subject. I do this without assuming to speak for anyone else.

Mr. Chairman, why has not the American Congress granted to the Philippine Islands their independence? The question has been asked repeatedly by the Filipinos, and exhibits have been filed wherein they furnish evidence that these islands, 10,000 miles away from our seat of government, with different interests, ambitions, and racial conditions, have made the most wonderful development in all history, entitling them to a fulfillment of our pledge according to their claims.

The Philippines have 10,500,000 inhabitants in round numbers, 91 per cent of whom are classed as Christians, with a complete form of stable government, maintained by officials selected at popular elections, by a people 70 per cent of whom are able to read or write, according to accepted literacy tests.

Certain influences are alleged to be in opposition to a grant of independence guaranteed by Congress, and in the brief time assigned me I desire to discuss claims made by the Filipinos for independence and our own duty as I see it.

Let me say at the outset I am not speaking at the request, direct or indirect, of the Filipinos, but from my standpoint and on my own responsibility as a Member of Congress, a former member of the Insular Affairs Committee, and based on such information as I have gained from a study of conditions after a visit to the islands in 1920.

Over 20 years ago, in 1898, Admiral Dewey sailed into Manila Bay and destroyed the Spanish fleet. Two years before that event the Filipinos, under Aguinaldo and other leaders, wrested a large part of the Philippines from Spanish rule in their fight for independence, but on pledges of reform by the Spaniards these leaders consented to await developments.

The promised reforms by Spain were not realized and Aguinaldo returned to the islands in 1898, hastily raised an army of 25,000 poorly armed men, but with this force he removed the last vestige of Spanish control in the islands outside Manila. Cooperating with Dewey's ships in the bay, he helped bottle up 12,000 Spanish soldiers in the old city until they finally surrendered. Dewey, Funston, and other American officers give due credit for that aid, and in his statement before the Senate committee in 1912 Dewey said of Aguinaldo's force of 25,000 men, "They could have had any number of men; it was just a question of arming them. They could have had the whole population."

I do not intend to offer any extended argument of our purposes then as a Government toward the Philippines or their understanding on the subject, because that is all merged in recent legislative and administrative declarations, but it is proper to refer briefly to conditions under which we happened to occupy the Philippines.

WHY WE OCCUPIED THE PHILIPPINES.

When the United States announced to the world its purpose in the name of humanity of destroying Spanish rule in Cuba all doubt was removed as to our intentions by specific announcement in the declaration of war:

That the United States hereby disclaims any disposition or intention to exercise sovereignty, jurisdiction, or control over said island (Cuba), except for the pacification thereof, and asserts its determination when that is accomplished to leave the government and control to its people.

After that frank declaration our professions of idealism and honesty of purpose would be discredited to say that the United States as a heaven-sent missionary would free the bonds of Cuba with one hand, while fastening our own government onto the Philippines with the other.

We could never intend to hold the 10,500,000 Filipinos, with their 114,400 square miles of territory, while liberating 2,600,000 Cubans, with only 44,164 miles. In that declaration of war we might have written with equal frankness and certainty the words "Philippines and Cuba," so far as our intentions were concerned.

Comparing these two peoples at the time of the Spanish War, Admiral Dewey said in a cablegram June 23, 1898:

In my opinion these people (Filipinos) are superior in intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both.

In his testimony subsequently before the Senate committee Admiral Dewey explained his cablegram by saying:

I wrote that because I saw in the newspapers that Congress contemplated giving the Cubans independence.

On August 29, 1898, Dewey wrote President McKinley:

In a telegram sent the department on June 23 I expressed the opinion that "these people (Filipinos) are far superior in their intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races." Further intercourse with them has confirmed me in this opinion.

Two years afterwards, in 1900, or 20 years ago, the organization of the Republic of Cuba was begun and completed by May, 1902, when permanent military occupation by the United States ceased.

Mr. Chairman, after over 20 years we are now found apologizing, excusing, and avoiding our promise in the case of the Philippines, although high authority asserts the superiority of the Filipinos far back in 1898, while their remarkable progress since that date is known to the civilized world.

On June 18, 1898, about the date of Dewey's first telegram, Aguinaldo issued a formal declaration of independence for his people, which was enlarged on June 23, a few days later, based on the possibility of the American squadron returning to America. It was a notice to Spain and to the world of Filipino aspirations voiced by Rizal, Aguinaldo, and other leaders.

Gen. Anderson, who was placed in control of the American forces in 1898, wrote The Adjutant General of the Army at Washington:

They (the Filipinos) are not ignorant, savage tribes, but have a civilization of their own, and although insignificant in appearance, are hard fighters, and for a tropical people they are industrious.

Judge Blount, an able writer, six years in the Philippines, two years as an officer during the insurgent rebellion and four as a civil judge, says of Aguinaldo and his insurgent government at that time:

The more you know of the educated, patriotic Filipino the more certain you become that the (Aguinaldo) government we destroyed in 1898 would have worked quite as well as most any of the republics now in operation between the Rio Grande and Patagonia.

About that same period John Barrett said before the Shanghai Chamber of Commerce on January 12, 1899:

Aguinaldo has organized a government which has practically been administering the affairs of the great island of Luzon (about the population and area of Ireland) since the American occupation of Manila, which is certainly better than the former administration; he has a properly constituted cabinet and congress, the members of which compare favorably with Japanese statesmen.

That estimate, offered 21 years ago to the most influential business organization of the Orient by an acknowledged authority, with other corroborating statements I have quoted, gives a fair understanding of the capacity of the Filipinos for self-government before any aid was given them by the United States.

This remarkable people has arisen rapidly in the scale of education, industry, and general enlightenment during the 21 years that have elapsed, and abundant data shows that many Filipinos are far more enlightened and capable than self-satisfied critics who do not understand or comprehend how their own Government functions or what it stands for.

OUR PURPOSE THEN AND NOW.

Possibly the best and briefest declaration of their aspirations and his own judgment was given by President Schurman, of Cornell University, who headed the first Philippine Commission. In an address to the university, January 11, 1902, about 19 years ago, he said:

Any decent kind of government of Filipinos by Filipinos is better than the best possible government of Filipinos by Americans.

In President McKinley's message to Congress in 1899 he said:

We must make these people, whom Providence has brought within our jurisdiction, feel that it is their liberty and not our power, their welfare and not our gain, we are seeking to enhance.

Anticipating the secret power of human greed, he sought to forestall hairsplitting arguments in the future by saying further:

The Philippines are ours not to exploit, but to develop, to civilize, to educate, to train in the science of self-government. This is the path of duty, and we must follow or be recreant to a mighty trust committed to us.

President McKinley declared in effect that if we sought to hold or exploit the Philippines we would be recreant to a mighty trust committed to us by Providence. This sentiment he reiterated in various State papers.

To the same effect ex-President Taft, while civil governor of the islands, answered the pugnacious American papers in the Philippines that then as now refused to be reconciled. December 17, 1903, he said:

Some of our young lions of the local press have spoken of the "childish slogan," "the Philippines for the Filipinos." It is unnecessary to comment on the adjective used, but it is sufficient to say that, whether childish or not, the principle makes up the web and woof of the policy of the United States with respect to these islands, as it has been authoritatively declared by two Presidents of the United States—for President Roosevelt has followed sedulously the policy of President McKinley—and, by the interpretation of the supreme popular will, the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the "young lions," that represent six thousand and odd Americans—men, women, and children—in the Philippines to-day, are equally noisy, notwithstanding McKinley, Roosevelt, Taft, and the American Congress have spoken definitely on the subject. A leading Senator, in debate in 1916 on the Jones bill, expressed the situation in the islands as it appealed to him when he declared, "We ought to get the carpetbaggers out," and for fear his designation might be indefinite he referred in debate to those who would exploit the islands as "speculators, financial buccaneers, and commercial bandits." The sentiment of President McKinley is more just and all sufficient when he says we will be recreant to a great trust if we exploit these islands.

In 1907 Governor General Taft said to the Philippine Assembly:

Our jurisdiction and control will finally end in the islands when they are capable of self-government.

And again, as Secretary of War, he said:

Our jurisdiction is until ultimate independence is granted.

ROOSEVELT'S JUDGMENT.

Ex-President Roosevelt wrote a carefully prepared press article in 1915, shortly before the Jones law was passed, saying:

If we act so that the natives understand us to have made a definite promise, then we should live up to that promise. The Philippines, from a military standpoint, are a source of weakness to us. The present administration has promised explicitly to let them go, and by its action has rendered it difficult to hold them against any serious foreign foe. These being the circumstances, the islands should at an early moment be given their independence, without any guaranty whatever by us and without our retaining any foothold in them.

Theodore Roosevelt, a certain President in 1921 had he lived, a military and naval authority, and a foremost American, expressed his conviction that the islands should be given their independence at "an early moment." Had he lived no doubt exists that he would have carried into effect "at an early moment" his convictions expressed in 1915.

It has been alleged that self-interest and a spirit of pettifogging have actuated those who would play the Philippines as a pawn in politics. Whatever the facts the American Congress, in 1916, when enacting the Jones law containing a large measure of self-government to the Philippines, gave definite pledge of independence to the Philippines. This was in confirmation of many assurances given in the name of the American people, which had been accepted at 100 per cent by the Filipinos and by the world.

In conformity with that purpose a Republican Congress passed the Jones law, which was approved by the President. Little opposition occurred in either House or Senate, and to the lasting honor and credit of the Congress it merged a moral obligation into the nearest approach to a legal declaration that one Congress can make for another in the following language, that appears in the Jones law passed nearly five years ago:

It is, as it has always been, the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty over the Philippine Islands and to recognize their independence as soon as a stable government can be established therein.

In the recent Democratic platform of 1920 appears this pledge:

We favor the granting of independence without unnecessary delay to the 10,500,000 inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

STABILITY ESTABLISHED.

This pronouncement is in harmony with the declaration of Roosevelt, that independence be granted "at an early moment," and with the specific promise of the American Congress on the subject, whenever a "stable government" has been established. President Wilson, in his message to Congress December 7, 1920, declared a stable government now exists, when he said:

Allow me to call your attention to the fact that the people of the Philippine Islands have succeeded in maintaining a stable government since the last action of the Congress in their behalf, and have thus fulfilled the condition set by the Congress as precedent to a consideration of granting independence to the islands. I respectfully submit that this condition precedent having been fulfilled, it is now our liberty and our duty to keep our promise to the people of those islands by granting them the independence which they so honorably covet.

Mr. Chairman, that promise will be kept. The only question now fair for discussion is whether or not the Philippines have established a "stable government," as is specifically declared by President Wilson. If so, "the purpose of the people of the United States to withdraw their sovereignty and to recognize their independence" has arrived, and in public honesty and national good faith we should without further delay or excuses keep our agreement.

In 1919 the Philippine mission, composed of members of all political parties of the islands, presented to Congress in person at Washington a memorial for independence passed by the Philippine Legislature, from which I quote the concluding paragraph because of the splendid sentiment therein expressed, which is as follows:

The Filipinos will thus have a better opportunity to demonstrate how deeply rooted is their gratitude for America when, after her voluntary withdrawal from these islands, we preserve here the immortal spirit of her democratic institutions, and associate with her in her future enterprises of justice and peace, in carrying to the darkest corners of the earth, which lack happiness because their people do not control their own destinies, the quickening flame of justice, democracy, and liberty.

No disagreement is claimed to exist in the islands among the Filipinos over their desire for independence. While a few American civilians and Army and naval officers in the islands have objected to the policy set forth by the different American Executives and other high officials and by Congress, the Filipinos, who outnumber the civilian Americans fifteen hundred to one, in round numbers, have joined unanimously in their independence memorial to Congress. By legislative action which I can not take space to quote the Philippine Assembly and Philippine officials year after year during the past 12 years have memorialized or expressed their nation-wide appeal for independence. On this one question, vital and of supreme importance to them, the Filipinos appear to be remarkably united.

Ignoring the contention of those who say the "Filipinos do not know what they want," I pass over this expression of colossal ignorance or purpose to misrepresent and refer to the unanimous action of those most vitally affected in order to show there is no such division over independence as occurs in Ireland, on which subject one branch of the American Congress has spoken unanimously.

A GOVERNMENT OF FILIPINOS BY FILIPINOS.

To use the comprehensive statement of President Schurman, of the Philippine Commission, back in 1902, "Any decent kind of government of Filipinos by Filipinos is better than the best possible government of Filipinos by Americans."

In other words, no government is good enough or wise enough to rule another people against their will, and 10,000 miles distance from our seat of government does not lessen the character of the Philippine task.

The Philippines have a government that has existed in substantial form since Dewey and Barrett said in 1898 and 1899 the Filipinos were superior to Cubans for self-government and equal to Japanese statesmen in ability. We have pledged our faith repeatedly since the declaration of war with Spain, down to the passage of the Jones law, that we will give the Philippines a government of their choice.

Congress, representing the voice of the United States, has promised to release all claims of sovereignty to the Philippine Islands and grant unrestricted independence when a "stable government" has been established. What is a "stable government"?

For many years our own Government was unstable compared with some European monarchies, although its foundation stones of liberty and equal justice to all enabled it to outlive the storms of 1776 and 1812 and the great Civil War. What government of to-day is to be the measure for the Philippines?

English, French, and Italian ministries have been overturned politically several times during the last war. In Japan, Greece, and other Governments joined with the Allies recent changes in ministries have frequently been accompanied by violence or rioting. Russia, Germany, Austria, and Turkey have lost all semblance of the governments that existed four years ago. Practically every nation of importance, including our own, in the short space of eight years will have changed every department of government politically and in its policies. Governments from the Rio Grande to Patagonia, including the islands of the Caribbean Sea, are no guide when Judge Blount declares the government of Aguinaldo which we destroyed far back in 1898 was superior to many of these governments 20 years ago. What, then, is specific evidence of stability?

In every department of government the Filipino people have progressed marvelously since 1898, and particularly during the past four years since the passage of the Jones law, which gives them an autonomous form of government.

The government of the Philippines, including its administrative officers, its senate, assembly, municipal, judiciary, educational, and fiscal departments, is all practically in the hands of Filipino officials who have shown by years of service that they are in every way capable of managing their own affairs. Educationally their progress has been rarely, if ever, equaled.

Mr. Chairman, before the Pilgrim fathers landed at Plymouth Rock the Santo Tomas University at Manila in the sixteenth century was graduating the Filipino students in the arts and sciences. When Dewey sailed into Manila Bay 2,100 private schools existed in the islands. To-day over 6,500 schools and colleges are instructing the Filipinos, young and old, taught by over 17,000 Filipino teachers and about 1,000 other teachers, one-half of whom are Americans. A school enrollment of 884,000 without any compulsory attendance laws carries its own argument of the extent of its educational progress, which includes the English language in every school.

Several months ago a party of 20 Senators and Representatives unofficially visited the islands, and while there came in contact with hundreds of Filipinos in all walks of life. Of the congressional party not one, so far as I observed, could talk either the Spanish or Filipino languages and presumably less than a dozen Members of the American Congress can speak either language. Practically all Filipinos we met could speak the Spanish and Filipino languages, and many of the business men and officials could speak English fluently.

Apart from Philippine school students, many native-born Filipinos in the islands are graduates of Yale, Harvard, Wisconsin, Indiana, and other American universities, and others have had like opportunities in English, Spanish, and different European institutions. It is a rash man who criticizes the widespread intelligence, culture, and educational advancement of these people.

PHILIPPINES RANK HIGH IN EDUCATION.

A standard of comparative illiteracy may be equally interesting. Practically every Government of South America and Central America, from Mexico with 70.7 per cent; Costa Rica, 80.2 per cent; and Guatamala, 92.7 per cent, down to Argentina, 54 per cent; Colombia, 73 per cent; Bolivia, 82.9 per cent; and Brazil, 85.2 per cent illiteracy, ranks far below the educational standards of the Philippines, which, based on the recent census, are reported at only 30 per cent illiteracy, a striking reduction from 55 per cent in 1910. Even Greece with 57.2 per cent; Spain, 58.7 per cent; Bulgaria, 65.5 per cent; Portugal, 68.9 per cent; Russia, 69 per cent; Siberia, 78.9 per cent, are far below the standard now reached by the Filipinos.

During the recent war Secretary Lane, in his report to the President, said of the pick of America's finest, her selected soldiers, 25 per cent of the 1,600,000 between 21 and 31 years of age who were first drafted into the Army could not read or write our language.

While it may shock our own national self-esteem in this connection, our official census statistics show that after the Philippines were occupied by American troops 12 of our States, or one-quarter of the total number, reported between 30 to 40 per cent illiteracy, or in several of our own States lower than in the Philippines to-day. This proportion has since been materially reduced, but if our Government, after over a century of enlightenment, had made such slow progress by 1900, results as announced in the Philippines have been marvelous.

HOME OWNERS, AGRICULTURISTS, AND TRADESMEN.

Stability of any government largely rests in the contentment of its people, industrially as well as politically—in their ability to maintain themselves independently. Restlessness throughout the world, causing Russia's overthrow and shaking other Governments to their foundations, is caused primarily by the wide gulf that separates classes economically dependent on each other.

In the United States less than one-half of our people own their homes, and less than one-quarter are directly engaged in farming. I believe the latter estimate is conservative, based on approximately 6,500,000 farms.

In the Philippines 1,955,276 farms are owned by 1,946,579 Filipinos, or less than one half of 1 per cent (0.9697) are owned by all other people combined; and, figuring the conservative figure of four to a family, nearly 80 per cent of the total Filipino population is engaged in farming, with farms averaging approximately 5 acres in size. Of the 1,955,276 Philippine farms only 26,612, or less than 1½ per cent, were mortgaged, whereas farm mortgages in this country cover about 40 per cent of our farms in North Central States in 1910 and an average exists throughout the country of over 30 per cent, which is a further occasion for anxiety and unrest at home.

Ninety per cent of the Filipinos own their own homes in the cities, or an average of over 95 per cent in country and city, because only a small fraction, less than 5 per cent, live in the cities.

As a self-reliant, home-owning people, the Filipinos are "stabilized." Other industries in the Philippines, according to the recent census, include 8,354 manufacturing establishments, with a capital investment of $111,236,000 and an annual production of $178,047,000. An analysis of these figures has been made by Philippine officials, showing the cost of production, average profits, amounts paid laborers and in salaries, all carried out to a surprising degree of detail.

Mr. Chairman, long before America knew of the Philippines, and presumably centuries before Spain occupied the islands, the much-advertised Igorrotes were surpassing the world in their knowledge and application of irrigation. In the subprovince of Ifugao 12,000 miles of walls, 8 feet in height, long enough to reach nearly halfway around the world, rise like giant steps up the sides of steep mountain canyons to a total height of 3,000 feet or more—a colossal industrial and engineering accomplishment that, in view of comparative conditions, dwarfs our own vaunted irrigation schemes. The pyramids of Cheops or the tallest skyscraper in the world are insignificant in size or achievement compared with this great food-producing monument constructed by a remarkable people, whose Igorot descendants to-day are graduated from Rush Medical, Johns Hopkins, and other leading American institutions of learning.

Foreign trade reaching $250,000,000 annually, 600 miles of railways (Government owned), and 7,000 miles of good highways indicate convenience of intercourse when it is remembered that a large part of the commerce and business must be carried on among the different islands by thousands of boats.

Practically the entire government of the islands is now in the hands of the Filipinos, duly elected by Filipinos. An annual deficit existing in the Philippine treasury up to 1913 has been wiped out under their modern budget law, together with expenditures totaling over $38,000,000 in 1919, including a portion of the $15,000,000 special educational appropriation, leaving a cash balance in the treasury at the end of 1919 of $13,500,000, or a clear surplus, after deducting all outstanding charges against the treasury, of over $6,000,000.

FILIPINOS PAY ALL THEIR OWN GOVERNMENTAL EXPENSES.

Every salary and all governmental expenses, from Governor General down to that of the lowest public officer, are paid by the Filipinos. Our own Government does not pay one dollar. All we do is to foist a high-salaried political appointee on the islands, whose sumptuous court and palatial quarters rival that of the Sultan of Turkey—all paid for by the Filipinos.

It may seem strange for us to saddle this uninvited guest onto the Filipino treasury and the Filipino people, but it gives the President of the United States a rare plum, drawing down an $18,000 annual salary, a real palace, and other side perquisites that might make any plum recipient worried over the danger of a "Jap menace" and of general "instability" of governments—so long as the job lasts.

However, it can be said that Governor General Harrison has just reported to President Wilson on the Philippines that—

> The stable government stated as a prerequisite for independence has already been established in the Philippines—and he recommends that independence now be granted.

A declaration against interest generally is given high value in law and it may safely be accepted in Philippine affairs, particularly as President Wilson has made the same announcement to the country.

Modern hospitals, strictly enforced health regulations, a strong practically universal religious training, a law-abiding disposition on the part of the people, together with thousands of native constabulary and efficient police, all contribute toward the absence of riots and to obedience of law found among this people.

PHILIPPINE LOYALTY.

During the recent war, although agitators from abroad sought to stir up anti-American sentiment and provoke revolution, the Filipinos were loyal in their support of this country. They raised 25,000 troops for home and overseas use, thereby releasing 10,000 American soldiers in the Philippines who left for Europe and Siberia. The islands raised more than their quota of Liberty bonds and came through the war period without a single disturbance, evidencing their stability and singleness of purpose, under unexpected and trying conditions.

Governor General Harrison, appointed by President Wilson and serving as nominal chief officer of the islands under the Jones law, says:

> Native Filipinos are to-day governing 1,000 municipalities and 42 Provinces economically, efficiently, and for the good of the entire people.

Again he says in 1919:

> The Philippines are away ahead of the United States in successful Government ownership and operation of public utilities. The Government took hold of the steam railways and made them pay a profit of 1,000,000 pesos ($500,000) a year more than under private ownership. It took hold of the highways, and we have 7,000 miles of the best macadamized roads in the world. The Manila city government is about to take over the street railways and the gas and electric plants, while the Territorial government is arranging for ownership and control of the coal supply.

Those familiar with the spineless handling by Congress of the unbusinesslike Washington City street railway system that perpetrates legalized robbery on the one hand to make dividends on watered stock on the other can determine which Government is most in need of guardianship on this point.

A pen picture of a legislative body not taken from the gallery of the American Congress is afforded by Dr. Heiser, director of public health in the Philippines, who calls the Philippine assembly "a crackerjack." He continues:

> Their capacity for self-government is so crude, as yet the members have not learned to read newspapers while a colleague whose seat is next to theirs is addressing the house, nor do they keep up such a buzz of conversation that the man who has the floor can not hear himself talk. They listen to the program of public business.

Volumes have been written by unprejudiced Americans who bear testimony to the Filipinos' capacity and present right for self-government. Dewey, Anderson, Blount, Barrett, all speak of the Filipinos' capacity for self-government before the American occupation in 1898. For over 20 years the islands have participated in some form of home government and now practically conduct all their own affairs, as has been stated, with slight supervision by our own Government, but the same conditions that made English tea more palatable at the bottom of Boston Harbor than in the stomachs of the colonists still exists with any foreign Government's supervision of another people.

ARMY OFFICERS AND THE PHILIPPINES.

What of opinions held by the Army and naval officials in the Philippines? No Army of occupation or Government voluntarily relinquishes its hold or dominion over a "subject race." In fact, our own Government was the last in the world to grant complete emancipation within its own borders. From the time of Alexander to Napoleon and on down to the Kaiser's power in our day and age military officers the world over are trained to command others. From the day he gives first orders to the plebe at the academy down to final retirement by this Government the gulf between the civilian or enlisted man and shoulder straps is generally wide. What wonder that the opinions of officers small and large are colored by life-long training, or that, due to habit, such opinions ordinarily agree with superiors in matters of national policy. A different social life, which often assumes individual and racial superiority, may also be an important factor, but the policy of "findings is keepings" is one hard to avoid by nations as well as individuals and explains the background for military opinions not ordinarily affected by national pledges, governmental responsibility, or exact justice.

AMERICAN CIVILIANS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Other objections have been offered, and their character and the self-interest of those offering them may be briefly discussed. Less than 7,000 Americans live in the islands out of 10,500,000 people, or less than 1 American to every 1,500 people. These Americans settled in the islands with full knowledge of their status, and have received equally fair treatment and consideration personally and in a business way, so far as we know. They are in the same position as the Americans in Cuba or Chile or China, subject to the local government. I will not call them "carpetbaggers," "exploiters," and other harsh terms used in another legislative branch of this body, because I know that some of these Americans are upright, conscientious business men; and, again, leading American business men there have told me they are enjoying equal privileges with Filipinos, have found no evidence of graft or unfair treatment among local officials, and are not alarmed over independence.

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to comment upon the effort of less than a handful, comparatively, of Americans, who propagate misinformation in order to influence legislation for the islands and who urge that we repudiate a national pledge given to the world and to the islands of independence, or on the absurdity of American citizens settling in Cuba, China, Chile, or elsewhere in preference to their own country and then demanding Congress take over the country in which they prefer to live, because one out of every fifteen hundred of all the people is not contented in the land of his adoption.

As evidence of strong, personal bias, I read, about the time the Jones bill was under consideration, an extraordinary book against the Filipinos. It appears the writer of the book, a former American official appointed to the Philippines, had been charged in Congress in 1910 with gross irregularities, while acting as such official, relating to exploitation in the Philippines. Without discussing the merits of the charge or of subsequent happenings, I am informed the author of the book was and now is prominently connected with the largest oil factory in the Philippines, and is also an official in a large development company organized to exploit oil, live-stock transportation, etc., in the islands. These circumstances and others not necessary to relate explain a frame of mind naturally affected by the personal and pecuniary interest of the author who opposes Philippine independence.

Poisoned press cablegrams from Manila are now regularly appearing in daily papers in this country which resemble bitter attacks on Filipinos by an American newspaper published in Manila last summer while we were there, all seeking to ridicule and discredit stable and law-abiding conditions in the islands. Governor General Harrison and other prominent men past and present, census statistics, and our own observation were all to the contrary.

A "chamber of commerce" in the Philippines, which claims to represent the six thousand and odd American men, women, and children on the island, has objected to independence of the 10,500,000 Filipinos, both on the ground of business and the "Japanese menace," and has enlisted the support of business interests of this country which also voice their protests through the press.

Judge Blount, in his comprehensive work on the Philippines, says: "Americans interested in business in the Philippines come back to this country from time to time and give out interviews in the papers, declaring that the 'Filipinos do not want independence.' What they really mean is that it makes no difference whether they want it or not, they are not going to get it. * * * The gulf in the Philippines between the dominant and subject races will continue to widen as the years go by so long as indirect taxation without representation continues to be perpetrated at Washington for the benefit of special interests having a powerful lobby."

CLASHING COMMERCIAL INTERESTS.

Every well-informed person in the world knows how far clashing commercial interests of the world have been responsible for troubles in the Occident and Orient.

One moving cause for misunderstandings and disagreement between Governments is human greed, and that, under a variety of excuses and pretexts, has been responsible for widespread suffering, countless waste of lives and money, and creation of standards that appeal to the selfish, cruel, and worst part of our natures.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes, certainly; I yield to Gen. SHERWOOD.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Does the gentleman think that the moral status of the Filipinos has been improved by the American occupation?

Mr. FREAR. Undoubtedly so, although they are naturally a generous, moral, and industrious people. Higher education has made them a stronger, better developed race. The Filipinos are the ones who speak so encouragingly upon that subject. Over there they say that America is the hope of the world, and they have the warmest feeling toward America and Americans. Let me say in addition to that, that within the last 10 years our commerce has increased several times because of their generous feeling toward us, and to-day we supply two-thirds of their foreign commerce, which amounts to $250,000,000 to the islands annually.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman know what our stay in the Philippine Islands has cost the American Government?

Mr. FREAR. I do not know; but I will say that every dollar of expense for the Philippine government to-day is paid out of the Philippine treasury by taxation, including the cost of the governor general whom we send over there to act nominally, supposedly to govern the islands. The American army of occupation, which we have there to-day, reaching about 10,000 men, with all of the enormous expense incurred by that army, is paid for by our Government.

I discussed conditions with men like President Quezon, whom so many of you know, with Gen. Aguinaldo, Speaker Osmenia, with the Philippine Commissioners, especially Delegate DE VEYRA and Madame De Veyra, his distinguished wife, and with others, including the chief justice of the islands, Judge Mappa, in respect to the islands, because I knew they were vitally interested, whatever may be our own disposition in respect to immediate independence. They said, among other things, unquestionably that anything the United States wants in the islands in the way of coaling stations, a naval station, or whatever else it may be, will be cheerfully accorded by the Philippine Government, because they acknowledge the obligation that they owe to this Government.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Take the island of Luzon. What proportion of the natives are educated?

Mr. FREAR. In the island of Luzon and all of the other islands, including the seven large islands, with over 10,000,000 people, the number of educated people now reaches 70 per cent, according to the best information we have. That includes the Igorrotes, of the tribe we saw in Chicago in 1893, and I may say something further that will be of interest to you gentlemen of the Congress.

I asked Quezon, "How about the Igorrotes; are they susceptible of education? Can they be assimilated in your civilization over here?" Although 90 per cent of the Filipinos are Christian and nearly all are educated, there is a small percentage who are Igorrotes and Moros. Quezon said in reply: "I will introduce you to an Igorrote from the islands, who is a graduate of Rush Medical College, Chicago, and afterwards graduated from Johns Hopkins University, of Baltimore." That speaks for their progress.

Mr. Chairman, America with her lofty ideals has repeatedly declared that humanity and not profit or pelf shall be her national aim with all countries. Have we been true to those ideals in our dealings with weaker nations generally?

Great business interests that make and unmake governments, that recognize or refuse to recognize national autonomy in other countries, that make for peace or war, are all powerful to-day—even in America. How far are these interests concerned in the present equivocal status of the Philippines? Probably direct evidence is hard to find, although Judge Blount declares that the agricultural-implement business known as the Harvester Trust, and the hemp business interests, and the Sugar and Tobacco Trusts of this country and other large influential combinations are opposed to Philippine independence.

THE PRICE OF SOVIET RECOGNITION DEMANDED BY THE POWERS.

It is not hard to discover nation-wide propaganda by big business when the purpose is apparent, but a consistent propaganda may deceive even those who are familiar with methods pursued. During the past year the press of the country, daily and weekly, has contained columns regarding bolshevist atrocities and in denunciation of the soviet government. Every case of labor agitation in our own country, every bomb-throwing outrage, was declared to be instigated by Russian Reds. Many of us were affected by the anti-Russian hysteria. Presumably 99 per cent of our people are against the soviet form of government, but the chorus that fed on bolshevists for breakfast, Russian Reds for dinner, and soviets for supper was violent in its daily tales of tortures, official incapacity, and Russian anarchy, until about November 15, when a Mr. Vanderlip, international booster from Los Angeles, announced through the press that an American syndicate had secured vast concessions from the soviets. Simultaneously Great Britain made peace with the soviet government, announcing it meant billions of dollars in business to her. France then let the cat out of the bag by protesting against Great Britain's action, because the soviet government refused to guarantee repayment of $8,000,000,000 in bonds loaned the overthrown Russian monarchy by France before the war. Then the chorus suddenly stopped.

VANDERLIP'S MODEST DEMAND.

A new big-business chapter is from Vanderlip's press-bureau statement of December 11.

Vanderlip is the man who claims to have an enormous $3,000,000,000 concession in Siberia, which he has repeatedly announced to the world. This is what he said in last Sunday's Washington Post:

> I've been over the top and I've brought back to America a concession to 400,000 square miles of the richest territory in Russia with $3,000,000,000, and it's up to America to keep it. * * * The territory is now occupied and claimed by the Japanese, and the concessions of the American group will be of no value unless the Japanese are pushed out of the Kamskatka region. * * * Mr. Vanderlip said he was looking to the United States to compel the Japanese to move.

Ignoring the merits of a prior French mortgage and also conflicting Japanese squatter sovereignty claims to this territory, Vanderlip now wants a few hundred thousand American troops and a score of American battleships to land his Russian gold brick. Vanderlip is violating the Volstead Act in vodka land and needs a police ambulance quick. This new Los Angeles Charlie Chaplin is in the position of the verdant rustic who frequently receives a deed to the National Capitol Building from some unknown affable stranger, and then shrieks for the police. Now that the anti-Russian press chorus is suddenly silenced and the "Japanese menace" press chorus takes the center of the stage, it is time for Vanderlip to retire and also time for the Philippines to cut loose from inspired interests that seek to provoke a quarrel with Japan. The Filipinos earnestly ask not to be dragged into our foreign troubles.

Nothing has been heard of bolshevist atrocities since the Vanderlip and Great Britain concessions in Russia were announced. There are those unkind enough to say that $80,000,000 in bonds held by Morgan & Co. and by the National City Bank of New York and $187,000,000 of hard American coin turned over by the administration officials to a fly-by-night Russian ambassador representing a nonexisting Russian government had much to do with the bolshevist ghost walk occurring in our midst for many months.

Mr. Chairman, it is needless to illustrate further the power of business which under cover of noisy pounding thus sought to compel a guaranty of American and French holdings of ancient Russian bonds, or else the "stop short, never to go again" grandfather's clock chorus discovered overnight that the bolshevists, reds, and soviets of Russia had suddenly reformed. Enormous new commercial concessions cover a multitude of sins when a Russian government, "unstable" because nonexistent, is recognized by our Department of State and financed by American taxpayers, while the Philippines' claim for independence is ignored. Why American troops were sent to Russia and kept quartered in a country with which we were not at war is yet unknown, unless repudiation of bonds originally executed by a deposed Czar would justify such action by our administration.

Why approximately 10,000 American troops are kept quartered in the Philippines at a cost of several million dollars annually is also a matter of speculation, in view of the large native Philippine Constabulary force that has maintained excellent order in recent years, better by far than in some American cities and States.

SANTO DOMINGO'S EXPLOITATION.

The example of Santo Domingo, where our Government took possession of the Republic and established a military government with an American admiral at its head, is also in point.

A Dominican debt of $20,000,000 incurred prior to 1907 is involved, which it is reported our military and naval authorities are to collect. Not by permitting the Republic of Santo Domingo to function, but by seizing the customs and entire Government and placing the Santo Domingo Government under martial law, a country that has never been at war with the United States. I am not repeating innumerable tales of oppression and injustice that filter through the lines, but am suggesting that the doctrine of self-determination in the Philippines and Santo Domingo, for which our soldiers fought in France in 1917, does not seem to apply where commercial interests are involved.

HAITI'S EXPLOITATION.

Haiti is another small Government that we are violently assimilating. On November 13, 1920, the President of Haiti declared in a long press statement that Haiti is under the absolute control of American marines, who have been stationed on the island for several years. That means martial law. The Haitian President declares he is treated only as a figurehead, not entitled to draw his own salary. He says:

Since American occupation no effective aid has been given Haiti for developing its agricultural and industrial resources as stipulated in the treaty.

Preventing a vote on the budget, contrary to the voice of the Haitian constitution, and confiscation of officers' salaries by the American financial adviser and American minister is charged against the National City Bank of New York, which refuses to permit the importation of foreign gold into Haiti. James Johnson, a reputable writer, declares this New York bank has a strangle hold on the financial life of Haiti. By a coincidence, it is the same National City Bank reported to be a holder of $80,000,000 Russian bonds which the soviet government refuses to guarantee.

It may be improper to have our State Department disclose to Congress our diplomatic relations with Haiti or Santo Domingo, or any other Government where our Army or Navy is collecting debts for private business concerns, even though it results in killing off 2,000 or more Haitians by way of mild excitement in a tropical climate, but every well-informed man knows that Haiti, like the Philippines, Santo Domingo, and Mexico, is a promising field for private exploitation. Other Governments in South America and Central America, including Colombia, Guatemala, and the 51 per cent Brown Brothers' corporation called "Nicaragua," have interesting chapters on the same subject that can not be covered in a few words.

MESOPOTAMIA OIL FIELDS EXPLOITATION.

What opera bouffé performance outrivals the stern pronouncement recently sent by our Secretary of State to England, demanding that American oil interests be given a free hand in Mesopotamia, and what possible international complications might follow such demands? Another chapter occurs when France follows our State Department's Mesopotamia protest, and itself protests against Vanderlip's Russian concession. It is a striking commentary on modern civilization that immediately after the greatest war in all history, three allied Governments that contributed 18,000,000 soldiers and sustained years of suffering and sorrow, are now found squabbling over spoils and rights of private exploitation at the instance of big business.

Mr. Chairman, when this country, at the conclusion of its greatest war, is immediately confronted with estimates of $1,500,000,000 for support of its Army and Navy because of possible dangers, it may be well for Congress to thoroughly probe the charge that commercial rivalries and big business battles to-day are jeopardizing the peace of the world and our own country's safety more than the Japanese menace and all the bolshevist threats combined. Our people have no sympathy with the small group of powerful, selfish interests that loudly preaches national idealism while holding us up to the world as a nation of dollar-money grabbers.

I have no purpose to discuss at length the far-reaching power of business interests in our relations with other Governments. The field is one familiar to all, but I am suggesting that when a Government like the Philippines has met every condition imposed by our Government, that failure then to act by Congress is looked upon with suspicion because of influences I have described.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. FREAR. I will.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How many soldiers do we have over there now?

Mr. FREAR. About 10,000 soldiers are stationed in the Philippines permanently.

Mr. SHERWOOD. If the Filipinos are loyal, what is the necessity of having so many soldiers?

Mr. FREAR. I will go a step further and say that about 10,000 Filipino constabulary police the different islands. Our 10,000 American soldiers are largely stationed at Corregidor.

Corregidor is an enormous fortification, a Gibraltar, near the entrance to the bay. It protects Manila and is a valuable stronghold we would probably like to maintain.

Mr. SHERWOOD. Spain had possession of the Philippines for about 300 years, and until the Aguinaldo rebellion they had only about 1,200 soldiers.

Mr. FREAR. They had just 12,000 when Aguinaldo assisted Dewey in capturing Manila in 1898. Aguinaldo furnished all the land forces and Dewey the naval.

Mr. SHERWOOD. If the gentleman will yield for another question. Will the Filipinos reimburse the United States Government for the millions we have spent in improvement there in case they have their independence?

Mr. FREAR. Well, I do not know why we should ask them to do that. I never suggested that in the discussions, because they have had no voice in that enormous expenditure. They are conducting their own government to-day; they are giving us two-thirds of their commerce and doing everything they can for us, and we have spent probably $50,000,000, or even more than that——

Mr. SHERWOOD. More than that.

Mr. FREAR. In constructing these fortifications, maintaining a great army, and so forth, it seems to me it was an unjust burden to place upon 10,000,000 Filipinos—a burden which they had no hand in contracting. I find that we appropriated $119,000,000 for the Philippine and Hawaiian Islands from 1903 to 1914. This indicates over $100,000,000 for the Philippines alone during 20 years. A large part of this expense was and is an unnecessary and continuing burden on our own people.

Mr. Chairman, is business, "big business," seeking to prevent our Government from keeping its pledge of independence made to the Philippines? Judge Blount said seven years ago that a powerful lobby at Washington was then working to that end, and now that all conditions have been met and Congress has unequivocally declared its purpose to release the islands, the handful of business interests there and business interests here that persistently oppose independence find a last straw to support their opposition in a "Japanese menace."

THE JAPANESE MENACE.

It is a familiar rule of conduct to look with suspicion on those whose arguments are directly traceable to reasons not frankly disclosed. By that rule the purpose of propagandists on the "Japanese menace" to Philippine independence will be discredited in advance, because these interests have always been opposed to independence. What they fail to get by direct efforts is now sought by staging a ghost walk with the Japanese bugaboo, even as other propagandists up to November 15 frightened small children, and older ones, too, with Russian bolshevist goblins that are "to get us if we don't watch out." In other words, we are asked to hold the islands indefinitely for fear the Japanese or some one else may have designs upon them.

Only about 6,000 Japanese in round numbers live in the Philippines out of a population of 10,500,000 in round numbers, or less than 1 Japanese to every 1,500 Filipinos.

One hundred thousand Japanese now live in the Hawaiian Islands, that have only a little over 200,000 population in all, compared to 6,500 Japanese in the Philippines, which contain 10,500,000 population. Twelve Japanese now live in California compared to every Japanese living in the Philippines. The comparison needs no further comment.

Manchuria, Korea, and Formosa, near Japan, all offer a fairly promising field to Japanese expansion, because of proximity and comparative small population to country occupied. Yet Japan has failed in its attempts to colonize Formosa, less than a thousand miles distant and midway between Nagasaki and Manila. If after many years Japan has been unsuccessful in fastening its government on the small island of Formosa, what probability is there of attempts to conquer the Philippines, with many times the area and population of Formosa; a people who are well educated, enlightened, of Christian religion, and of tested courage, living far down in the Tropics; a race that back in 1898 was declared by John Barrett then equal to the Japanese in statesmanship, by Gen. Anderson to be "hard fighters," and by Dewey as a race whose army in 1898 could have comprised "the entire population."

Quotations from leading Japanese officials might be given showing that Japan has never had any designs on the Philippines, but these are superfluous, because when our Government releases the Philippines it owes to them and to civilization a neutralization by consent of the great powers under an agreement to protect the integrity of the islands. This doubtless can be secured with whatever coaling stations or naval stations on the islands we may desire, because leading Philippine officials have repeatedly given such assurance; but if for any reason an agreement of nations can not be had those familiar with the progressive, self-reliant spirit of the Filipinos will not worry over danger from Japan or any other power.

Roosevelt in 1915 insisted that we release the Philippines at an early moment because "from a military standpoint they are a source of weakness." The Philippines are more likely to be threatened by those countries with whom our Government's relations are strained than from any acts of their own. Roosevelt clearly points out the danger to us. It is doubly great to those whom we would necessarily involve in our diplomatic troubles. The Filipinos are in more danger through our continued military occupation than if freed from an unsought controlling alliance.

Mr. Chairman, this question has been decided by the Filipinos in the affirmative when in Philippine independence hearings before the joint committee June 3, 1919, Senator HARDING, now President elect, asked the Filipino witness, Dean Bocoba:

> Suppose the league [of nations] should fail and if you were to have your independence you wou'd be called upon to accept it without any American protection, would you still prefer it, if pressed upon your own resources?
> Mr. BOCOBA. Yes, sir; absolutely (p. 73).

That sentiment, I am informed, is universal among the Filipinos.

Mr. Chairman, if the Philippines are without danger from the Japanese hobgoblins, discovered only by those who have ever sought to block their independence, if they have established a stable government, as statistics and a record of 20 years of unexampled progress show, what further objection is urged against early fulfillment of our promise to them?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FREAR. May I have a few minutes additional?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, by direction of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] I yield the gentleman from Wisconsin 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized for 10 additional minutes.

CONGRESSIONAL ACTION IN EUROPEAN CONTROVERSIES.

Mr. FREAR. Are we slow going as a Nation in international matters when interested commercially or politically? I have briefly alluded to commercial interests that influence our foreign policy when territory is to be exploited or debts are to be collected.

If several hundred thousand or several million Filipino American voters were living in this country, would we become more actively interested politically in granting demands for independence of the islands?

Over 30 resolutions have been introduced in the American Congress, House or Senate, relating to Irish independence. No more dignified or highly respected legislative body in the world exists than the other branch of Congress, that last session by a vote of 60 to 1 passed a strong resolution demanding that the peace conference at Versailles hear Ireland's representatives present her cause.

That resolution set forth "that the Senate of the United States expresses its sympathy with the aspirations of the Irish people for a government of its own choice." It was passed almost unanimously.

With the sentiment of self-determination the average American is in sympathy not alone with Ireland but with all people who would be free. Ireland's population in 1911 consisted of 1,578,572 people living in Ulster and 2,803,379 in the rest of the island. A majority vote in Ulster was registered against home rule, estimated at one-quarter of the total vote. Predictions are made by English statesmen, writers, and others that the independence asked for and so strenuously opposed by Ulster will be disastrous; but all these arguments fall before the desire of a people who want independence. Our own people have become actively interested in Ireland's cause; the conservative upper House of the American Congress has asked unanimously that Ireland be given a government of its choice, urging that self-determination be exercised by a part of Great Britain against the mother country, even though Ireland has been a part of the empire practically within the shadow of England's hills for over seven centuries.

The Philippines have over three times the territory of Ireland and more than double its population. They are 10,000 miles distant from our seat of government, and peopled by a race that in climate and customs has little in common with ours. They are unanimous in their request for independence and we have repeatedly pledged it to them. For years they have maintained their own government against the strenuous efforts of exploiters and speculators. They see America actively concerned in European matters, although standing guard over the Monroe doctrine in the Western Hemisphere. They find America hesitating to grant them independence in the far-away Orient while pleading for Ireland; and in their inexperience with American policies that are not clearly understood even by the great mass of our own people the Filipinos ask, "Why not give us what you ask of England for Ireland?"

HISTORY REPEATS ITSELF.

Other arguments handed out by modern-day obstructionists have a musty, camphor-laden smell that bring back memories of long ago—of days when English orators in Parliament voiced the protests of Tory American colonists against being left to the tender mercies of Adams, Henry, Franklin, John Hancock, and their fellow conspirators. Our patron saints of to-day were then denounced as dangerous, rabid revolutionists, fit for the gibbet. It was then contended the American Colonies would not be able to agree among themselves, and so would become the prey of any monarchical world buccaneer that chose to gather them in—so my lords in silks and velvet professed to believe. "Do not turn them loose to be swallowed by some stronger nation." That was said then as it is said to-day.

Rich and fertile fields, forests, mines, and untold wealth were dangled temptingly before those whose cupidity and greed were controlling motives in 1775. England was then declared by her wiseacres to be filling the rôle of a world benefactor when thus protecting the Colonies from their own rapacious leaders in their mistaken demand for freedom.

The voice of arrogance, commercialism, and self-conceit was heard then as now, while the insistent cry for independence came from the same heaven-born impulse for unrestricted action—then as now; an impulse that will be the same a thousand years hence, for it is implanted in the breast of every man, in every clime, and will continue to move the world to the end of time.

Ambition properly directed is a righteous force, and the Filipino's ambition is the same force that inspired our forefathers to write a declaration for all time and for all people struggling for independence, be they in America, Ireland, or in the isles of the Orient.

The American Congress, several Presidents and ex-Presidents have voiced the pledge for Philippine independence. That promise has been given repeatedly during the last 20 years. The policy of excusing, evading, and avoiding fulfillment of that promise is not characteristic of Americanism. We should keep our pledge and grant Filipinos their independence, without delay and without strings. [Applause.]

Mr. JUUL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I will.

Mr. JUUL. If I understand the situation correctly the Filipinos now make all their own local laws?

Mr. FREAR. Entirely.

Mr. JUUL. So that the only thing left for the United States to do would be to withdraw its military and its governor. That would give the Filipinos in addition to what they now have foreign representation and consular representation. Is not that all they lack?

Mr. FREAR. That is practically so, except they are to-day maintaining a governor general, who is a representative from this Government over there, foisted on them at a salary of $18,000 a year, living in a palace, which I will say to you is one of the most wonderful places I have ever seen, a useless burden placed on them that ought not to exist because it is inexcusable and un-American. Other jobless officials now supported by the Philippine treasury and usually opposed to independence will return to America if independence is granted with an occupation now in jeopardy, then ended. But the islands will survive.

Mr. JUUL. Will the withdrawal of the American troops necessitate an equal outlay by the Filipinos for their own self-protection? Would they need 10,000 soldiers?

Mr. FREAR. Well, the gentleman is asking a question——

Mr. JUUL. The gentleman has been in conversation with Filipinos.

Mr. FREAR. Yes; and am somewhat familiar with the situation. This is a question I did ask of them. I said, "Would you gentlemen over here in the Philippine Islands"—I asked this of Gen. Aguinaldo and others—"would you be willing to give a coaling station and a place in the Philippine Islands for a haven for all Americans in the Orient, Japan, China, and elsewhere, who may choose to come here to find a safe place at all times?" They said, "Unquestionably that would be granted, because that was the disposition of their people." Now, they may need, in addition to their constabulary force, a small army in time, and in time a small navy like any other small country. A Filipino army of 25,000 native soldiers helped Dewey capture Manila. The Japanese are the only people said by business interests to be dangerous. If they captured Manila they would be in exactly the same position that Gen. SHERWOOD suggested with reference to the Spaniards who only held Manila. Great Britain when she captured Washington and New York could not hold America during the Revolution. She never could get America because she could not wage a successful war at that distance. If the Japanese can not colonize Formosa it is impossible to believe that with the Filipinos they will be able to have any greater success. Again, I believe it is our duty, as a matter of international obligation and policy, to arrange with all the strong Governments to have the Philippines "neutralized"; for instance, as is the case of Switzerland and possibly other small Governments in Europe.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FREAR. Yes; certainly, if I have further time.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Has the gentleman examined the bill that is pending, as I understand, that proposes to give the Philippines their independence—a bill recently introduced or introduced during the present Congress? I want to inquire of the gentleman, if he has examined it, whether it makes any provision at all for the protection of the islands by the United States, or is it a clean proposition granting them independence?

Mr. FREAR. I have not examined it. But I will say that the Filipinos ask for independence, whether they have neutralization granted them or not. We have pledged independence to them without any strings in the past—Republican Presidents and Democratic Presidents, and the Congress of the United States as well. So I feel it is our duty, and we can not do anything else in justice to them and ourselves but grant it to them "at the earliest possible moment," to use the expression of ex-President Roosevelt. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BUCHANAN] has 48 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS] 17 minutes.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am very much gratified to know that the majority leader, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], is really now for economy. The only fear I have that his economy is not going to be a success is that after the 4th of next March he will not have any departmental heads of the administration upon whom to lay the blame for his failure to carry out his pretended economy.

It is a right singular thing that the gentleman from Wyoming is making such a loud declamation against the Secretary of War for the increase of the Army. As one of the minority at the last session I tried to point out to the gentleman from Wyoming and the majority side that the War Department and the Army, if they had a chance, would recruit up to the limit of legislative authorization. We knew over here on this side that every soldier who is a professional soldier wants to increase enlisted men in the Army, because the more enlisted men you have the more commissioned officers you will have and the higher their rank. They also sincerely believe in a large Army. It is a singular thing that the gentleman from Wyoming now complains very bitterly that the Secretary of War has increased the Army to 216,000 men, when the gentleman from Wyoming voted himself, and insisted on this House voting, for a bill that not only permitted him to recruit the Army up to 216,000 but permitted him to recruit it to 280,000.

The ranking minority member of the Military Affairs Committee was Mr. DENT. At the last session he presented a motion to recommit the Army bill. That motion to recommit provided that in peace times the strength of the Army should not exceed 185,000 enlisted men, but that in war it might be extended to proper proportions. The gentleman from Wyoming stood on this floor and joined that side of the House in voting down the motion offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. DENT].

> Mr. DENT moves to recommit the bill with the following amendment: To instruct the committee to report the same back with an amendment providing that the total enlisted force of the line of the Regular Army, excluding the Philippine Scouts, enlisted men in the Quartermaster Corps and Medical Department, Signal Corps, and the unassigned recruits, shall not at any time, except in actual or threatened war, exceed 185,000 men.

The gentleman from Wyoming, I regret to say, voted against the motion to recommit, and on that occasion, when the issue was sharply drawn between a peace-time Army of 280,000 men and 185,000 men, voted for the big Military Establishment.

What do we find on the final passage of the bill? We find that 92 Members, the majority of whom were on the minority side of the House, voted against increasing the Military Establishment, and 245 Members, the majority of whom came from the majority side of the House, led by the gentleman from Wyoming, voted for the bill increasing the Army from about 175,000 men under the national defense act of 1916 to 280,000 enlisted men and 18,000 officers.

Let us see what the gentleman from Wyoming had to say on the occasion when the conference bill came back. The gentleman from Wyoming, as leader of the majority, in a well-prepared speech expressed himself as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the members of the Military Committee and the conferees on the part of the House and the country upon the conference report now presented on the Army reorganization bill. I believe it embodies a most excellent military plan, and that it will receive the indorsement of practically everyone in the country who is familiar with legislation of this character, and in this connection I desire to submit some general remarks.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall.

Mr. SEARS. I find in many sections of the country people who do not know who constituted the majority, or what party was in power.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, the Republican Party, of course, was in the majority. Now, I want to call attention to the fact that this bill for which the gentleman from Wyoming was sponsor on that occasion provided as follows:

> Except in time of war or similar emergency when the public safety demands it, the number of enlisted men of the Regular Army shall not exceed 280,000, including the Philippine Scouts.

In addition to the enlisted men the number of officers authorized by that bill brought it up to about 300,000 men, as I understand it.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to know if the gentleman from Texas would himself interpret the language to be mandatory on the Secretary to enlist up to 280,000 men?

Mr. CONNALLY. I would not. I would not interpret it as mandatory; but it evidences ignorance on the part of the majority leader and on the part of the majority not to know that when you authorize military officers to increase the Army they are going to increase it to the maximum—I say it evidences ignorance on their part or an intention to make the size of the Army 280,000 enlisted men.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. The language is that "the Army shall consist of," and it does not use the word "maximum."

Mr. CONNALLY. No; the language is:

> Except in time of war or similar emergency when the public safety demands it, the number of enlisted men of the Regular Army shall not exceed 280,000, including the Philippine Scouts.

That is an expression, at least, that the Congress had it in mind that in peace times we ought to have an Army of approximately 280,000 men.

Mr. DENISON. The idea of the gentleman from Texas is that if any mistake was made we made a mistake in assuming that the War Department would look at that question as we did and consider that as a maximum and not as a minimum.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman made a mistake in assuming that the War Department would understand that you meant something else from what you said in the law. The Congress should express in law what it means and not trust to some "understanding" that has no binding force, as indicated by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. In organization it gives the number of each arm that there shall be.

Mr. CONNALLY. It perhaps does, but I was just reading the maximum.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to my colleague from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, if, like my colleagues from Texas, Judge HARDY and Mr. CONNALLY, I believed that the Secretary of War had done as he should have done on all occasions, no man would rise more quickly in his defense than I would, but I do not look at the matter from the same standpoint that they view it. I am one Democrat who believes that when an administrative officer does contrary to the wishes of Congress, even though he is of the same political faith and party as I am, it is just as much my duty, as a Democrat, to criticize him as it is the duty of any other American citizen. I am one who does not believe that the Secretary of War has carried out the wishes of this Congress. The Secretary of War knew that Congress had appropriated only a certain amount of money for the Army. He knew the action of Congress, because every single Cabinet officer watches the votes that are taken in this House. He knew that the Congress voted money to pay for only a certain number of men. He knew it is against the law of this country to create a deficiency. He knew that when an administrative officer recruits men in the Army, the Government is going to have to pay them, because the Government of the United States carries out its obligations and pays its debts, and he knew that if he created a deficiency of this kind the Government and the Congress were going to have to pay the men whom he recruited against the will of Congress, and I have no patience with him in recruiting men in number larger than Congress had authorized by the money appropriated.

With regard to the Secretary of War, if he goes beyond the wishes of Congress it is the duty of Congress, and it is the duty of Democrats, if they expect to retain the confidence of the country, to bring him back into line. I want to call attention in that connection to a letter which I wrote to the Secretary of the Navy on November 5 with regard to posters that he had put up and down the streets in Washington. That letter is as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., November 5, 1920.

Hon. JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: There has recently been placed on Pennsylvania Avenue at the corners of Seventh, Ninth, Tenth, and Thirteenth Streets large Navy two-sided billboards, advertising on one side an urgent appeal for Navy enlistments, specifying in enticing terms 16 different special inducements, with the opposite side of the billboard containing in attractive type the following:

TWO HUGE UNITED STATES FLEETS TO ENCIRCLE THE GLOBE—200 FIGHTING SHIPS, MOST POWERFUL IN AMERICAN HISTORY, TO MAKE YEAR'S VOYAGE.

WASHINGTON, October 17.

The two great fleets that the Navy Department plans to send around the world next June will be the most powerful ever assembled under the American flag, it was stated here to-day. Each fleet will include approximately 110 units, selected with the greatest care from 200 or more warships available. As described to-day this stupendous armada is aimed to be a spectacle that will impress the world with America's great naval power.

And this Navy recruiting advertisement states that these two fleets will embrace the powerful dreadnaughts Pennsylvania, Arizona, Oklahoma, Nevada, Kansas, Utah, Florida, Delaware, North Dakota, Michigan, South Carolina, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Mexico, Wyoming, Arkansas, Texas, and New York, and the wonderful superdreadnaughts Tennessee, Idaho, and Mississippi, and that each fleet, the Atlantic and Pacific, will be accompanied by numerous battleships, 8 cruisers, 80 destroyers, and 10 auxiliary ships.

May I remind you that ever since the armistice, just such seductive representations as the above have influenced hundreds of ambitious young lads 15, 16, and 17 years old to run away from home and with the connivance of recruiting officers, falsely swear that they were 18 years of age, and enlist in the Navy for a term of years, without their parents' knowledge; and later realizing their mistake, when parents sought a release, your department has threatened their frantic mothers into the frightened belief that if a discharge is insisted upon prosecution for false swearing will follow, and the son will be dishonorably discharged, and turned loose hundreds of miles from home without mileage or travel allowance.

I could not believe the assertions in this recruiting advertisement, or the similar newspaper reports thereof, so I went to see Admiral Robert E. Coontz, Chief of Naval Operations, who, while claiming that the above exaggerated the program, admitted that the Navy Department had the plan of a junketing on foot, denying, however, its extent. I respectfully submit that in permitting these Navy recruiting advertisements to be publicly displayed on Pennsylvania Avenue here in Washington, the Navy Department thereby adopts and thereby becomes responsible for such assertions.

As one humble representative of the people, I hereby respectfully protest against this proposed junketing trip. It should not be taken. Admiral Coontz advised me that he expects to defray the expenses out of the general blanket appropriations. Congress has not authorized any such trip. In none of the appropriations made did Congress even contemplate such a trip. It is my belief that Congress will not authorize it. As one humble Member I shall vote and vigorously fight against any appropriation proposed to pay for it. It is simply ridiculous.

Naval statistics show that it would require at least 70 per cent more coal and oil than ordinary to run these two fleets on such a cruise. Considering the present fuel situation, aside from the enormous expense which should not now be incurred, it would be almost criminal just now to waste the hundreds of thousands of gallons of oil and tons of coal necessary to operate our two big fleets on such a jaunt. There are now several thousand households in Washington absolutely without coal, and even when love and money will procure it, we are now threatened with the price of coal going to $20 a ton. A serious shortage of gasoline is also threatened, with the price in some communities ranging now as high as 40 cents per gallon. Both England and France have been depending largely upon us for coal. Shipping has been retarded in many ports for lack of coal.

Moreover, Mr. Secretary, I respectfully submit that this is no time for the United States to make a vain display of our submarines, destroyers, cruisers, battleships, dreadnaughts, and superdreadnaughts. It would cause every nation in the world to become apprehensive and suspicious, would cause many to become jealous, and would influence many to further grind their already overburdened people with increased naval programs. And every new keel laid by any nation would cause every other, including ourselves, to use same as an excuse for laying additional keels and further increasing naval armaments.

Our people are already tax burdened. There is but one way to reduce taxes. We must quit spending. Our Government has no money except what it takes from the people. As you well know every time we spend public money our only way of providing it is to take it out of the pockets of the people in taxation. It matters not whether it is taken directly or indirectly, after all it comes from the people. The people of the United States who foot the bills have become tired of the waste and extravagance daily prevalent here in Washington.

Last Tuesday's election was not a repudiation of Democracy or of a League of Nations, but it was a repudiation of wanton extravagance, high taxes, and lawless anarchy permitted by Congress, and for which Republicans are fully as much, if not more, to blame, though the people have held us Democrats responsible for it. There will be a League of Nations to enforce the peace of the world, entered into even by the incoming Republicans, for our people are tired of war. No war can occur between any two nations, however far removed, without vitally affecting our rights and interests, for we depend upon the markets of the whole world for a sale of our products. The people will learn that not since the war Congress convened in April, 1917, has there been a Democratic majority in the House of Representatives, and that since May 19, 1919, the Republicans have been in absolute control of both House and Senate, and are justly responsible for present conditions, for which we Democrats have been whipped. It was a Republican Congress which caused Admiral Coontz to leave Washington to-night with a congressional committee on an expensive junketing trip to the naval bases on the Pacific coast, and in addition to providing for the expenses to be paid out of the contingent funds appropriated an additional $50,000. When the blame for present conditions is justly placed where it belongs the people will soon be glad to have Democrats run their business again. I hope, Mr. Secretary, that you will not permit this world cruise. Life may grow monotonous, and being entertained in foreign ports is enticing, but our naval officers should forego it now and seek diversion in their local clubs.

Very sincerely, yours, THOMAS L. BLANTON.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO].

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to know that there are still Democrats in Texas. I began to doubt it when I heard the gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. CONNALLY, take the extraordinary position that not the Congress of the United States, of which they are honored Members, fixes the expenditures, but the departments and bureaus of the Government. I am glad that there is still one Texan in this House who respects the Constitution, understands its character, and has the courage, even though it involves criticism of an officer of the administration, to declare his faith.

From the beginning of our history we have made provision for the maximum Military Establishment, and from the beginning down to a few days ago, no one anywhere under the flag, so far as I know, ever claimed that the provision for the Military Establishment was other than a maximum provision, only to be fully carried out when the Congress appropriated the money for that purpose, or in the case of a national emergency demanding it. It may be that the Secretary of War has not actually violated the law against creating a deficiency by recruiting above the number which the Congress appropriated for. We all realize that we can not well apply that law in the matter of the pay of the Army, for it might be absolutely necessary to increase the Military Establishment to the maximum. We could not hold guilty of a violation of the law a man who in the face of national peril did increase to the Army maximum. On the other hand, no Secretary of War has heretofore ever claimed that he was not limited by the appropriation made by Congress, except and unless there was a national emergency demanding an increase above the number that Congress contemplated. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. HARDY, and the gentleman from Texas, Mr. CONNALLY, both talk as though it were possible for the Congress to provide by law for the exact number of men and officers we shall have at all times. They know better than that. There must be some leeway. There must be an opportunity for expansion, else in time of emergency the officer in charge of and charged with the responsibility could make no provision for the emergency.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. In just a moment. Never before in our history has the Secretary of War claimed that the establishment provided by law was anything but a maximum assumed authority to recruit an Army in ordinary normal times above the numbers that may be paid and subsisted within the appropriations provided by Congress, except in an emergency, and the Secretary of War made no pretense the other day in his testimony before the committee that there was any emergency or extraordinary condition existing anywhere warranting the action he took.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does not this very bill warrant, in case of war emergency, a much larger Army?

Mr. MONDELL. The Army reorganization bill provides for a maximum—provides what shall be the maximum strength of the Army of the United States.

Army organization bills have always been understood to provide for the maximum strength, and the actual size of the Army has been determined by the amount of the appropriation, but the Secretary of War was piqued because Congress did not carry out his recommendation for an army of over half a million in the last Congress, and that pique was apparent in his statement before the committee the other day, which was, in effect, that as Congress did not see fit to do what he recommended, he proposed to show the Congress what he could do under the law Congress passed, notwithstanding the fact that Congress did not appropriate as he had suggested. That is what it amounted to.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Right in line with what the gentleman says, it is obviously impractical and impossible for the Congress to fix an absolute determinate number of men, and although as construed by gentlemen who sought to criticize on the other side, the law specifies the exact number of men and officers, if we were to take it to be the duty of the Secretary of War always to see that we should have the exact number of commissioned officers, he could not do it, because the law of averages shows that the commissioned personnel year by year is short 10 per cent.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from Vermont is quite right. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] did not intend to misquote me as to what I said about what occurred on the 2d of November. What I said was that it was an overwhelming rebuke to those who squandered the people's money and indulged in acts of high-handed autocracy.

Mr. BLANTON. But is not the main cause of the Secretary of War going beyond the authority given him by Congress in our appropriations the fact that he knows that the policy of the chairman of the great Military Affairs Committee, the gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] is with him in reference to this big Army?

Mr. MONDELL. No; I do not think that is true. The gentleman from California [Mr. KAHN] was the first Member of this Congress to criticize the Secretary of War for the excessive recruiting.

Mr. BLANTON. That was political; I am talking about the facts.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 14 minutes remaining.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield for a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. If I understood the gentleman from Wyoming a moment ago in the colloquy with the gentleman from Vermont, the result of that colloquy was that the gentleman agreed that Congress has no way of determining the exact number of men for the Army. Is that correct?

Mr. MONDELL. Congress did provide for the number of men for the Army.

Mr. CONNALLY. How many?

Mr. MONDELL. By fixing the maximum of the Army.

Mr. CONNALLY. What was that?

Mr. MONDELL. Then in appropriating it did what it has always done, set a limit of the size of the Army for this year.

Mr. CONNALLY. At what figure?

Mr. MONDELL. By fixing the appropriation beyond which the Secretary had no authority to go except in an emergency. The gentleman from Texas can not make me believe that he believes that Secretaries of War and Secretaries of the Navy may run amuck and build up such armies and navies as they see fit within the maximum provided by law.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not believe he holds any such view as that, and if he does his colleague from Texas, who takes the other view, comes very much nearer representing the Democratic view on the subject and the view of the country on the subject than he does.

Mr. CONNALLY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; briefly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The gentleman from Texas who is now on the floor does not take that position, and if the gentleman had been on the floor a moment ago and had heard my remarks he would not make that statement. I then stated that we warned you gentleman if you adopted this bill making the maximum the Secretary of War would recruit up to it and we tried to leave it at 185,000 and you voted the motion down.

Mr. MONDELL. I do not remember that the gentleman from Texas warned us that the Secretary of War was so lawless, so reckless of the limitations of appropriations, so utterly at variance with the view of his predecessors, so contemptuous of the Congress, that he would carry out his view of what the Army ought to be regardless of appropriations by Congress. Repeatedly during the debate fixing the appropriation it was stated by gentlemen that the size of the Army would be limited by the amount of the appropriation.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield right there for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will yield.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. On page 13 of this act, section 17, it reads as follows:

SEC. 17. Infantry: The Infantry shall consist of one chief of Infantry with the rank of major general; 4,200 officers in grades from colonel to second lieutenant, inclusive, and 110,000 enlisted men, organized into such Infantry units as the President may direct.

Does the gentleman——

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield for the gentleman to read the act.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Does the gentleman hold that is not mandatory?

Mr. MONDELL. I hold that the provisions of the act with regard to the size of the Army are for the maximum establishment, and that the actual size of the Army is limited by the appropriations.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. But this section 17——

Mr. MONDELL. There are some mandatory provisions in the act, of course, but the provisions relative to the size of the establishment are intended to fix a maximum.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman will permit, if the gentleman will turn over in the act, he will find that there is not a fixed and determinate number of the Infantry. There are, exactly as Mr. MONDELL has said, a maximum, which the Secretary of War himself may decrease by percentages which will be found further on in the act.

Mr. TILSON. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to the circumstances under which that maximum of 280,000 was fixed? The Secretary of War had asked for an Army of 586,000 men, as I remember, stating that the world was still in a turmoil, that we still had an army of occupation on foreign soil, and that an emergency might well arise during the year in which we would need a large Army. Under those circumstances the maximum of 280,000 was fixed, but the appropriation was fixed at a much smaller amount.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true; the fixing of so large a maximum was a compromise between the vast Army the Secretary asked for and the much smaller Army generally favored by Congress. It was not the expectation on the part of anyone that the Army was to be recruited to that size. I do not believe there was a Member on either side who had any idea that the Army would be recruited to the maximum. It never has been in all of our history. Now, the gentleman from Texas attempts to defend the extravagant estimates of the administration for the Army and the Navy by saying that those estimates were based on the action that Congress took in providing for the maximum of the Army and the Navy. The gentleman is not accurate in that statement. The estimates go beyond what would be necessary, even with the Army recruited to the maximum. The estimates for the Navy are greater than would be necessary under economical management if we were to recruit every man and every officer that can be recruited in the Navy. The Secretary of War has apparently based his estimates on the theory that, having last year demanded an enormous Military Establishment, and Congress having refused to give it to him, he should still persist, notwithstanding the action of Congress, to make the same kind of estimates that he made last year, estimates that are not sustained by public sentiment anywhere. The Secretary of the Navy does not pretend that his estimates are necessary under present conditions, but he wails because we have not entered the League of Nations, and presents us with enormous estimates with the assertion that they will be necessary unless we do enter the League of Nations. His estimates are simply a belated argument for our joining the League of Nations.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I understand from the gentleman now, then, that the Secretary of the Navy made an argument for a bigger Navy than Congress wanted, and said if we had that we would have to have a larger appropriation?

Mr. MONDELL. What I said was—and I repeat it—neither the Army nor the Navy estimates are defendable from any viewpoint of present conditions. They even run beyond the necessary expenditure if those establishments were expanded to their maximum.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I just wanted to know what the suggestion of the Secretary of War was for the expenditures to which you refer.

UMI

Mr. MONDELL. I have not before me the exact figures. The total is a billion and something over four hundred and fifty millions.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. How much was for the Army, and how much for the Navy?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not recall the exact figures. But whatever they are, they are far beyond the needs of the Navy and the Army, based even on the maximum provided by law. They total nearly twice the total expenditure of the Government prior to our entry into the Great War.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. GREENE] to tell me where this section 17 and this other section of the law are that warrant the action taken?

Mr. MONDELL. My time has nearly expired, and he and the gentleman from Vermont may discuss that matter later in their own time. Let me say to my friend from Texas again, it is very strange doctrine to come from a Democrat that the departments of the Government may fix the expenditure rather than the Congress of the United States. It is a doctrine that he will not attempt to defend under another administration, I feel quite sure.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. MONDELL. I can not yield further. This Congress represents the American people. It represents their will, their desire, their wish. It is the only body under the flag authorized to provide for the expenditure of the people's money.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Then I suppose the gentleman does not believe in a deficiency bill at all.

Mr. MONDELL. I ask that I may not be interrupted. And when any Member of Congress attempts to defend executive departments in expenditure of money far beyond what Congress has appropriated, he is not dealing fairly with the body of which he is a Member.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. MONDELL. I will not yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming declines to yield.

Mr. MONDELL. The Congress of the United States will continue to hold the national purse strings, and will not allow executive officers to fix the expenditures of the Nation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, may I ask unanimous consent for just one minute?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to be allowed to address the House for three additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the House fixed the time for general debate and the committee can not change it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is aware that under a strict ruling, of course——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Under all rulings.

The CHAIRMAN (continuing). The time can not be extended, but precedents, over and over again, show where debate has been fixed in the House and the committee has extended it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not under general debate, as long as I have been here.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If there is any objection, I will not take it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I make the point of order that it is not the duty of the Chair to state the request. The Chair is under the instructions of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Illinois as correct under a strict construction of the rule. And if the gentleman from Illinois insists upon that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] is not entitled to recognition.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I will say that if the gentleman from Illinois insists upon it I do not think it is of enough importance to complain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, heretofore or hereafter made in other acts and chargeable in any proportion against the revenues of the District of Columbia shall be paid in the proportions of 40 per cent from the Treasury of the United States and 60 per cent from the revenues of the District of Columbia.

If the estimated net revenues of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, are not sufficient to meet the proportion of the appropriations for that fiscal year charged against such revenues by this and all other acts, or which may be estimated to be charged against such revenues by acts that may be approved during such fiscal year, the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall increase the rates of taxation on real estate and tangible personal property sufficiently to make up the difference: Provided, however, That such rates of taxation shall in no event be less than 1½ per cent nor more than 2 per cent.

The CHAIRMAN. There are a number of typographical errors in the section read. Is there objection to their correction by the Clerk?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Plumbing inspection division: Inspector of plumbing, $2,000; assistant inspectors of plumbing—principal, $1,550, 6 at $1,360 each; clerks—2 at $1,200 each, 1 $900; temporary employment of additional assistant inspectors of plumbing and laborers for such time as their services may be necessary, $3,000; draftsman, $1,350; sewer tapper, $1,000; 3 members of plumbing board, at $150 each.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask for some information from the chairman of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GARD. In the statement of the chairman of the committee, made before the consideration of the bill under the five-minute rule, something was said about the advisability, at least, of increasing the salary of certain clerks in the District of Columbia government. I was under the impression that such salaries referred to employees in the executive office of the District of Columbia. Can the gentleman from Minnesota advise me as to that, and also as to what clerks he had reference whose salaries have not been raised commensurately with the advances given to other employees?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will read for the gentleman's benefit all the increases of emolument, and so forth, very briefly. On page 2 of the report he will find it concisely stated. The following new employments are recommended, and these that I read are all recommended.

Mr. GARD. I understand that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. "One clerk, assessor's office, $1,200." We have not reached that yet. "One clerk, collector's office, $1,400." We have not reached that yet. "One clerk, auditor's office, $1,400." We have not reached that yet. "Two attendants, library, at $900 each." We have not reached them. "An allowance of $1,500 for temporary clerk hire in the license bureau is recommended." We have not reached any of those yet. If the gentleman will make a note of that, all right. If not, I will call his attention to it when we reach it.

Mr. GARD. Where are all these clerks employed as to whom the gentleman said their salaries had not been raised? He said the salaries of other employees had been raised, and unfortunately, owing to circumstances, these had not been raised.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. None of the salaries of employees in the District Building have been raised. These are new ones.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman said there were certain persons whose salaries should be raised but which have not been. I was trying to find out who they were.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It would be hard to enumerate them. They are scattered all through the bill. If we raise one we would have to raise all.

Mr. GARD. Are they in any particular department?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know of any particular department that it would apply to.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman wants it, I would be glad to give him the information.

Mr. GARD. I would be glad to have the information.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will look at page 4 of the bill, at the bottom of the page, he will see that the number they wanted increased was 1,500. There are 1,500 statutory employees and the pay has not been adjusted except by the bonus, and the bonus applies to those who receive less than $2,400. Those employees are scattered throughout the service in different positions who have not been increased except by a bonus, and they appear all through this bill. They have requested an increase of about 25 per cent of salary throughout the bill. We have excluded them all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has expired.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman from Minnesota if the estimates this year ask for an increase in the salaries of the District Commissioners?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They did.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope they did not. I believe last year the committee recommended an increase in salary of that kind, but I am not sure about that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The committee did. For two years or four years we have recommended an increase of $1,000.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It has been asked for this year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I hope it will not be granted.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It has been asked for.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the best appointment that President Wilson has made in a long time, in my opinion, was the appointment of Miss Mabel Boardman as a Commissioner of the District of Columbia. She is a woman of remarkable executive ability. It will not be many years until the women are largely running the municipalities of the country, and I would not be at all surprised if they were running the country itself through officials of their own sex. They run the country now, so far as that is concerned. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILSON. And always have done so. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes; and always have done so. I think the District of Columbia is to be congratulated, decidedly so, upon the appointment of Miss Boardman as District Commissioner.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Does not the gentleman think her salary ought to be raised?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; and I hope she did not ask for it. I have known more or less about her work in the past in a public way, and I asked the chairman whether she had asked for it. I am quite certain that if the request was made it did not come from her for an increase in salary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Vermont asks unanimous consent to proceed out of order for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the gentleman will allow me before he starts——

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If the gentleman does not have any more mud to throw, I certainly will.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I simply want to say that if anything sounded unpleasant in what I said, I meant that it was as clear as mud to my mind. I hope the gentleman will not think there was any intention to say anything unpleasant.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If I were not to take that part of the gentleman's remarks literally perhaps I might be pardoned for not understanding the rest of them literally, also.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. I certainly did not intend to be unpleasant. The gentleman can be, if he sees proper.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. I have no such intention.

It seems to me that the situation with regard to the recruitment of the Army, so far as the question has been brought here, is a very simple one, because it has been the long-established policy of Congress in its relations with the War Department. And if I am not very much mistaken, it will be found upon examination that the present Secretary of War is the first—certainly among recent Secretaries—within the memory of this generation who has failed to understand that policy.

The policy hitherto and to-day—whatever may be thought by some minds to be a strict interpretation of the text of the act—is that it is for Congress to determine what shall be the outside or maximum limit of a lawfully established Army in the United States; and then, following a long-established practice among the men charged with the administration of that law, to have the force within that maximum regulated by the control of the appropriations which put the act into effect.

That has been done through successive administrations and was in the mind of the Committee on Military Affairs not only when they drew the act but when they explained the intention on the floor. Over and over when the question was raised whether the country was prepared to maintain an Army of 280,000 men the assurance was given on this floor that unless this body so desired there was no likelihood, except in an emergency, of its being recruited to 280,000; that the control of the purse strings would still be in Congress and Congress would control the Secretary of War as it had always done.

There was something besides that in that policy, because it might involve an international situation of extreme delicacy and sensitiveness. When we pursued, as we had for a great many years, a certain nominal and normal recruiting policy, during which we kept within the law of averages of a certain number of men, that number came within the range of general expectation from year to year, and the Army was appropriated for on that basis. But there was still left in the law a provision for the President to exert his authority to carry the Army up to the maximum in a time of extreme emergency without publicly asking Congress to give him the legislative authority so to do, and possibly by that very act alarming the people in some other country whom at that time we were particularly careful not to offend. It has often been found, as we all know, that negotiations and relations between two countries approach a state of more or less sensitiveness, and the first move on the part of one nation openly to prepare itself for a possible war would so alarm the other as to precipitate the war. So it has long been thought wise in such affairs or in the case of possible domestic insurrection or disturbance that the President should have the right to exercise that latent authority to recruit to a maximum without making a public demonstration of increasing the Army strength by coming to Congress and asking for a law to do it.

Above and beyond the text of the act comes the policy of the administration of the law, and if there is any one thing that our English-speaking civilization stands for to-day it is the long struggle of the Congress to control by the power of the purse the Army they give to the Executive to use in their name and behalf. That is exactly the foundation upon which we abided when we undertook to say by the amount we took from the purse how much of an Army we wanted the Executive to maintain. It was thought more prudent not to fix such an arbitrary limit of peace-time numbers in the law so that in an emergency he might increase the Army and still prevent an alarm by not having to come to Congress to do it.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. If I have the time.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Has there not been emergency and deficiency appropriations in every Army bill?

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. There have been, but they have come through the normal administration of the law, because it was impossible to fix the number of men that might be recruited throughout the land in every 24 hours, and thus be certain at 12 o'clock on any day, we will say, that only a positively fixed number had been reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

The Clerk read as follows:

License bureau: Superintendent of licenses (who shall also be secretary to the automobile board without additional compensation), $2,000; clerks—two at $1,400 each, two at $1,200 each, one $1,000, one $900; inspector, $1,200; inspector of licenses, $1,200; assistant inspector of licenses, $1,000; messenger, $600; temporary clerk hire, $1,500; in all, $14,600.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. I would like to ask the chairman in reference to this temporary clerk hire, $1,500, what is the necessity for it?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. On account of the large number of licenses they have to issue. The licenses have increased, doubled and almost trebled. They embrace automobiles and elevators——

Mr. WALSH. I think if they issued fewer automobile licenses it might be better. You do not have to issue elevator licenses every day, only once a year.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; but this is a small amount compared with what they wanted. It is because of the increase of the amount of work in that department. It did seem to the committee that they must have some extra help.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The issue of licenses of different characters come in a greater amount during certain months of the year than at other times.

Mr. WALSH. Why is that?

Mr. BUCHANAN. Because it started out in that way, and they issue them annually or semiannually. They expire at that time and the people come back, and that is the reason for it. There is a great rush on the office at those times, perhaps for one month, until the rush period is over with, and then the business falls back to the regular employees. This saves the District government money, so that they can employ more temporary services during the rush period and dispense with the employees when the rush is over.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts make the point of order?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I am trying to get a little more information about the matter. Can not the chairman advise me when this rush of work comes?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Quarterly, semiannually, and annually—chiefly annually. They have certain seasons when a large number of these licenses expire, and then they come around in droves, as it were, to have the licenses reissued. Then is when they want these temporary employees to help them out of their difficulty, and that occurs three or four times a year.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order on this item, but I do not wish to have that considered as a precedent for the future.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to ask the chairman what, if anything, is being done with regard to bringing about better reciprocity agreements between the District of Columbia, the State of Maryland, and the State of Virginia with respect to the recognition of automobile licenses. For instance, the owner of an automobile residing out toward Chevy Chase, close to the Maryland line, but in the District, if he has to drive over into Maryland, possibly a few hundred yards, or over into Virginia, less than a mile, I understand he must maintain three licenses—an automobile license in the District, one in Maryland, and one for the State of Virginia. He must have his car titled in Maryland, and here, as I understand it, and possibly in Virginia. Surely the time has come when there should be reciprocity in this regard between the District and these two States?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the District recognize the license of the State of owner of the car? For instance, let us take a Texas license.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, yes; my Texas license is absolutely good in the District, in Maryland, and in Virginia, but unfortunately there has been a bad feeling regarding reciprocity between the District and the States of Maryland and possibly Virginia. A resident of the District of Columbia who takes out his license here, who must have his car titled under the law, if he lives within a few hundred yards of Maryland and drives 200 yards over there to see his neighbor, is arrested unless he takes out a Maryland license and has his car titled in Maryland. That reciprocity has not been brought about between the District and the State of Maryland, and I think something ought to be done to bring it about.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman suggest how we can do that on this appropriation bill?

Mr. BLANTON. The Appropriation Committee is the grandmother of the District and of the Commissioners of the District.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Where is the grandfather?

Mr. BLANTON. There is no grandfather; but nothing is brought about with respect to the welfare of the people of the District, it seems to me, unless there is a pinning down by this committee upon the commissioners in some respects. The gentleman realizes that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is a matter that the legislative committee of the District of Columbia here would cheerfully take up if the gentleman would introduce a bill of that kind.

Mr. BLANTON. There is just one other thing in that particular respect to which I desire to call attention. Of course, with regard to a Congressman, he has no trouble, because his State license on his car will get him anywhere. He can go in any State, but so far as the people who live here are concerned, a different rule obtains in the State of Maryland and, I think, also Virginia. Then, again, for instance, if a license were taken out in November, the owner is not charged for a quarter of a year as in some States, but for a whole year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. I know in some States that where they take out a license in November they are charged for only three months, one-quarter of the annual charge; if they take out the license in August they are charged for half of a year, but, as I understand it, if you take out a license here in November, you are charged for the whole year. That is unjust to the people.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. But we residents of the District of Columbia want to get some money in order to build schoolhouses and improve streets. We need the money very much.

Mr. BLANTON. My experience is that all they have to do is to come before the District Committee and they get it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not all.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words, for the purpose of observing, in connection with the so-called licenses of the bill, reading but the other day that the opportunities for licenses was now at hand for those who desired to have licenses in the District of Columbia, but they were not seemingly being applied for very promptly, the idea being that those who were required to get licenses were deferring the purchase of such license until the last possible moment, and I desire to inquire of the chairman of the committee whether these licenses are issued for annual periods or what length of time they cover?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It has been my information they are issued for an annual period, and I do not know anything to the contrary.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman from Texas spoke about the matter of a better understanding between the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia with regard to licenses. It seems to me that the better understanding should be between those two political subdivisions not alone so much in the matter of licenses but for the protection of people who travel on the public roads, because the newspapers carry almost daily accounts of persons who, on the so-called Washington Boulevard between Washington and Baltimore, are assaulted and held up, to use the common everyday expression, by different elements of the criminal classes, and there seems to be a lack of complete understanding or recognition of authority between the State of Maryland and the District of Columbia as to who shall be the guardian of these public roads and as to what the extent of their jurisdiction is. It has always seemed to me that right here in the shadow of the Capitol, on this magnificent public road that is called the Washington Boulevard, certainly the traveling public or the people who live here who have business between Baltimore and Washington should be protected, and I wondered why there was this lack of apparent unity of efforts between those who should make certain the peace of the District of Columbia and the peace on the roads in the State of Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Collector's office: Collector, $4,000; deputy collector, $2,000; chief clerk, arrears division, $2,000; cashier, $1,800; 2 assistant cashiers, at $1,500 each; bookkeeper, $1,600; 3 bailiffs, at $1,200 each; clerks—6 at $1,400 each, 13 at $1,200 each, 4 at $1,000 each, 5 at $900 each, 1 $720; clerk and bank messenger, $1,200; 2 messengers, at $600 each; in all, $53,620.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, in order to inquire of the chairman what the two functions are which are placed in one person called a clerk and bank messenger, at $1,200. It is in the second line of page 6. What are the functions of the clerk, who must also be a bank messenger?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, he is a clerk, and he is a messenger whom they send out to the banks.

Mr. WATSON. Why should there not be two messengers, as reported in the bill, and another at $600, instead of a clerk and a messenger combined at $1,200?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We granted in the office of the auditor, assessor, and collector one additional clerk, because they did seem to combine as much as possible in one clerk. Instead of having two, they have one, and that is the idea of giving the additional clerk. This man has two names instead of one, and they seem to be trying to run down there on an economical basis.

Mr. WATSON. The clerk mentioned as clerk and bank messenger combined, has he higher qualifications than the other two messengers at $600 each?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Oh, yes; he is clerk as well as messenger, and when he can be spared from his duties as clerk he is sent away as a bank messenger. A bank messenger is considered of higher importance than an ordinary messenger. They send checks, and so forth, whereas an ordinary messenger is sent out on any purpose. He is of more importance and is designated both clerk and bank messenger.

Mr. WATSON. With all the clerks this department desires and names in this section, could we not save $600?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They do not have $600 clerks.

Mr. WATSON. Messenger, rather.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They want a superior man in that place, and this clerk could be used both ways, and they have utilized him. As a matter of fact, I think they wanted two $1,200 clerks, one a clerk and the other a messenger, and they combined and they were given a $1,200 man.

Mr. WATSON. And you save $600——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; I think we save $1,200. That is what we have saved.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I wish the gentleman would wait until we read about two paragraphs more. I was then going to ask that the committee rise. I will tell you why I want to go past that point. There is only one place more, in the auditor's office, where there is an additional clerk asked for, and I want to end the controversy as to more clerks.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Ohio make the point of order?

Mr. GARD. I prefer to make the point of order. I do not want to embarrass the gentleman in the presentation of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman insists upon it——

Mr. GARD. I do not desire to embarrass the gentleman.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I simply want to read through the paragraph relating to the auditor's office here, a few lines, and then I will move to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio makes the point of order there is no quorum present.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15130, the District appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. ROMJUE, by unanimous consent (at the request of Mr. RUCKER), was granted leave of absence for 10 days, on account of sickness.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution of the following title:

S. J. Res. 191. Joint resolution to create a Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for change of reference of the bill H. R. 4744, which is a bill for the relief of one Sarah D. Chamberlain. The bill was referred to the Committee on Claims and should have been referred to the Committee on War Claims. I have consulted the chairman of the Committee on Claims, and the change of reference is agreeable to him.

The SPEAKER. That is a private bill, and the reference will be changed accordingly.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Friday, December 17, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

231. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations to cover the salaries of employees desired in the office of the Quartermaster General, War Department (H. Doc. No. 925); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

232. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, from the Secretary of War, supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Panama Canal for pay of employees under "Civil government, Panama Canal and Canal Zone," fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 926); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

233. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Treasury Department for additional employees in the office of the Auditor for the Treasury Department during the fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 927); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

234. A letter from the chairman of the Federal Trade Commission transmitting the report of the commission on sugar supply and prices, made pursuant to House resolution 150, adopted October 1, 1919; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

235. A letter from the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives transmitting a list of property belonging to the United States and under the charge of the Doorkeeper in the various rooms of the House in the Capitol Building and folding room in the House Office Building as of December 6, 1920; to the Committee on Accounts.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. KALANIANAOLE, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 9231) to authorize and provide for the manufacture, maintenance, distribution, and supply of electric light and power within the district of Hamakua, on the island and county of Hawaii, Territory of Hawaii, reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1125), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD], who are in attendance upon a committee meeting.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and also the absence of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-three Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

DOCUMENTS IN DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing documents received and distributed during the fiscal year 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

CREDENTIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a certificate of the governor of Pennsylvania certifying to the election of BOIES PENROSE as a Senator from that State for the term of six years, beginning March 4, 1921, which was read and ordered to be filed, as follows:

IN THE NAME AND BY AUTHORITY OF THE COMMONWEALTH OF PENNSYLVANIA, Executive Department.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 2d day of November, 1920, BOIES PENROSE was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania a Senator from said Commonwealth to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1921.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the great seal of the State to be affixed, at the city of Harrisburg, this 7th day of December, in the year of our Lord 1920, and of the Commonwealth the one hundred and forty-fifth.

[SEAL.] WM. C. SPROUL.

By the governor:

CYRUS E. WOODS,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McLEAN presented petitions of the Wethersfield Foreign Missionary Society and Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Wethersfield; sundry citizens of Romford; sundry citizens of Ridgefield; and sundry citizens of Suffield, West Haven, and Connecticut, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the enactment of legislation for the public protection of maternity and infancy, which were ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Westport Teachers' League, of Westport, Conn., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation commercializing national parks for power plants and other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HALE presented a petition of the members of the Kennebec County Farm Bureau, of Augusta, Me., praying for the passage of the so-called French-Capper truth in fabric bill, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of members of the Institute Jacques-Cartier Society, of Lewiston, Me., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to create a department of education, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. HARRIS presented a memorial of the Carpenters Local Union No. 1927, of Atlanta, Ga., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation repealing the Chinese exclusion act, which was referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a resolution adopted at the annual convention of the Episcopal Church in the Diocese of Georgia, in favor of the enactment of legislation establishing a Federal censorship of motion-picture films, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. PAGE presented a petition of the women of the Autonoe Club, of St. Albans, Vt., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of maternity and infancy, which was ordered to lie on the table.

COPPER RIVER & NORTHWESTERN RAILWAY CO.

Mr. THOMAS, from the Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (S. 551) for the relief of the Copper River & Northwestern Railway Co., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 668) thereon.

JOINT COMMITTEE ON NAVAL BASES.

Mr. BALL. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Naval Affairs a joint resolution extending until January 31, 1921, the time within which the special joint committee created by the naval appropriation act approved June 4, 1920, is required to make its report to the Congress of the United States, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The consideration of this measure will not interfere with the pendency of Senate bill 3259?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that the time has expired to make a report and it is simply a request that it be extended to the 31st day of January. If there is no objection, it will be passed in a moment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Very well.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) extending the time within which the special joint committee appointed to investigate the advisability of establishing certain naval, aviation, and submarine bases in the United States is required to make its report to Congress was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and considered as in Committee of the Whole, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the time within which the special joint committee to investigate the advisability of establishing a naval base on San Francisco Bay; a deeper channel to Mare Island Navy Yard; an aviation base at Sand Point, Wash.; submarine bases at Los Angeles, Calif., and Port Angeles, Wash., which was created by the act entitled "An Act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1920, is required to submit its report to the Congress of the United States, is extended to January 31, 1921.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4662) granting a pension to Matilda Lucas; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4663) granting an increase of pension to Fred F. Harris (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 4664) to amend the first paragraph of section 20 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm-loan act, as amended by the act of Congress approved April 20, 1920; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. HITCHCOCK:

A bill (S. 4665) to amend section 7 of the Federal reserve act; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 4666) to amend section 13 of an act known as the Federal reserve act, approved December 23, 1913; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 4667) granting certain lands in Hot Springs, Ark., to the Leo N. Levi Memorial Hospital Association; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. KNOX (for Mr. PENROSE):

A bill (S. 4668) for the relief of Cecilia Barr; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4669) for the retirement of certain emergency officers of the Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1865) for the relief of the Baltimore Dry Dock & Ship Building Co., owner of a dry dock at Baltimore, Md.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 643) to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia, disagreed to by the Senate, and agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. KAHN, Mr. MCKENZIE, and Mr. FIELDS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 191) to create a Joint Committee on the Reorganization of the Administrative Branch of the Government, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3259) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, as I understand, when we recessed last night we were considering the so-called Sheppard-Towner bill. If I am right about that, I wish to say that I rise with no small degree of pain, and certainly with no degree of pleasure, in opposition to the passage of the bill at this time in the form in which it is written, for many reasons, but mainly because of the condition of the Treasury.

I feel that the Treasury of the United States needs friends now if it ever did, if this Nation is to remain solvent. I feel it incumbent upon me in performing the duties that devolve upon me with which I have been honored by the Senate to say that in my opinion we are going to be without credit in this Nation, our bonds are going much lower, and we are going to have to pay larger interest upon these certificates of indebtedness than is now being paid, to wit, 6 per cent, unless we are able to retrench very sharply and not branch out in any new lines, no matter how desirable they may be under ordinary circumstances.

The condition of the Treasury is something like this: During the war of course it was easy to obtain funds, because every patriotic, loyal citizen was anxious to support the Government in protecting its honor and credit as well, at home and abroad. They subscribed for funds readily at a low rate of interest, many of them—in fact, I might say almost the majority of them—being compelled to borrow money—I say "compelled" to borrow money, but I would better say that they chose to borrow it—in order to buy the bonds. They have since had to call upon the banks to relieve them, to take the bonds from time to time at a reduction of from 5 to 17 per cent. They have had to dispose of many of them to pay their Government taxes. If you go to New York, or even in this city, or in most any other place, you will find the last payment of taxes, made two days since, was quite largely made by those who had no other funds available and who had to sell their bonds.

In giving in an extemporaneous effort, to quote exact figures down to dollars and cents, is tedious to both speaker and hearers, so I shall deal with round numbers.

During a part of the war period we had almost $30,000,000,000 of indebtedness, perhaps sometimes more. We had nearly $4,000,000,000 of certificates at the highest tide. We have now $24,000,000,000 of funded debt and something over three and one-half billion dollars of floating debt. On that floating debt we are paying largely 6 per cent, which is two or three times as much as we paid immediately after the passage of the bill authorizing the sale of certificates in peace times. When we had occasion to borrow some money we could then borrow it at 2 and 3 per cent upon the certificates.

The Government is now in a position that we all would think unsound for a business man who was borrowing from day to day on the street, selling his paper where he might. The Government now from month to month is appealing to citizens and to bankers to buy these certificates, that it may buy up others.

We had a prosperous year in 1919; nearly everyone engaged in business then made money. Hence when they made their returns for taxation they made liberal returns, and the tax to be collected for 1919 was ample to meet expectations. That, with the help of temporary borrowings, which are being replaced from time to time, has carried us through; but I think every Senator in this body knows that 1920 has not been altogether a prosperous year. It certainly is not expected that thousands and tens of thousands, it might be said millions, who in 1919 reported an ability to pay taxes, and who actually paid considerable amounts, are going to be able for the year 1920 to report more than an even break, and most of them will have to report losses.

I know very well from the information which comes from various directions, particularly as it has come before the Senate since we have assembled, that the live-stock men, the growers of wheat, cotton, corn, and, in fact, the farmers as a class, will lose money, and much money, on the present year's production. Consequently there is no tax to be expected from them.

The Secretary of the Treasury has sent us the regular estimates, excepting, of course, the deficiencies and miscellaneous, which, as we know from information which comes from the departments and otherwise, are going to be huge, and excepting, of course, all such appropriations as this bill and other special bills may carry. Under the regular estimates which we have here the amount called for is $4,653,856,000. There will have to be added to that half a billion dollars, more or less, for contingencies and for miscellaneous expenditures in the regular lines of governmental business. We know that we can not find funds enough to cover a sum near this five billion or more to be asked for without raising the present rate of taxation, and we must greatly reduce amounts to be appropriated or else increase our present load of United States indebtedness.

This pending bill proposes to create another division or bureau. The bill carries, it is true, for the current year an appropriation for expenses of less than a half million dollars, or $480,000 to be exact, that still being a very large sum. It does, however, provide for very much larger appropriations for the succeeding years, as follows:

> For the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, an additional sum of $2,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, the sum of $2,400,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the sum of $2,800,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, the sum of $3,200,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, the sum of $3,600,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, the sum of $4,000,000; and annually thereafter the sum of $4,000,000.

Passing for a moment the illogical and unsafe method of making appropriations which this bill proposes, by virtue of its attempt to mortgage the future, no matter whether it rains or shines, it is starting us out in a new direction, with big appropriations to continue to the end of time.

I want to ask the Senate not to pass the bill at this time in its present form. I suggest that the bill ought to be committed, in a safe and sane way, to the joint committee which the Senate and the House have provided for, which is to be appointed by the Vice President and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and which is to study the question of a reorganization of the several branches of the Government, in order to make the best use which we can of the money we appropriate, and to prevent the lapping over of one governmental service with another.

Take the matter at issue. The $480,000 which the bill proposes to appropriate, of course, is to set up an establishment here in the city of Washington, to employ many clerks and others, with no intention, of course, of accomplishing any especial benefit elsewhere until we shall have appropriated very much larger sums.

Bearing upon a subject analogous to this, a few years ago we established a Children's Bureau. If I remember correctly—and I paid particular attention to it, because it created a new bureau in the governmental service—the able Senator who was the proponent of the legislation or who had charge of it during the discussion established the fact that it would cost but $25,000 a year; and he very eloquently gave us a statement of the benefits that would accrue from the enactment of the bill.

Now I ask Senators to observe where that legislation has carried us in the line of appropriations and requests for future appropriations up to this date. Those of us who voted for the measure started with the understanding that it would cost only $25,000 a year, but for the present fiscal year we have appropriated $271,040. The sum of $106,040 of that appropriation goes for salaries of a bureau which we established on a basis of a total cost of $25,000 a year. Think of it! For the regular salaries alone this year we have appropriated—and the appropriation will be expended—$106,040. Then under the head of general expenses there is an appropriation of $85,000, which is largely, of course, expended here. Some of that undoubtedly is for temporary labor.

Now we come to an appropriation which, if the pending bill shall be passed, will involve overlapping. The appropriation for the investigation of child welfare, in addition to the other appropriations, is $80,000. In God's name, if we are expending $80,000 for investigating child welfare, are we not mindful of the matter of maternity and the care of the infants?

It will be remembered that last year the other House took great and deserved credit for cutting down the appropriation which had been determined on in an earlier bill, but which failed of passage. Before the original bill became a law we adjourned, and the proposed appropriations were cut down in the regular annual appropriation bill which followed; but even then we gave this bureau $271,000.

What are the estimates for the Children's Bureau for this year? They are $654,260, all for the Children's Bureau. They ask an appropriation of $107,140 for salaries. They also ask for general expenses an appropriation of $164,250—nearly double what they previously asked—and they also ask for the investigation of child welfare $382,770.

Do they exclude the consideration of matters affecting maternity when they are asking for an appropriation of $382,770 for infant care, and so forth? However, Mr. President, that is not enough.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator who determines the number of employees of that bureau?

Mr. WARREN. Largely the bureau itself.

Mr. SIMMONS. Are they authorized by the law to do that?

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from North Carolina, I think, is conversant with the law and the situation. The Children's Bureau is under the Department of Labor.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Appropriations Committee recommend appropriations for the salaries of the employees of the Children's Bureau?

Mr. WARREN. To some extent, yes; in the main, no.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does Congress make appropriations for those salaries in a lump sum?

Mr. WARREN. As a matter of law, as the Senator knows, the Appropriations Committee must report and recommend the appropriations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Is the appropriation in the form of a lump sum?

Mr. WARREN. It is largely in the form of a lump sum. We provide what the chief of the bureau shall receive and what some of the others shall receive.

Mr. SIMMONS. Could we not change the law so as to make the salaries statutory?

Mr. WARREN. That is a matter which perhaps is not at issue at the time, but undoubtedly we could do so. There is no question that all of them could be made statutory.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask the Senator the question with the view of ascertaining if there is not some way by which the Appropriations Committee might eliminate part of that expenditure.

Mr. WARREN. That undoubtedly could be done; but I desire in the brief mention which I make of these matters merely to show what the committee has been required to do. I am willing to say that, as chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate, I have been accused, perhaps on both sides of the Chamber, of too great liberality. I think that charge has been made oftener than the charge that I am penurious or that I have undertaken to cut down too greatly appropriations for any particular activity or department of the Government, and I confess that, so far as my feelings are concerned, I always like to fall upon the most liberal side within the limits of consistency and safety for the Nation; but I submit that there comes a time when I can not abide my own conscience unless I bring to the attention of this body some of the items for which Congress is called upon to appropriate and to inquire where we are going to land unless we endeavor to coordinate and, as might be said, to reestablish certain governmental agencies. Take the estimate to which I have referred of $654,260 for the Children's Bureau.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator what the original appropriation was when the Children's Bureau was created?

Mr. WARREN. It was $25,000 for all purposes.

Mr. THOMAS. And how long ago was that bureau created?

Mr. WARREN. I have not looked the matter up, but I should say it has been created within 10 years. Perhaps some Senator present may locate the date exactly.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not the Senator's experience that nearly all of the bureaus and boards which we create for specific purposes increase their demands upon the Public Treasury?

Mr. WARREN. They do in every particular instance. Every last one of them does it.

Mr. THOMAS. So that, while the board proposed under the pending bill will start out with $2,000,000 or some such amount, and while the bill authorizes appropriations for a series of years, the extreme of which is $4,000,000 per annum, there is every probability that with each succeeding year the dimensions of the appropriation will increase.

Mr. WARREN. Our experience in every instance following the creation of a new department or a new bureau or a new governmental activity will prove the absolute correctness of the Senator's observation.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an observation?

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator from Colorado underestimates the amount required by this bill. It starts out with an appropriation of $2,480,000.

Mr. THOMAS. I used my figures largely for the purpose of an illustration. Of course, there is an appropriation for expenses of $480,000 a year. Then we add for the first year $2,000,000 more, and the last authorized appropriation is $4,000,000, exclusive of the annual $480,000.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator from Wyoming in connection with his consideration of this matter that there is now pending a bill offered by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON]—and that bill has the support, I am told, of the President elect, Senator HARDING—for the creation of a department of public welfare? It would seem to me, if such a department shall be organized, that the subject embraced in the pending bill will come naturally within the purview of that department. In view of the fact that there is to be a reorganization of these multitudinous bureaus and commissions and agencies and instrumentalities and departments of the Government, and in view of the fact that we are to have, if the program of the Republicans is to be carried out, as I understand that program, a department of public welfare, why would it not be the part of wisdom to relegate this matter to the future and consider it in connection with the question of the reorganization of the departments?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the Senator's conclusion is one to which I can agree; but I think the Senators who have served with me here know that I have yet to make the first real political speech on this floor. I have tried to avoid introducing politics and political matters, except in an incidental way, in the consideration of appropriations; and I may say that in the Committee on Appropriations I do not suppose there is one word out of a million of the conversation and the testimony taken in the consideration of these bills that even slants at politics. Therefore, I do not wish to say I either indorse or repudiate what may be said by any person during the excitement of a campaign, or by any candidate, whether he be Republican or Democrat.

As to the proposed department of public welfare, I assume that the Senator alludes to the bill of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] now present. I have not had the pleasure of discussing the subject with that Senator. I know that his intentions are of the best, and I believe—and I am only saying this from my knowledge of his understanding and good intentions—that he will expect that that subject will be considered by the joint committee which is to take up all of these matters and coordinate them.

I was about to proceed on that line, when a question was asked, to show the necessity of it.

UMI

Having put before you the matter of the $654,260 that is required this year, $382,770 of which is for investigation of child welfare, it might be well to say that that is asking for more than twice as much for next year as we have appropriated for the present year. That shows the exceeding interest that there is in the departments, and it shows that this estimate passed through the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury, notwithstanding the observations in his report about the necessity of economy, and so forth. I know that the desire of the Senate is to allow everything that is consistent and safe to such pursuits of human endeavor and human benefit as this bill contemplates; but to show what, in my opinion, should be coordinated, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that this $654,260 having been estimated, the Committee on Appropriations is powerless to prevent its being voted in here on the floor. The committee may decide that that is too large an estimate; in fact, they must cut some of the many estimates, unless we want to endanger bankruptcy of the Nation.

When we get on the floor with the appropriation bills there are certain, I might say, emotional subjects, certain things that touch our hearts rather than our heads, perhaps, and the committee is considered to be too penurious, and some Senator rises in his place and offers an amendment and states that the amount proposed to be appropriated is under the estimate. That places it beyond any point of order. It places it directly before the Senate for it to vote upon. How easy it is for every Senator to vote on the liberal side of something to which he has not given strict or special attention; and so, as I said before, we have got to look not only to what we have spent, or what we may bring in here in the way of bills, but what is possible to be placed upon each bill before it leaves the body, unless the brake is applied at the proper time and place; and I consider that the proper time and place is here, in Committee of the Whole, now, before the whole Senate.

Proceeding further: We passed a law—I have it here if anyone wishes to read it—last year to establish a Woman's Bureau. This is another branch, but certainly it is along the same lines. We appropriated to start it this year $8,500 for the salaries of a director and a secretary. Now the estimate comes up for that bureau for $92,500 for salaries, and also for miscellaneous purposes $57,500. In other words, while the one above it that I read we more than double, we are asked now to raise this one from $8,500 to $150,000. That is more pardonable, because it is a very modest rise compared with some of the others, and we know that it is an institution of great benefit to humanity.

Of course, some of these recommendations come from the women, dear souls, and they come before us not only on our human side of life but as to the part that they are to take in the Government. I happen to live in a State that has had complete woman suffrage for 50 years. I have lived constantly in that State during that period and have voted in every election.

I have not been elected to this body a single time except where I had the support of women the same as men, for they were exactly equal as to suffrage under the laws of Wyoming. It is true that the legislature elected me in the earlier part of my service, as the general election has done since; but women elected the legislature and were sometimes a part of it. So that from every standpoint I should be, as I have been, the constant friend and advocate of women taking a full part in the management of this Government; and it pains me beyond expression that this, among other things, is a matter that it is desirable to halt where it is until those who are, as I might say—I do not want to use the word offensively—forcing us into some action upon this subject now can have the general situation of the Treasury brought before them.

The women of this country, with the men, have been and are patriotic. The women of this country want us to preserve the credit of the country. They do not want to see us go back to the time following the Civil War, when our currency was debased, when our bonds were worth 40 cents on the dollar, when we were, you might say, in the trough of the sea, from the Civil War up to, I think, 1878. Those of us who were in that struggle and who undertook to make their way again in their homes to positions which had closed behind them when they went to war know the difficulties, the privations, and the poverty that were involved. They know the thousands of men—and it worked out well in the long run—who were driven out to other States bordering on the Pacific and in the Great West, some on account of shame because they had to take smaller places, others because of the fact that they could do better there, and others simply from pride, feeling that if they were to starve to death they would rather their bones would be on the broad prairies than among their friends in their old homes.

This Woman's Bureau and this Children's Bureau and this new duty—for it is new as this bill proposes—of taking up this maternity matter all ought to be so coordinated that we will not be having money used from three distinct directions, and there will not be this piling and doubling up of money upon us, and especially not now, when, as I said before, the Treasury is pressed more than at any other date that I can remember since away back in the Civil War times, of which I have spoken. It seems to me that the least we can do is to ask the committee that we have provided for to take up all three of these matters and make them one powerful entity, one that can handle these matters economically and liberally, rather than to go on in the manner that we would under the proposals of this bill.

The House of Representatives, evidently wincing under the galls of these extra and overlapping appropriations, started, as you know, early last session and passed a budget bill. The Senate did the same thing. It met with defeat at the White House. It started again, passed the House, and then was halted here in the tumult of political activity, perhaps I should say, and did not pass. The House immediately provided that all of the bills making appropriations should go before one committee, and that committee was made larger and divided into subcommittees, so that the subcommittees are composed of those who know the affairs of the particular departments or angles that are delegated to them; but in that way it brings them all together finally before a body of men that keep track of all together, so that they may not be troubled in the way that they have been. And yet, having done that much, the House felt it necessary, and proceeded accordingly, to take up the joint committee bill which I have mentioned, which we passed late in the last session, and the House passed it—almost one of the first things—and it is now, I suppose, awaiting the proper signature.

But quite aside from this condition, which forces us to be careful in our expenditures, this kind of legislation is reprehensible. Why are we going to mortgage the future? Why do we undertake to so distribute what we expect in the way of an income over which we shall have no further control? When I say no further control, I know what might be said—that this authorizes but does not appropriate. But Senators who have served on the Appropriations Committee, as I have, and those who have not but who have observed, know very well that when we have passed a law authorizing a matter and have made an initial appropriation and started the machinery, immediately there is propaganda started, and God knows there would be no greater propaganda than in a case like this. Senators are always besought not only here but in their homes, in the streets and alleys, and everywhere, to carry into effect authorizations. It will be estimated for, so that it will be out of our control, except that we shall have the support of the Congress. If we are going to have the support of Congress to prevent things of that kind, now is the time, in a case like this, of all times, before you commit yourselves to that kind of legislation. It is an insidious way of crawling under the tent to see the show, rather than coming to the front and saying at once, "We want so many millions of dollars for this year to protect the health of this Nation."

What backing has the chairman or any member of the Appropriations Committee on this floor when, under our rules, the estimates have been made and sent up here, to prevent any Senator and all Senators from moving to put the whole thing through in mass or any portion of it? Then we have need to depend upon the votes of the Senate, and if the bills come up, as they usually do, in a busy time of the session, when Senators are called away from their luncheon, or from some interview in the Marble Room, and the question is up, we turn to the next man and say, "What is up?" He says, "I do not know," and you say "I will vote yes." And you have to vote against the Appropriations Committee anyway to get more rather than less. The consequence is you are going to load the Government with debt, and you might as well now, at this time, decide whether you are going to pay out these millions in the immediate future, while our condition is as it is; whether you are going to force down the securities of this country until they are kicked about as they are in some foreign countries. Are you going to force the Government in the next issue of certificates it puts out to go to 6¼ or 7 per cent? Those are questions we have to decide, and we have to decide them no matter how much heartache it may cause.

The Secretary of the Treasury, who has been mindful of his duties, in his last report, which I have before me, says this, and I want Senators to pay particular attention to this:

ADDITIONAL SOURCES OF REVENUE.

The loss of revenue which would result from the adoption of the preceding recommendations, together with the loss to result even under existing law from the shrinkage of business, would have to be made up from new sources. For the convenience of the committees of the Congress which will be directly responsible for tax revision, I set out below a number of new or additional taxes capable of yielding in the aggregate as much as $2,000,000,000 a year. These estimates are based upon conditions in the midsummer of 1920, and changes in the future may affect the revenue yield of the taxes mentioned.

Source.	Tax rate.	Estimated additional yield for a 12-month period.
Normal income tax	Increase the 4 and 8 per cent rates to 6 and 12 per cent.	[1] $150,940,000
Readjusted surtax rates	(2)	[2] 230,000,000
Corporation income tax	Additional 6 per cent	[3] 465,000,000
Do	Abolish $2,000 exemption	58,000,000
Corporation undistributed profits tax:
Increase in corporation income tax, estimated at $190,000,000.	20 per cent	600,000,000
Additional revenue from the application of the surtax rates to dividends distributed by corporations to avoid the 20 per cent undistributed profits tax, estimated at $500,000,000.	Individual surtax rate
Stamp taxes, Title XI, act of 1918.	Double rates in subdivision 10 and quadruple rates in subdivisions 1-9, 11, and 12.	[4] 134,000,000
Federal license tax on use of automobiles.	50 cents per horsepower	100,000,000
Cigars	25 cents per 1,000 additional	5,000,000
Cigarettes, weighing not more than 3 pounds per 1,000.	$2 per 1,000 additional	70,000,000
Tobacco and snuff	6 cents per pound additional	8,000,000
Gasoline	2 cents per gallon	90,000,000
Admissions to theaters	10 per cent additional	70,000,000
Increase rates on following articles specified in section 900 of the revenue act of 1918: Automobiles (other than automobile trucks and wagons) and motor cycles, including automobile and motor-cycle tires, inner tubes, parts, and accessories (subdivisions 2 and 3).	5 per cent additional	100,000,000
Musical instruments (subdivision 4).	....do	13,000,000
Chewing gum (subdivision 6)	7 per cent additional	2,000,000
Candy (subdivision 9)	5 per cent additional	20,000,000
Toilet soap and toilet-soap powders (subdivision 21).	7 per cent additional	4,000,000
Jewelry and articles of precious metal (sec. 905, revenue act of 1918).	5 per cent additional	25,000,000
Motion-picture films (sec. 906, revenue act of 1918).	....do	4,000,000
Perfumes, cosmetics, and medicinal articles, a tax upon the sale by the manufacturer, producer, or importer in lieu of the tax imposed under section 907, revenue act of 1918.	10 per cent	16,000,000

[1] It is estimated that an increase of the 4 and 8 per cent normal income-tax rates to 5 and 10 per cent, respectively, would yield during a 12-month period additional revenue amounting to $75,470,000. It is also estimated that if only the 8 per cent normal income-tax rate is increased to 12 per cent, the additional revenue to be derived therefrom during a 12-month period would amount to $163,690,000.

[2] The surtax rates, shown on page 45, it is estimated, would yield the same amount, $980,000,000, as the present surtax rates. Inasmuch as the loss of revenue resulting from the abatement of surtaxes on saved or reinvested income has been estimated at $230,000,000, only this amount has been included in the table of suggestions.

[3] It is estimated that an increase in the corporation income tax from 10 to 12 per cent would yield during a 12-month period an additional revenue of $118,800,000.

[4] If the stamp taxes imposed by Title XI of the revenue act of 1918 were doubled the additional yield for a 12-month period would, it is estimated, be $90,000,000.

The following surtax rates, limited to 20 per cent on saved or reinvested income, would yield, it is estimated, as much as the present surtax rates:

Incomes.	Surtax rates.
	Saved income.	Remainder of income.
	Per cent.	Per cent.
$5,000-$6,000	2	2
$6,000-$8,000	5	5
$8,000-$10,000	10	10
$10,000-$15,000	12	12
$40,000-$50,000	20	30

These possible sources of revenue are mentioned for the information of the Congress. While I shall not attempt to discuss them in detail, attention should be called to the new or additional consumption taxes included. Reasons have been given for the belief that no valid objection exists against the employment of a moderate number of consumption taxes properly selected; but it would, in my opinion, be neither wise nor expedient to increase radically the volume of consumption taxation.

Now, Senators, when in July of this year the Secretary of the Treasury, working day and night, as they sometimes do in his department, and naturally not quite up to date in the different divisions of the country, can see a shortage of that amount, what kind of a shortage may we expect now, when the year is about to close, and we have had our attention called to losses which have occurred since July, and those which are to occur, in the various lines of business? When the products of the farmers, live stock men, and those who were stricken early, went from their upper story to the cellar and even to the subcellar in values—went down before either wages or materials or supplies were reduced—what followed, and what must follow? Of course, there must later follow less business for manufactories, and indeed we know that manufactories have been closed and are closing and have been closing ever since about May, wholly or in part.

When we come to the closing of this calendar year and the business men close their accounts, as they usually do, and develop the losses they have made and see the sliding scale which has affected them and affected others, they have to consider what they are going to do for the next year, to consider whether or not they had better reef sail, remain closed, and work perhaps part of their departments a part of the time; but the best they can hope for in nearly every instance is that they may get a new dollar for an old dollar, until, as they may say, the disorganization blows over. When we are going to be short this year, 1920, in income taxes, where are you going to get your money, unless you increase the taxes very greatly, for the coming fiscal year, 1922, for which the Congress is now appropriating?

Referring to the report of the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he suggests doubling and even more than doubling some of the present tax rates, I ask, Mr. President, that with my remarks may be printed the proposal of the Secretary of the Treasury, to which I have heretofore called attention, of a way in which the taxes might be increased in order to cover necessary expenses and also to decrease our indebtedness.

The present burden of taxes is a heavy one. No one loves taxes, local or national. During the war, when every bosom was stirred with loyalty to the Government, and the desire, at whatever cost, to protect her honor and her standing, it was easy to make the tax acceptable for the time being. But who among your correspondents, who among your constituents, ever expected that year after year the tax would have to continue as high as it was then? What Senator can say that any of the voters, that any of his constituents, are asking him to so vote on measures that taxes can not be reduced, and, worse yet, who can you expect to say, "We are ready to have them increased"?

It can be shown from the statements of the Treasury that during the last year we have paid a billion dollars of our debt, and I am sorry to have to make this statement, because I would rather say that we were getting out of debt very rapidly than otherwise, but during this last year in saving a billion dollars we sometimes failed to notice that we have sold hundreds of millions of dollars of war supplies, surplus supplies, which accounts, or did account in the last statement I saw, for seventy-odd millions more than what we are reputed to have saved; so that, as a matter of fact, in the legitimate expenses of the Government and the legitimate income, even under the prosperous year of 1919, we only remain at or nearly even, and we have not the same prospect of miscellaneous receipts for the future.

Here we are with this matter of these great estimates before us. Here we are with bills coming in to establish bureaus and departments, and you could not point to one bureau or department anywhere in the line of the business the Government has been doing that has not grown and grown fast.

I have given you two or three items of that kind. Let us take up just for a moment another instrumentality touching the human side again, through which we want to protect the health and good of the country. We have a Public Health Service for which we thought originally a half million dollars was a great deal of money. What is the condition now? We appropriated last year $8,673,720. Let us see the expectation. The past growth I have not itemized as to years, but it has been extreme. But here is the estimate for this year, and I will say that every item in it is one which we can see the necessity for if we are going to follow down to the utmost nicety of the benefits. They are asking for $13,486,618. There is a rise of some $5,000,000. Where are we going to land? Nobody can say that we can withdraw our support from the Public Health Service. But this does not cover the extreme expenditures and the great appropriations we have to make, if not for the Public Health Service proper, for the Public Health Service and the Vocational Education Board together, and the War Risk Insurance Bureau, which is along the same line, hundreds of millions of dollars in our main bills and hundreds of millions more in deficiencies. The sums have been fabulous. I do not undertake now to give the amount of the expenses, because I have not taken the time to amass it. But you know it has been thirty millions here and forty millions there and ninety-odd millions somewhere else, and all of this is going out as a result of the war.

The people were patriotic in the war, they supported the war, and they are not only willing now but anxious to support those who suffered by the war, and they are undertaking to place rightly all the soldiers who are sick or maimed.

We started in, for instance, with $40 and $60 as the very extreme pension, or compensation, I should say, for soldiers who were injured. We have raised that from time to time until it now stands at a hundred and a hundred and a quarter, outside of family allowances, which are provided otherwise; and we have appropriated for these services in the War Department bills and the other great appropriation bills.

Another reason why I have not figured those together is because we have not yet finished the year. We have the deficiency estimates yet to come, which, I regret to say, have not yet reached the House and Senate.

We not only have got to meet these certificates. The Government is a business concern. You and I go to the bank and borrow for three months or six months or a year, and we can not ask the bank to renew forever. We do not ask it. If we did ask it, our credit would be gone. We have to rustle the money to pay the debt when it becomes due, even though we may have to borrow more immediately at that bank or go to another bank and borrow, as the Government is doing, from one to pay the other.

It is true that the Government has the advantage of individuals in that it can go to the national banks and the Federal reserve banks and force them to take these certificates, you might say. In fact, no one of those banks would dare refuse to take them, and the Government therefore has that advantage. But what is the result of that? The Government absorbs the money that is in these banks and depositories that might be used to carry the farmers and the business men over this financial chasm which lies before some of them. Take, for instance, the live-stock business, where after this time of the year a man can not well secure money for anything he has to sell until the last of next summer, and he must, if he has not the money already in his possession, borrow to carry him over. There are millions of men in that condition who have to depend upon the banks to carry them over, and those banks must depend largely, under this very excellent law that we passed establishing Federal reserve banks, upon those banks to help them. But if the Government is going to continue to borrow as largely as it has been doing, we shall have just that much of frozen resources which can not be legislated out of existence.

Mr. President, I will not follow this matter further, because I think that I have at least shown wherein I feel, under the duty that I owe the Senate and the country, compelled to bring the danger of this kind of legislation before them. Before I take my seat, however, I wish to say that so long as I am permitted to occupy a place in the Senate, unless my mind shall change on this particular subject as it never has changed, I shall never support any bill which goes into the line of mortgaging the future where we have either got to repudiate, as you might say, our own paper and abrogate that legislation or be forced, whether we have the funds or not, into going to the open market and borrowing at whatever rate we may have to pay in order to meet what seems simple to-day, but what might in a crisis mean a very, very serious matter.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I wish to take the time of the Senate to explain for a few moments my position on the pending bill. I am under somewhat of an embarrassment in regard to the bill, because I have promised some of the people who were deeply interested in it to support it. I believe thoroughly in its principle. I believe that anything which will improve the condition of the public health of the country is, of course, meritorious. But I feel that under my constitutional oath of office I have no right to vote for any bill, however meritorious, when I know that the condition of the Public Treasury will not permit the expenditure of money for legislation of this character.

We are told at the present time that there is a deficit of $1,200,000,000. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. WARREN] has pointed out to the Senate that the deficiencies are not all reported at the present time. Therefore we may face a still further deficit.

I will support the measure at such time when it is shown that the condition of the Treasury will permit it, but I believe it my duty and the duty of every Senator on this floor to vote against the measure at this time because there is not sufficient money in the Treasury to make the appropriation.

Unless we stop this habit that we have pursued during the last year of passing legislation simply because it is meritorious, unless we call a halt on the continued appropriation of money on these special measures, we will have a condition in the country which will bring about a famine, and if that comes there will be no babies to take care of.

I feel at this time that it is the duty of every Senator to oppose every measure which will place a fixed charge on the Treasury permanently and for all time. The bill provides for an appropriation of $2,480,000, increasing progressively to $4,000,000. We all know that in the creation of a new bureau of public welfare or public health of this character these estimates are always under the amount actually wanted. I venture to predict that if the bill is passed at the end of the year a still further appropriation will be asked for deficiency purposes. I have every sympathy with the principle of the bill, but I do not believe that we have any right under our constitutional oath to spend the money of the taxpayers, who will call upon us for a reckoning some day in this country, when the Public Treasury shows a deficit of $1,200,000,000.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. Knowing that the Senator is a banker, I want to ask him if he makes no distinction between an expenditure and an investment? This is not an expenditure; it is an investment.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I note the statement of the Senator. I am not a banker. In answering the questions I am reminded of the story of the minister who said, "There are nineteen reasons why we can not put a new roof on the church. The first one is that we have not the money, and there is no need to mention the other eighteen."

This may be an investment, but there are other things in which we can invest. We can invest in the education of the illiterates in this country; we can invest millions of dollars in that way, and it would be an investment, as we could invest in many other beneficial measures. I am not opposing the principle of the measure, which is meritorious, but I do oppose spending $4,000,000 of the people's money at this time when we have not got it.

Mr. FRANCE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield the floor. I have finished.

Mr. FRANCE. I only wish to observe that the Senator, I think, has answered his own argument. The reason that we have illiterates in this country is because the argument of economy has been advanced when an effort has been made to secure adequate appropriations for the wiping out of the illiteracy. We meet this argument of economy whenever legislation of an ameliorative character is presented.

There is absolutely no excuse for illiteracy existing in this country, and the only reason for it is because the economy argument is always presented when great public educational measures are presented.

So far as I am concerned, I do not care to enter into an extended argument as to why this expenditure should be made or why this investment should be made. If I desired to do so I think without any question I might show where millions and millions of dollars have been absolutely thrown away by the votes of Senators on this floor for purposes unconstitutional and unjustifiable, without there being a question as to how the money was expended. We have not even asked for an accounting as to how these moneys were expended. So far as I am concerned, from now on, now that the war is over, I propose to exercise my desire for an accounting on measures which are destructive rather than upon measures which are of a constructive and upbuilding character.

We have had a great war. For four years the world has been engaged in the work of destruction. Millions of men have been forming organizations and creating great engines of destruction. So far as I am concerned, as we are entering upon the period of reconstruction, I shall not listen to any argument for economy when there are presented measures for the rehabilitation which must take place.

UMI

This I believe is a measure which is meritorious. I believe that the returns from the assessment which we are making under it will be large and I feel that is the sentiment of the majority of the Senate. I hope that we may get a vote upon the measure very promptly.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, almost the entire argument of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] was based upon the proposition that the pending bill establishes a new bureau or a new board. Under the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and which has been accepted by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], this entire work is placed under the supervision of the Children's Bureau. So no new bureau or board is created.

Again, the $480,000 to which the Senator referred, is not for the expense of the bureau, but is for apportionment among the States. Only 5 per cent of the amounts authorized in the bill is available for expense.

When the Appropriations Committee comes to report the appropriations for the Children's Bureau it can harmonize and coordinate the two purposes with perfect ease.

Mr. President, if it is desired to save money, it may be done in this way: When we shall have decided to expend $400,000,000 for the Navy for the next fiscal year—and we shall, perhaps, expend more—and to expend $300,000,000 or $400,000,000 for the Army, merely cut one appropriation $2,000,000 and cut the other appropriation $2,000,000; the loss will not be felt; the aggregate of expenditures will not be increased, and this beneficent purpose will have been subserved.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I realize the spirit which prompts the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] in voting against the pending bill, and no blame can be attached to him for that position, holding the views which he does. If I held the same views I should not hesitate to vote as he is going to vote.

This bill, however, states that it is "for the purpose of cooperating with the States in promoting the care of maternity and infancy in the several States; to provide instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy." I know of no cause with which we may deal in this body that is higher. I am a member of the Naval Affairs Committee; I believe in a great Navy; I think it is our first line of defense; and I am going to vote for a large appropriation for that Navy. It will probably require five or six hundred million dollars. This bill requires only $4,000,000 per year. We are going to appropriate at least $400,000,000 for the Army. I do not consider the Army so essential to the defense of the country as is the Navy. I feel that we could get along with half the sized army that we are appropriating money for. I should prefer to take $4,000,000 proposed to be appropriated for this purpose from the $400,000,000 that we are going to appropriate for the Army.

The Senator from New Jersey will probably feel that he is obeying his oath of office when he votes for an appropriation of $400,000,000 for the Army; and yet he thinks that he would be violating his oath of office if he voted for the little sum of $4,000,000 to assist in saving 23,000 women and 200,000 children who die every year, so it is authentically reported, from a lack of the teaching and care that this $4,000,000 is to provide. I can not conceive how the Senator from New Jersey arrives at his conclusions.

The bill does not seem to require much argument to sustain it. It is well for the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], to warn the Senate with regard to economy, but the last place that we should start in with economy is where it affects the lives and health of the women and children of the country. It is very easy for the Appropriations Committee to adjust its accounts so that this $4,000,000, out of the billions of dollars that are going to be appropriated, will not be felt.

However, it would be worth every cent which the Congress appropriates for every purpose if it would succeed in saving the lives of 200,000 children; yes, if it should save the lives of one-tenth or one-twentieth of that number it would be worth the burden that the people of this country would have to bear. We complain little of burdens where there is some chance of profit, but we are never willing gracefully to bear burdens where the only return for doing so is human life or the health of children.

The distinguished Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] made a very able speech yesterday; not against this bill, however, but it was a very able speech against our system of action in this body and the system prevailing in this country in the election of Senators.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nevada will permit me, his conclusion may be that of all my auditors, but I spoke not against the system of the election of Senators but against our methods of procedure, and also against the bill.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I know the Senator from Colorado well, yet I can never tell accurately from his speech how he is going to vote.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator would listen to my speeches, perhaps his criticism would be more just and correct.

Mr. PITTMAN. I realize that my criticism was only partially correct when I charged that the Senator was fighting the system and not the bill. Now he intimates that he is fighting the bill, and I accept his statement.

Mr. THOMAS. There is no intimation about it; it is an assertion.

Mr. PITTMAN. I distinctly remember when the distinguished Senator from Colorado did me the kindness on one occasion to vote for a bill of mine.

He spoke on this floor for two hours against the bill and probably lost me five or six very good votes, and then he voted for the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask the Senator if the bill was carried?

Mr. PITTMAN. The bill carried in spite of the speech of the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the usual result of my addresses in this body.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of complimenting the Senator's speech. As I was saying, it is one of the most able speeches to which I have ever listened, with regard to a subject that was not before the Senate, but in this the speech is not peculiar. The speech dealt with a fear that is alleged to animate Members of this body; it dealt with the lack of statesmanship of the present age; it called attention to the tendency of Senators to listen to and to give consideration to petitions and to the opinions of great masses of people throughout the country; it deplored the fact that statesmanship on the part of individual Senators could be influenced by the words and opinions of the voters of the country. That is one theory; but there seems to be a growing theory in the Nation that it is better to listen to what the majority of the people think. As a matter of fact, that theory seems to be winning in the country. So far as I am concerned, I will admit here that I am always afraid that I am wrong when an overwhelming majority of the people hold a different view from me.

Mr. THOMAS. I assume, therefore, that the Senator will now join the Republican Party.

Mr. PITTMAN. No; and I expect to be reelected as a member of the Democratic Party by virtue of the views I hold.

Mr. THOMAS. I certainly hope the Senator will.

Mr. PITTMAN. I am very sorry that the Senator was not reelected in November last. I did everything in my power to reelect him, although my efforts may have hurt him.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator need waste no tears over my defeat. I shall very soon return to private and therefore to a far more congenial life; but if the Senator wants to return I am for him, notwithstanding the fact that he does not accept the logic of his own position and join the Republican Party.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Republican Party is a very great party, and I have a higher admiration for it now than I had a few months ago. I probably have more admiration for it now than I will have two years hence; but, be that as it may, the candidate who holds to the view that true statesmanship consists in differing with great masses of the people with regard to policies and principles, in my opinion, will not long be in public life, whether he is a member of the Republican Party or of the Democratic Party.

Of course, I know that is not the primary consideration of statesmanship. The primary consideration, of course, is to bring about the accomplishment of a good purpose. The Senator from Colorado is always trying to accomplish a good purpose, but he fights those things that are settled; he fights to accomplish something that is determined finally. He is still fighting the lost cause of the Civil War; he undoubtedly believes in the constitutional right of slavery; he believes that the cause of the South was right. He would have fought for slavery then, and he would fight for slavery now.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not like to interrupt the Senator, but surely he does not wish to misrepresent me upon the subject of slavery or upon any other subject. I have believed that slavery was constitutional. I think Abraham Lincoln also believed it, and so stated on numerous occasions; it required a constitutional amendment to abolish it; but when the Senator says that I am still fighting the cause of the Civil War, that I would fight for human slavery now as I did then, he makes a statement against which I must protest, for it is not the fact. I was raised in the South and amidst southern institutions, and I believed—and I say it without shame—in all I was then taught to believe by my people, who were as capable and conscientious as others disagreeing with them. That was a good many years ago.

I came North shortly after the war, and in my new environment I soon learned that there were two sides to every question; that there was nothing more hateful than human slavery; that it was eternally wrong; and that the issue of the Civil War was settled correctly and, I trust, forever. I am glad the war ended as it did, and, in my humble way, I shall always oppose slavery in every form in which it manifests itself, however unsuccessful my efforts may prove.

Mr. PITTMAN. It seems, Mr. President, that I continue to do injustice to the Senator unintentionally. What I tried to convey was that he is still fighting in behalf of hopeless causes.

Mr. THOMAS. That I assent to most heartily, Mr. President. I have been doing that ever since I have been in this body.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, no one doubts the wisdom of the division of our Government into its various municipalities, into its subdivisions. State rights, however, were larger in the beginning than they are now, and it was proper that they should be larger in their scope, because the States were remote from each other in those days, and legislation of nearly every character had to be left to the States, because the people of the States were the only ones who had knowledge of the local conditions. But with the growth of the Nation, with the growth of transportation and intercommunication, these reasons for exclusive State action became of less force. We know more about the conditions in every State now, and that which takes place in every State now affects everyone in every other State. It is impossible to have an epidemic in one State without its communicating to another State, unless there is a proper system of quarantine. We can not stand to-day and see slavery of any kind or character in one State and say that it is not our concern and does not affect us in another State. It affects us everywhere.

Why, the time was when each county took charge of the building of its own roads, and when a county failed to build good roads it affected no one except the people in the county. But to-day, with rapid transportation by automobile and other means, one county, by refusing to build a link in a chain of roads could greatly affect the use and depreciate the value of the roads in all the other counties of the State, except for State action. For that reason, it became essential for the States to take supervision over the highways through every county in the State, and, on a larger scale, it becomes essential for the Federal Government to take charge of certain matters that rightfully should be attended to by the States, because the States will not attend to them.

The States should provide the appropriations and the means of educating the people with regard to the matters provided in this bill; but few of the States have done it, and the death and disease that is spreading throughout the whole country by reason of this failure of State action is affecting every State, and therefore it is the duty of the Federal Government to act. It is forced on the Federal Government, and it does not lie in the mouth of any State rights man or the governor of any State or the people of any State to complain against this legislation when the conditions that require the legislation are due to the negligence of those same complainants.

This bill is going to become a law, and it should become a law.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, may we have a vote on the pending question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a committee amendment pending, and the Chair understood that the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] has an amendment to offer, which he has not yet presented.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I suggest the absent of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ball	Harrison	Norris	Spencer
Beckham	Heflin	Nugent	Stanley
Capper	Henderson	Overman	Sterling
Chamberlain	Johnson, Calif.	Page	Sutherland
Colt	Kendrick	Phipps	Swanson
Curtis	Kenyon	Pittman	Thomas
Dillingham	Keyes	Poindexter	Townsend
Fernald	King	Ransdell	Trammell
Fletcher	Kirby	Sheppard	Walsh, Mass.
France	McKellar	Smith, Ga.	Wolcott
Gerry	McNary	Smith, S. C.
Harris	New	Smoot

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. DIAL].

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-six Senators have answered to the roll call. There is not a quorum present. The Secretary will call the names of the absentees.

The assistant secretary called the names of the absent Senators, and Mr. BRANDEGEE, Mr. MCLEAN, Mr. SIMMONS, Mr. WALSH of Montana, and Mr. WARREN answered to their names when called.

Mr. BORAH, Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, Mr. HALE, Mr. MOSES, Mr. MCCUMBER, and Mr. HITCHCOCK entered the Chamber and answered to their names.

Mr. HEFLIN. My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is unavoidably absent on account of illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is an apparent quorum present.

Mr. KING obtained the floor.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. Will the Senator yield for a moment and permit us to offer amendments which will perfect the bill before he proceeds? I think there will be practically no debate upon them.

Mr. KING. It may be that if an amendment or two which I purpose offering should be adopted, it might modify the amendments which the Senator desires to offer, but not being advised as to the character of the amendments I am unable to state.

Mr. FRANCE. It is possible that some of these amendments might so alter the bill that the Senator would not care to press his amendment.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to waiting until the Senator offers the amendments which the committee desires.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the pending amendment, to strike out section 8. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out section 8 in the following words:

> That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its board described in section 4, submit to the Federal board detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act. These plans shall include the provisions to be made in the State for the administration of the act; the provision of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public-health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas. If the Federal board finds these plans to be in conformity with provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

> That the cooperative work in promoting the care of maternity and infancy shall consist of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas; and this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Federal board and any State receiving the benefits of this act.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator from Maryland having this bill in charge what reasons prompted the committee to offer this amendment. It seems to me that the amendment, if it prevails, would compel the adoption by the States, in order to secure the aid herein provided for, of a plan which might be too elaborate, and to engage in activities and services so minute and individual and local in character that they should be left to local communities or to the people themselves. For instance, the bill contains a provision that the States "shall" be compelled to furnish hospitals, particularly in remote areas, and medical and nursing care. Does the Senator believe that this bill should prescribe in positive terms exactly the course which shall be pursued by the States in dealing with these matters and the character of aid which shall be rendered? Does it not impose too much of a straitjacket system upon the States and leave too little to their discretion?

It would seem to be the purpose of the bill to standardize everything carried by the bill; to reduce all activities and operations to a dead, monotonous level; to deprive the States of any initiative or discretion. As a matter of fact, we know that that is the policy of the General Government, to place everyone on a Procrustean bed, and to compel uniformity. There is too much uniformity in the world. It is lack of uniformity that spells progress. The curse of bureaucracy is "uniformity." Incompetent Government officials attempt to force upon States and State officials obsolete or archaic methods and policies, and the result is either confusion or revolt or stagnation. The States are making progress. They do not want the paralyzing hand of Federal bureaucracy and incompetency laid upon them.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, in reply to that question I will say that the criticism implied in the question would be a perfectly proper one if the language were susceptible of such an interpretation. It was not the purpose of the committee to make any hard and fast language in outlining the general str-poses of the bill. I think that if the Senator will read the amendment again he will see that hospital care, for example, is not compulsory, the language being to the effect that the care shall be either at home or at a hospital, the matter being left, of course, to the discretion of the local authorities.

I think that there will be no difficulty in putting upon this language such an interpretation as will leave it largely to the discretion of the local authorities as to how the work shall be carried on, and that was the purpose of the committee in framing the amendment.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Furthermore, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, the bill specifically forbids the use of any of the money appropriated hereunder for the erection of buildings or hospitals of any kind, section 14 concluding as follows:

> No portion of any moneys apportioned under this act for the benefit of the States shall be applied, directly or indirectly, to the purchase, erection, preservation, or repair of any building or buildings or equipment, or for the purchase or rental of any buildings or lands.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator from Maryland that the impression seems to me—and I know some Senators have that impression—that this measure was offered merely for the purpose of obtaining data relative to maternity and the hygiene of children and the dissemination of that data among the States. But an examination of the bill shows that its scope is much broader. As I now understand the measure, it puts the Federal Government into the States and calls for the employment of nurses, the erection or construction of hospitals or consultation centers, whatever that may be, and the furnishing of doctors and nursing care, and hospitals when necessary, so that it is clear that the scope of the bill is far beyond what many have understood its terms to be. The Federal Government, in cooperation with the States, must furnish hospital care and nurses and medical attention to those who come within the scope of the bill; and there is nothing, of course, as I read the bill, determining just exactly those who may be entitled to its benefits. Are the poor and needy alone to be the objects of its benefactions? If so, where is the line to be drawn, and who is to draw it? Is the test of benefits to be measured by the amount of wealth the individual or family may possess? Is it contemplated that this is the beginning of a policy to have the United States take over the entire field of biology, of birth and marriage, and the education of the children of the people? Is the Government to furnish hospitals and medical care for all the people? Is the Federal Government ultimately to assume the control of the children of the Nation and care for them until they reach majority? These questions naturally arise when one studies the provisions of this bill.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, in reply to that I will say that the enlargement of the scope of the bill is in reality merely an enlargement of the scope of the discretion which the local authorities may exercise in the administration of the measure. The language "and care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary" instead of directing that such care shall be given by the State merely enlarges the discretionary power of the local authorities in such a way that they may use the funds if, in their judgment it may be necessary, for actual care.

The whole purpose of the bill, and the amount of the appropriation, would indicate, I think, that it was not contemplated that any large numbers of patients would be accommodated at hospitals. More of this amount would be needed perhaps to accommodate patients, for example, in one State. I think that language merely enlarges the scope of the discretion of the authorities, rather than placing a narrow and arbitrary definition of what the duties of the State should be. I think if the Senator will reconsider the amendment in that light he will see the force of what I say.

Mr. KING. May I suggest to the Senator that in the second line of the amendment now under consideration there is an imperative word employed? It says:

> That the cooperative work in promoting the care of maternity and infancy shall consist of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas.

It is obvious that if the States desire to secure the benefits of this act, they will be compelled to carry out the kind of "cooperation" that is indicated in the bill and such as the General Government prescribes. It is not optional. What is to be the character of the cooperative work? There "shall" be not only instruction in hygiene through nurses, but there shall be consultation centers and other "suitable methods," and there shall be provision for medical and nursing care for mothers and infants, and hospitals when necessary.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I have indicated the purpose of the language of the amendment. In view of what the Senator has said, if he would care to offer an amendment changing that word "shall" to "may," I think that, so far as I am concerned at least, it will be satisfactory. Some language is necessary, as the Senator undoubtedly will concede, in which to outline the general purpose of the measure, and this language was designed to do that very thing. If the Senator would care to offer that amendment to the amendment, I should not personally feel like combating it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator offers that amendment allow me to suggest what I think, at least, would be a more proper amendment, namely, after the word "methods," in line 7, to strike out all down to the word "areas," on line 10, so you would strike out "and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital, when necessary, especially in remote areas." That would leave intact all the provisions relating to instruction and the matter of promoting the care of maternity and infancy, but at the same time would not compel the Government itself to enter into the business of furnishing nurses and doctors to take care of all the maternity cases in the United States, because if there is reason and justice in taking care of them in one instance it is equally reasonable and just in other cases, the only difference being that in some instances, perhaps, the mother or the father could pay and in other instances they could not. But you are putting in an opening wedge upon this proposition of Government care of the individual that will swell more rapidly than any paternalistic wedge that has ever been adopted by the Congress. As I have to leave in one minute, I want to express myself upon the bill, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. President, I think the Government can do nothing that is more valuable than to give information which will alleviate distress, and especially which will prevent illness, with all its consequences. I think all the education we could give along that line is most proper. But when the Government itself goes beyond instructing and enters into the business of taking care of the individuals constituting the American citizenship it has made a leap into the arena of paternalism from which it can never escape.

Let me call attention to the fact as it actually presents itself. We first introduce this bill and pass it, which provides for the taking care of the mothers and the infants. Admitting that beneficial results will follow, where are we going to stop?

If there is 1 case of death by reason of maternity there are 8 or 10 cases of death by reason of tuberculosis. I believe that a fair estimate of death from this dread white disease amounts to more than 250,000 a year. Poor boys, poor girls, poor children who can not get out into the open air and live in the right kind of climate are dying by the hundreds of thousands. Now, if we are to furnish nurses and furnish money in the case of maternity, tell me any good reason why we should not furnish the same care for those who are dying of tuberculosis and kindred diseases? Why should we stop with the one case? If the one class are eight times greater in numbers, then why should we not also provide for those who constitute the far greater number?

How many children are dying yearly from diphtheria? Are we furnishing nurses for them? Are we furnishing doctors for them? Why should not we furnish doctors for those who are afflicted with diphtheria where the father and mother are unable to furnish that medical assistance?

Then, again, there are hundreds of thousands of children dying yearly of typhoid and other fevers. Why should we restrict our governmental activities to one class of cases? The only answer that I can conceive of is the reply that this is but the first step and we will reach the other sooner or later. I believe that is true. I think we will have to reach them sooner or later if we take this first step. But have you contemplated the enormous cost of extending this help to all the suffering people in this country?

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. FRANCE. I do not need to remind the learned Senator, who is so well posted on all the Government operations, that we are already expending large sums of money for the prevention of typhoid fever, diphtheria, and the white plague.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is what we are doing and properly doing, but we are not providing nurses for them; we are not providing the medicine; we are not taking care of them in any way. The only point that I seek to make is that there is no line of demarcation by which you can differentiate between the several classes of human ailments and say that this class shall have assistance and this class shall have none.

Mr. FRANCE. I was not criticizing the Senator's able argument which he was making. I realize its force. Of course, personally I hold the view that preventable disease and illiteracy are chargeable to the Government. There is only one argument against the elimination of illiteracy and preventable disease, and that is the economy argument. It has been proven that typhoid fever and tuberculosis can be stamped out by the proper governmental action. I hope that the very able argument of the Senator, and his arguments are all very able, may serve to point the way to the Senate, which is, of course, the way in the protection of a feeling of great responsibility by both the Federal and local governments for the existence of these evils, which can be readily eliminated by proper governmental action, an action which, I may say, must be taken both by local and by the Federal Government, because we have already come to a realization that separate State action is not adequate for the meeting of a nation-wide condition.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, as I said, I think the Senator agrees with me, in part at least, that this is the entering wedge for enormous appropriations in the very near future. If there is any one thing that the public is afflicted with in the world, it is disease. If there is anything that is expensive in the world, it is the attempt to live longer and to cure our ailments; and as we all have them, we would all be more or less the wards of the Government to take care of our several ailments.

I read in the Star a few weeks ago that in one of our departments provision is made for all Government employees in that department to get free medical service and free medicine whenever they are afflicted. So that if a person is lucky enough to be employed in one of the Government departments, he or she can go to the dispensary and get everything from a corn plaster to the most expensive medicine without the payment of a cent. He and she will have dentists to look after their teeth, the oculist to look after their eyes, and all these people are to be furnished this service at the expense of the Government, while the poor clerk down in the department store, man or woman, must pay that expense in added taxes, although his or her earnings are not to exceed two-thirds, and in most cases not to exceed one-half, that of the Government employee.

I do not like that paternalistic idea. If we are going into the subject of furnishing medical aid for any class of American citizens, then in Heaven's name let us make it a public affair and treat them all alike. There is no more reason for furnishing a nurse to one than there is to the other class, provided that they are both so situated that they can not pay the cost of the nurse.

I think Senators must agree with me that that is a fair proposition and that we ought not to embark in the particular feature of furnishing doctors and medicines and nurses for one class of people to be paid for by another class who perhaps need the service just as badly as the first class. I have not been blind to the operation of some of the charities here in the city where free service is rendered. The ordinary person of Caucasian blood has some pride about ever accepting charity in any form, and that person will deprive himself or herself of almost anything on earth rather than to accept it. There is another class of another race that has not that same pride, and this class will receive the charitable aid while the other class, because of its pride and its sensitiveness, its manhood and womanhood, is deprived of it.

I insist that we either ought to make it a general policy that we are to furnish nurses and medicines and doctors wherever the patient is unable to pay for it, if it is to save life or health, or else not embark in it at all. I believe that the lives of thousands and hundreds of thousands of people have been saved by reason of the information that has gone out, issued weekly and monthly by the Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis. I think that is true of other societies, and I believe the Government could give information that would be most useful and very beneficial in these maternity cases.

But, Mr. President, I do not wish to have the Government embark in a course of becoming in fact a caretaker of the poor or merely a charitable institution. Do all we can to educate the people, help them all we can in the matter of how to take care of themselves, spend any amount of money that may be necessary to give them proper information, but stop right there, because if we go beyond it there is no stopping place. That is why I have suggested to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that it would be better to cut out that portion which provides for the actual medical attendance and the furnishing of nurses by the Government of the United States. I wish to vote for this bill for the good there is in it. I wish I could eliminate that section which I feel is dangerous. If it can not be eliminated, then I must vote for the good with the hope that the evil may be minimized.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am compelled to leave the Chamber to meet with a committee from the House of Representatives——

Mr. FRANCE. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for permission to withdraw the committee amendment for the moment in order that the Senator from Utah may offer his amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The committee amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. SMOOT. For the reasons I have stated I desire to offer the following amendment to the bill. If Senators will kindly excuse me, I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to the fact that my amendment should be followed with an amendment to section 15 to make it conform to the amendment which I have already offered. The chairman of the committee will, I believe, offer the amendment which I suggest to section 15, which makes the bill conform to the amendment that I have offered, if my amendment is agreed to.

I will state briefly that the amendment is for the purpose of eliminating from the bill the Federal board of maternal and infant hygiene. It is to place the management of the activities under the Children's Bureau, and provides that whatever activities are had in the future shall be under the direction of the Children's Bureau. The amendment covers that question with the single exception of the amendment to which I have referred in section 15, which the chairman of the committee will offer.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. May I inquire of the Senator from Utah whether it makes this bureau responsible to the Department of Labor or does it leave it an independent body?

Mr. SMOOT. The Children's Bureau is to stay under the Department of Labor. It simply adds to the duties of the Children's Bureau the additional labors required by the bill, rather than to have a separate bureau for that purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

The READING CLERK. On page 1 strike out all of line 10, and on page 2 strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 and substitute therefor the following:

For the use of the Children's Bureau, for the promotion of maternal and infant hygiene, for the administration of this act, and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator whether that contemplates that the administration of this bill shall be committed to the Children's Bureau?

Mr. SMOOT. To the Children's Bureau.

Mr. KING. I have not the amendment before me, but I was about to propose an amendment to the bill providing that the administration of the measure shall be left with the United States Public Health Service. That is an organization which is familiar with matters concerning the health of the people; it has to do with the public health of the people in all the States. This organization is nation-wide in its activities and in its functions. It would seem that, instead of creating another organization, which will have to do with medical matters and the health of the people, it would be better to place the administration of this bill upon an organization which is already functioning, and which in the very nature of things will be perpetuated.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment provides that—

The Chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, acting through the agency of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act.

The amendment also provides that the advisory committee shall consist of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education.

In the first place, I wanted to prevent the creation of any more bureaus in the Government. I recognize that the suggestion of my colleague would have that same effect; but, as the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service is one of the advisory committee, together with the other two members of the board I have named, I thought perhaps it would be better to have it administered by the Children's Bureau than by the Public Health Service. I think my colleague recognizes the fact that there is about as much duplication of work in the Public Health Service as there is in any bureau of the Government. I do not want to afford them any further excuse for coming to Congress and asking for an appropriation of more than $4,000,000 a year to carry on the work contemplated by the pending bill. I recognize the fact that this agency, if established, is going to cost a great deal of money. I know the bill provides that after a few years the appropriation shall be $4,000,000 plus $480,000, or a total of $4,480,000 a year; but if the provisions of the act shall be carried out and no favoritism shown and the object of the legislation shall be effectuated, or approximately so, of course it will mean millions of dollars more. It will be for the Senate to decide whether the administration of the proposed act shall be placed under the Children's Bureau, in connection with the advisory committee, or whether it shall be placed under the Public Health Service. I thought under the circumstances it had better be placed in the hands of the Children's Bureau under the Department of Labor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask some Senator who is familiar with the real purpose of the pending bill whether it was not originally intended that its administration should be similar to the administration of the act passed by Congress appropriating money for the promotion of the construction of highways; in other words, that the real administration on the ground should be by the States, and that the appropriation should be considered a contribution by the United States Government.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me if that is true that there ought to be some amendment to the bill. In section 4, for instance, the provision is made that the State authorities may be created, but they are only given power "to cooperate as herein provided with the Federal board in the administration of the provisions of this act," whereas it seems to me that the State authorities in the different States should be given the power to administer the act on the ground. Then again, in section 6, a most sweeping grant of power is given to the bureau. That section provides—

> That out of the amounts authorized under this act the Federal board is authorized to employ such assistants, clerks, and other persons in the city of Washington and elsewhere, to rent buildings outside of the city of Washington—

There is no limitation of any sort. They are given carte blanche to employ people at any salaries they may please and as many as they please.

Then they are given the authority to rent buildings outside of the city of Washington. That means they may go into every State of the Union and rent buildings for the purpose of administering this proposed act, instead of allowing the States to administer it. They are given authority "to purchase such supplies, material, equipment, office fixtures, and apparatus, and to incur such travel and other expense as it may deem necessary for carying out the purposes of this act."

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I had that matter in mind when I made the statement that an appropriation of more than $4,480,000 would be required in a very few years.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The bill appears to me to provide for the administration of the law practically by this bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. It does.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And to place no limitation whatever upon the expenditures of the bureau except possibly that contained in section 5, which indicates that for expenses it may employ not more than 5 per cent of the total amount appropriated in any one year.

We proceed in the first year to appropriate $2,000,000. That is supposed to be for the States, but, as I understand, that amount may be used for the expenses of the bureau, and it seems that something like $100,000 can be used by it for activities outside of the city of Washington very largely.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator that I think that is a very small amount if the object of the bill is carried out. I do not wish to be deceived; I am not going to deceive myself; and I do not think Congress ought to be deceived into thinking that this appropriation will be confined to the amount which is named in this bill. That will not happen any more than it happened in connection with the Children's Bureau, when we were told at the time the bureau was created and $10,000 appropriated for it that the expenses of the bureau would never at any time amount to more than $25,000 a year. We now have the estimates for the Children's Bureau for the coming fiscal year and find they are between seven hundred and eight hundred thousand dollars.

So I want to be perfectly frank with the Senator, and say that, so far as I am personally concerned, I will not be surprised if when this bill shall become a law—and I think it will become a law—at some time before the $4,000,000 annual appropriation shall be reached, or if not previous to that time then shortly following that time, the appropriation will be very much more than that provided now in the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am not altogether disturbed over the amount appropriated. What I dislike to see is the creation of a great machinery here in Washington when I had been led to believe that the purpose was merely to use the organization here as a small clearing house and actually to encourage each of the 48 States to put into operation the work of administering the law. I thought that was the conception of the bill—that Congress was to appropriate the money to encourage each State in the administration of the law—but it seems to me that as the bill is drawn the power is all left in the bureau here, and that it will multiply the number of its employees and continue to rent offices and incur expenses, so that the money we appropriate, instead of going for the alleviation of existing conditions and for securing the result aimed at by the measure, will be consumed in expenses.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Nebraska that there is a limitation on expenses of 5 per cent of the amount authorized in the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have already cited the fact that that is the only limitation; that there is no limitation on the amount of salaries. I, for my part, distinctly object to a bureau in Washington renting quarters in all of the 48 States of the Union to carry on business. The bureau ought to operate here in Washington, and it ought not to be permitted to rent quarters in various States and undertake to administer the law when its administration should be left to the State authorities under the instructions of this bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that unless the bureau is allowed to go into the various States the object of the bill will not be accomplished. The bureau here will have to have some kind of headquarters in every State in the Union, and perhaps a number of headquarters in each State in the Union, in order that the work provided for may be carried on. It is true that there is a limitation of the amount that can be expended in the District of Columbia to 5 per cent of the appropriation. On $4,000,000, 5 per cent will amount to $200,000. The remainder is to be expended under the provisions of the bill outside of the District of Columbia. If I had time to go into the bill in detail and consider it more closely than I have had an opportunity to do, I might suggest other changes than those which I have suggested. I do not think, for instance, that it ought to provide unlimited power to pay any sort of salary that may be decided upon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, there is no limit, so far as I can see, in the section under discussion, and, so far as I am concerned, I am distinctly opposed to having a bureau in Washington rent headquarters in every State in the Union. That is what they will have the power to do under the section.

Mr. SMOOT. How will the provisions of the bill be carried into operation unless they do have such power?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. They can very well operate through the quarters occupied by the State authorities.

Mr. SMOOT. Then we will have to change the theory of the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have a Labor Bureau now that is operating in the various States, but it operates generally through existing agencies in each State, and there is no reason why a bureau of this kind can not act in a similar way. If we give the bureau authority to rent quarters in each of the 48 States, they are going to consume the funds in expenses and in creating a great piece of governmental machinery.

Mr. SHEPPARD. How can they do that in view of the limitation of 5 per cent? It is not a limitation merely as to the District of Columbia, but applies everywhere.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The limitation can be changed in the appropriation bill.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do.

Mr. FRANCE. I desire to say that the Senator's interpretation of the bill is correct. This work should be carried on by the local authorities under the supervision of the bureau here. That is the whole tenor of the bill. If the Senator had had an opportunity of reading it more closely, I think he would realize that that method is provided for—the decentralized method of having the local authorities carry on the work. So far as I myself am concerned, I should be very glad, if the Senator cares to offer such an amendment as he has suggested, to see modified the authority to rent buildings outside of Washington. I can not think that it was the contemplation that the bureau chief should rent buildings in the States for carrying on this work, and I repeat that I should be very glad to accept such an amendment as the Senator has suggested, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think that such an amendment would materially improve the section.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, of course, the Senator having the bill in charge can do as he pleases; but does he not think it will be absolutely necessary that some agency outside of the District of Columbia, representing this organization, shall have a headquarters?

For instance, take California, Arizona, and New Mexico. Suppose they were made a district. It seems to me it would be very much cheaper to have a headquarters there than to have the employees and representatives of the organization paying traveling expenses from Washington to every State in the Union and back again to Washington. They will have to have a headquarters somewhere, it seems to me, to administer this bill as it ought to be administered; and if you are going to prevent the renting of quarters anywhere outside of the District of Columbia, I think the expenses will be a great deal more than the rent which would be paid, and traveling expenses of the representatives in going from one end of the country to the other.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I realize the force of what the Senator from Utah says; but it seems to me that under section 8 the local authorities would be authorized to establish consultation centers and to rent headquarters for carrying on this work, and it seems to me that is the proper method, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska, and I think it is the method contemplated under the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, the experience is that at the present time there are representatives of a number of Washington bureaus that are not required to rent headquarters in the various States. The Government has buildings in every State, and my recollection is that the representatives of the Department of Labor occupy positions in courthouses or in other Government buildings wherever they are; and other representatives of Government bureaus are always able to find, either in the capitol of the State with which they are cooperating or elsewhere, the necessary places.

But if you open to any bureau here in Washington the power to establish a separate headquarters in each of the 48 States, you open the door very wide to the building up of an enormous department, and it will come rapidly. The place will be rented, and there will have to be a clerk in it, and there will have to be a telephone in it, and there will have to be rent paid, and a gas bill, and an electric bill, and a great machinery will soon develop.

I hope this bill will be changed so that I can give it my support, as I originally expected to, upon the theory that while the Government of the United States appropriates this large sum of money and coordinates the activities of the various States by the bureau here in Washington, it will leave to the authorities in each State the active administration and application of the law. I think that is where it can be made most efficient and most acceptable to the various States.

I do not know whether it is in order to offer this amendment at the present time or whether there is an amendment pending.

Mr. SMOOT. There is an amendment pending.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, if that inquiry is directed to me, I should be very glad to see the amendment of the Senator from Utah adopted, because I feel that it materially improves the administrative features of the bill; and then, with another slight amendment which I shall offer to make the remainder of the bill conform after the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Utah and after the adoption of the committee amendment, I shall be very glad to have the Senator from Nebraska suggest an amendment to the particular portion of the bill to which he refers—that portion authorizing the chief of the bureau to rent buildings outside of Washington. This bill is very carefully drawn, so that this work will be decentralized by being carried on by the local authorities.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I offer the following amendment to the amendment offered by my colleague: Strike out all of lines 10, 11, 12, and the words "called 'the Children's Bureau,'" in line 13 of his amendment to section 3, and insert in lieu thereof the words "the United States Public Health Service," so that it will read:

The United States Public Health Service shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act.

If the amendment I have just suggested is adopted, then a like amendment would be necessary in other parts of the amendment offered by my colleague.

I think that the execution of this bill should be lodged with some one particular bureau or agency and not left to a multitude of officials, but I suggested to my colleague a moment ago that in my opinion the Public Health Service of the United States is the best equipped bureau or agency of the Government for carrying this measure into effect.

I have understood the provisions of this bill to be along the lines indicated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I was very much surprised when I came to read it, in view of the statements which have been made to me by many proponents of the bill, to find that it is an attempt to build up here in Washington a great bureaucracy which will extend its tentacles into every State of the Union.

We were led to believe that the purpose was to have specialists and competent officials of the Government collect data with respect to maternity and hygiene, and then to distribute that information to the various States through the instrumentality of such State organizations as might be provided; but an examination of the measure reveals that it is very much like many other measures which have found approval at the hands of Congress. Measures are offered, apparently innocent upon their face, but when they are enacted into law they become the basis of gigantic Federal agencies, which encroach upon the States, and compel the appropriation of vast sums from the Federal Treasury. A measure which apears to be serving some benevolent and proper purpose becomes a huge bureaucratic machine, which seeks the subversion of State functions and the aggrandizement of the Federal Government.

Unquestionably this measure in its present form will be the basis for the creation of a gigantic, bureaucratic Federal organization. It will not be content with furnishing data to the States, but it will insist upon going into the States and taking charge of administrative matters there. It will not be content with furnishing data and information relative to the subjects mentioned in the bill, but it will seek to establish hospitals and consultative centers, and promote organizations of nurses, and take over the conduct of matters which should be under the cognizance of private individuals or by the States themselves.

It is manifest from an examination of the bill that it contains the germs of perennial growth and development, and that it will create an organization in force or power which will eventuate in the people looking to Congress for appropriations to care for them in sickness and in death. It will enervate the people, destroy the individual sense of responsibility, and educate the State to place upon the Federal Government duties which it should perform. I predict that within a few years, if this bill becomes a law, there will be thousands of Federal employees operating under its provisions and millions of dollars appropriated annually by the General Government. Not four millions will be required, but forty millions, and doubtless very much more. If we begin to establish hospitals and nursing centers and supply medical care in all of the States of the Union for maternity cases and to care for children, the Federal Government will soon have upon its hands the performance of a task which will increase its burdens and demand heavier taxes from the people.

The States will soon cease to look after State hospitals, if there shall be State hospitals, and the people, little by little, will make their demands upon the Federal Government to furnish medical care and hospital care and nursing in all maternity cases. This will be followed by demands from the employees of the Government who will desire to extend their functions and increase their power and emoluments that aid be given the mothers and the children for an indefinite period. It will be insisted that they should be supplied with homes and food and clothing, and that efforts should be made to supply them with work and positions. Thus the view will be pressed that the Federal Government should help all persons who are afflicted or diseased or insane, and that this organization or some other Federal agency should undertake this additional work. Already we see a weakening of individualism and individual responsibility and a growing feeling that the United States must or should care for the people.

But to return. The Public Health Service is already in existence, and while it is a most extravagant organization, costing enormous sums annually, it is equipped to perform the work called for by this measure.

From my investigations, Mr. President, I am led to believe that the Public Health Service contains some very excellent officials and medical men of ability and high standing, men who have given years to the study of those questions which are properly cognizable by a bureau of that character. The activities of the Public Health Service are not confined to Washington, but their activities extend to all of the States. We have made appropriations of thousands of dollars to enable that organization to study diseases and sanitation, and all cognate questions, and to make distribution of the information obtained to the various States of the Union.

Now, if we have a medical organization already functioning, and if there are hospitals already in existence, owned by the Government, and more to be erected, and if this organization is engaged in obtaining data respecting the diseases prevalent in the United States, why not utilize this organization? Why create another one? If we create another organization, manifestly we will need doctors and nurses and medicines and instruction and the collection of data for distribution. We now have an organization which can accomplish those things, one which is collecting data and disseminating information among the people.

Mr. President, I am told that the Public Health Service has even instituted researches among the schools for the purpose of giving information to parents as to the diseases of children and the methods which should be employed to promote the health of the children. The object undoubtedly is praiseworthy, but there may be differences of opinion as to the power of the bureau to carry on such work.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be the act of wisdom, and it would certainly be a logical thing to do, to commit to an organization which is now functioning, which is extensively operating in the United States, the administration of the provisions of this bill. The amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] calls for the services of the Public Health Service for consultative and administrative purposes. If this organization is to be called into action to aid in the execution of the bill, why not devolve upon it the entire administration of the bill? It is obvious that those who drew the bill felt that the Public Health Service should be consulted in the administration of the act, and therefore the original bill, as I recall, provides that the United States Public Health Service shall constitute, in connection with other branches of the Government, an advisory board to aid in the execution of the act.

If the Public Health Service is to constitute a portion of the advisory board, it is clear that the drafters of the bill felt that its superior knowledge and the experience of its members would be of incalculable benefit in the execution of the bill. I repeat, Mr. President, that if this organization, composed of some of the best medical men of the United States, is to be employed in a consultative way, the whole responsibility of enforcing the act should devolve upon that organization.

Just one word further, Mr. President, not quite apropos of the amendment, but along the lines indicated by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]. I do not agree with the position taken by my colleague, Mr. President, if I understood his position, that there should be headquarters for this organization in every State. If headquarters are established in every State, there will soon be headquarters in every county containing a large population. If headquarters are to be established in a State with a population of half a million or a million people, how many headquarters and buildings would be required in the great State of New York, or Pennsylvania, or Illinois, or Ohio? If this is to be administered by the Federal Government through officers and bureaus and employees placed in all of the States of the Union, Mr. President, it will require an army of officials, and it will cost hundreds of thousands of dollars annually for the rent of public buildings. We will convert this organization into a mighty Federal bureau instead of an instrumentality to aid the States. The Federal Government will overshadow the States; instead of furnishing information to the States, the Federal Government will assume the administration of the bill; it will enter into the States, control certain of their activities, and create a machine that will cost the people millions and tens of millions of dollars annually.

Mr. President, it seems to me that the amendment which I have offered ought to secure the approval of Senators.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am in sympathy with the principles of this measure and want to give the bill my support. I am not seriously troubled about the question of power with respect to legislation of this character. It is true there is no express delegation of power in the Federal Constitution to the Congress of the United States to deal with a subject of this character. Neither is there any such delegation of power over the subject of education. That was reposed, under our kind of government, in the States. Understanding that fact, from the very beginning of the Government Congress has been making grants of public lands to the States in the interest of education. I believe those grants began with the very beginning of our Government and have gone on at intervals ever since, and I am entirely unable to distinguish in principle between the grant of public lands from the Government to the States in aid of education, which lands might have been sold for cash and the cash turned into the Treasury, and the grant of money outright for the purpose of aiding the States in their work of education. The practice has gone on too long; it has become sanctioned by usage to such an extent that I apprehend no one at this day would be heard to say that it is beyond the scope of the powers of the Federal Government to vote aid to the States for the purpose of carrying on the work of education.

Mr. President, if the Government may thus make grants of land or of money to the States for the purpose of educating children, it would be difficult to establish that it has not the power to grant aid, either in money or land, to aid in bringing children into existence, and that is the purpose of this bill, as I understand it. It is not only a humanitarian measure, but it is founded on a wise public policy, because I believe that, since the war at least, it is generally recognized that the greatest asset any country has is its own citizens.

So, Mr. President, it was my conception of this measure that it was built upon that principle, practically the same as the good roads act. In that case the Federal Government votes aid to the States for the purpose of carrying on the work of constructing roads; the work being carried on by the States, the Federal Government merely making such supervision as will insure the appropriate and economic use of the aid extended.

That, as I say, as I understood it, at least, is the theory upon which this bill is constructed. That would seem quite clear from section 1 of the bill. I read from lines 5 and 6, as follows:

> The sums authorized in section 2 of this act to be paid to the several States for the purpose of cooperating with the States in promoting the care of maternity and infancy in the several States—

Clearly implying that the work of promoting the care of maternity and infancy in the several States is to be carried out by the States, this act to extend aid and cooperation in that work by the Federal Government.

That idea is also conveyed by the language found at the bottom of page 3 and the top of page 4 of the bill, as follows:

> The Federal board shall have charge of all matters concerning the administration of this act and shall have power to cooperate with the State boards authorized to carry out the provisions of this act.

That is to say, it is the State boards which are authorized to carry out the provisions of this act, and the Federal board acts in cooperation with the State authorities.

But that idea, Mr. President, is, as I say, rather at war with the language of the succeeding section, namely, section 4, which reads:

> That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations authorized in section 2 of this act, any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State board of maternal and infant hygiene, consisting of not less than three members, which shall have all necessary powers to cooperate as herein provided with the Federal board—

Which would seem clearly to imply that the Federal board is the one which is to conduct the operations, to be the main wheel in the machinery, and that the State boards are simply to cooperate with the Federal board, which is to be the active, important, and primary agent. That would introduce quite a new principle, to my mind.

But I am very certain that that was not the purpose of those who framed the bill, and accordingly I offer this amendment, to make the bill, as I conceive it, conform to the ideas entertained by those who drafted the bill, namely, in section 4, page 4, line 12, after the word "members" insert the word "with," and after the word "which," in the same line, insert the words "the Children's Bureau," to conform to an amendment which, as I understand it, has been accepted, and then to cut out the words "with the Federal board," at the end of line 13 and the beginning of line 14, on the same page, so that the section will read:

> That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations authorized in section 2 of this act, any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State board of maternal and infant hygiene, consisting of not less than three members, with which the Children's Bureau shall have all necessary powers to cooperate as herein provided in the administration of the provisions of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. May the Chair suggest to the Senator from Montana that there is already an amendment pending, to which an amendment has been offered?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then I will ask for the consideration of the amendment offered by me in its regular order.

Mr. KING. I was going to ask the Senator having the bill in charge, if the Senator from Montana will pardon me, if he will not accept that amendment.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I think the point made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is good, and I think his amendment corrects a defect in the bill, and I should be very glad to see it accepted at the proper time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the pending amendment of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and the amendment of the senior Senator from Utah will be considered temporarily withdrawn, and the amendment offered by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment now before the Senate is the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. FRANCE. I hope the amendment to the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. HARRISON. Let the amendment be reported, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah to the amendment of the senior Senator from Utah.

The READING CERK. The senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] proposes the following amendment, on pages 3 and 4: Strike out all of section 3 and substitute therefor the following:

SEC. 3. The Chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, acting through the agency of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor (hereinafter called "the Children's Bureau"), shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer. The Chief of the Children's Bureau as executive officer is hereby authorized to form an advisory committee to consult with the Chief of the Children's Bureau and to advise concerning any problems which may arise in connection with the carrying out of the provisions of this act, such advisory committee to consist of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. The Children's Bureau shall have charge of all matters concerning the administration of this act and shall have power to cooperate with the State board authorized to carry out the provisions of this act. It shall be the duty of the Children's Bureau to make or cause to be made such studies, investigations, and reports as will promote the efficient administration of this act.

The junior Senator from Utah proposes the following amendment: After the numeral "3" strike out the words "The Chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor, acting through the agency of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor (hereinafter called the 'Children's Bureau')" and insert in lieu thereof the words "the United States Public Health Service," so that the amendment would read:

The United States Public Health Service shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act and the Chief of the Children's Bureau—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the first amendment which I have suggested is agreed to, then I shall desire further to amend the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], by striking out the words on page 2, lines 1 and 2, of the proposed amendment, "and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 2 of the proposed amendment of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], line 1, after the word "act," strike out the words "and the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be the executive officer."

Mr. KING. The amendment which I have now submitted reads:

The United States Public Health Service shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to say a word on the proposed amendment. I realize that there are many reasons why this work should be placed under the supervision of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service. Indeed, when the matter first came to me, in my consideration of it I was inclined to feel a good deal that there were so many advantages to be secured by the administration of the bill by the Public Health Service that perhaps the bill should be amended as the Senator from Utah has now suggested that it should be amended.

But after giving the matter my most careful thought, and after talking the matter over with the members of the committee, it seemed to me to be a mistake to put the work under the direction of the Public Health Service. I do not care to detain the Senate now with an enumeration of all the reasons why the bill should go for administration to the Children's Bureau, but there are very important reasons.

The amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] meets many of the objections which have been urged to the creation of the new board. I feel that the administration of the work, as provided in the bill after it is amended as it will be by the amendment of the senior Senator from Utah, will be most efficient and that every objection has been taken care of. The amendment of the senior Senator from Utah provides that the administration shall be by the Children's Bureau. It provides that the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall be authorized to appoint an advisory committee, that committee to be formed of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Commissioner of Education. It seems to me that is an ideal arrangement, and under it the administration will be carried on efficiently.

I sympathize with the views of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], but I do feel that if he had the opportunity of studying the matter as fully as I have had and if he had had an opportunity to look into the matter as carefully as members of the committee looked into it, he would realize, of course, what I have said, and he would realize the advantages of the administration proposed in the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, as I understand it, the agents who will be employed in this department to carry out the purposes of the bill will be more or less expert in medicine and in hygiene, will they not?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes; I think it is contemplated that the work shall be carried on by those familiar particularly with hygiene and nursing. The work which it is contemplated will be carried on under the bill is generally carried on by district nurses who act under medical supervision in all that work.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator, in his opinion, how many nurses is it estimated that it will take to carry on the work with the appropriations that are provided for in the bill?

Mr. FRANCE. Of course, it would be very difficult to state offhand how many persons would be required for the administration of the provisions of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. Practically all the field force will necessarily be experts, trained in hygiene and medicine. Is that correct?

Mr. FRANCE. It is rather difficult to define the term "expert." It is a question whether we have in the United States more than a thousand experts on the question of hygiene.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, if the Government is going to employ nurses who do not know their business and are not versed in the purposes which this measure is intended to serve, then we can not look for much result from it. The Senator will agree with me in that, I know.

What I am trying to get at, because I am going to support the bill, is that it would seem to me upon first blush that the Public Health Service would be a better department under which to place the work, because of the work that it is doing, than the Children's Bureau. The Children's Bureau is doing great work and rendering great service to the country, but it has not any trained nurses in its work. The head of that bureau, while the whole country respects her and admires her and knows of the great service she is rendering, is not trained in this particular work as an expert.

So, as I said, it would seem to me upon first blush that the Public Health Service could render greater service than the Children's Bureau, and that is why I sought the information from the Senator.

Mr. FRANCE. As I have stated, I think that there is much to urge in defense of the view which the Senator entertains, but upon the other hand I feel that the plan provided in the amendment is the plan which looks to cooperation between the Children's Bureau, under which this work would naturally fall, and the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service acting on the advisory committee. It seems to me that is really the proper distribution of the administrative powers, the Children's Bureau actually carrying on the work, the Surgeon General acting upon the advisory committee.

Mr. HARRISON. But the work that the Children's Bureau will be doing under the provisions of the bill will be quite unlike the work it is now performing. If it is a sentimental reason merely to have a lady at the head of this service—and I think there ought to be a woman at the head of the work—why not make her an assistant in the Public Health Service and put her at the head of this work? It does seem to me it would be economy, and that we could get more out of the bill by putting it under the Public Health Service than under the Children's Bureau.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator will yield, I think I can suggest a good reason why the bill should remain as it is, making the Children's Bureau the administrative agency for this work.

The Public Health Service has apparently taken no interest in the matter and has voluntarily yielded the field to the Children's Bureau. The Children's Bureau is the only agency, so far as I know, which has made any move in this direction. It has begun by the publication of documents, one of which I have in my hand, and it has already, as far as it had the power and ability, entered upon the work of looking after this important matter.

It seems to me, therefore, that rather than call in expert medical authority and call upon a bureau or service which is already overburdened with very important duties, it would be better to leave it, as the bill proposes, in the hands of the Children's Bureau, that has already undertaken the work.

Mr. HARRISON. Is that an official document issued by the Children's Bureau?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is gotten out by the bureau. It is one of the publications of the Department of Labor.

Mr. HARRISON. It is not propaganda to bring about the passage of this particular bill?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a document which shows they have gone extensively into the gathering of statistics, not only domestic but foreign, and made a study of the subject and have used the influence of the bureau for the purpose of protecting child life. I think under the circumstances it would be rather a mistake for Congress to step in and withdraw the matter from the administration of the Children's Bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand the Senator, the Children's Bureau is now issuing official documents to promote the care of infants and mothers in maternity.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is entitled, "Save the young. Seven charts of maternal and infant mortality in the United States, with explanatory comments." It is a public document, for public information, intended to promote greater care in the treatment of infants and of mothers. I think it would be rather a mistake under these circumstances, without any consideration, to withdraw the matter from that bureau. To my mind, too, it is a matter which comes more properly under the head of social welfare. Its work would hardly require any considerable amount of medical expert treatment.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit me, I notice that the bill provides for hospital care.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It may.

Mr. HARRISON. It provides in remote areas for nurses to take care of the mothers and the infants.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator realizes that there is growing up now a practice by which wives expecting to become mothers go to a hospital for that purpose. I do not imagine this provision means anything more than the ordinary use which women make of hospitals. To my mind it is more a matter of nursing, more a matter of milk supply, more a matter of promoting the ordinary hygienic practices which any intelligent people know how to use without calling in a physician.

Mr. HARRISON. If the bill stops at that, the Children's Bureau, it strikes me, could function, and very properly function; but when they have to employ trained nurses and do this hospital work, they have evidently got to go and get a corps of trained people.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is laboring under a misapprehension. It is proposed under the provisions of the bill that each State will employ nurses under the supervision and guidance of the Children's Bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. But this bureau must approve everything that the State recommends before anything can be done by the State. There must be complete cooperation there.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand the Senator in charge of the bill, by accepting the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], has already recognized the fact that the State authorities are the ones who are to administer the bill—that is, to apply it in each particular State—and I think that is a very important safeguard.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HENDERSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was rather astonished by the statement just made by the Senator from Mississippi to the effect that the State can do nothing, not even the hiring of a nurse, without the approval of the Federal board.

Mr. HARRISON. No; the policy to be outlined by the State, I understand, must be approved by the authorities here.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I do not so understand it. I understand that when a State meets the requirements of the bill it gets the aid; that is all.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it the understanding of the Senator from Montana that the way the money is to be used by the States is not to be approved by the authorities in charge of the work here in Washington?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I see nothing that so provides at all. The State gets the money when it establishes a board and meets the requirements of the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is the way it ought to be.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If it is not, I agree with the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. I had the impression from reading the bill, and I have not given it the study that I should, that there was a complete cooperation here between the Federal Government and the States, and that the plan which was promulgated by the State must be approved by the Federal authorities.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. True, but it is understood that the operations are to be carried on by the State. I should have called attention, when I was speaking before, to a very specific provision found in section 2. I read from line 12:

> That there is also authorized to be appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act * * * $2,000,000—

And so forth.

That is appropriated for the use of the States. The Federal board, it is true, is directed to cooperate with the State authorities, and it does seem to me it would not be cooperating with the State authorities if the State authorities desired to hire a nurse and the Federal authorities could say, "No; you can not do that." Of course, if the Federal board is given the power to put a veto upon every detail that the State board may choose to enforce or require, you might just as well abolish the State board and put the whole administration in the hands of the Federal board here in Washington. I do not so understand it, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree thoroughly with the Senator in what should be done, but I think the language of the bill is not very clear along that line.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I say to the Senator from Mississippi that the bill was largely prepared in the Children's Bureau. It is the outgrowth of the work and experimentation of that bureau, the development of facts which grew out of investigations made by that bureau in the course of its official work.

Inasmuch as it is a logical outgrowth of the work of the Children's Bureau, I believe it to be more advisable to leave it under the supervision of that bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I dislike very much to put myself in the attitude of opposing whatever the Children's Bureau desires, but if we really mean to accomplish what it seems we desire to accomplish by this bill, if we desire that this bill shall render some service in promoting the care of infants and their mothers, we ought to go about it, it seems to me, in the best way. The Public Health Service has its experts; it has experts on all matters pertaining to health, while the Children's Bureau have not. For that reason, it struck me that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] was a very sensible amendment.

If the bill did not go any further than, as suggested by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], in diffusing information such as that contained in the document which has been issued by the Children's Bureau, it would be right to lodge these powers there; but when it is proposed to enter the field of hygiene in cooperation with the States, to employ nurses, act in conjunction with hospitals, and go out into remote areas and render the service, it seems to me that the best agency to function and to function well is the Public Health Service.

Mr. RANSDELL. Mr. President, I rise to corroborate the opinion expressed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH]. I have been supporting the pending bill as strongly as I knew how to support anything, but if I thought that we were to have a great bureau here in Washington telling the people of my State what they should do with the money provided, I should oppose the bill just as vigorously as I am now supporting it. I do not conceive the bill to be framed along that line at all. I think the bill contemplates that the Children's Bureau shall aid in carrying on this great work, which all of us believe so important, but that the money shall be expended by the various States without any very material interference from Washington; and that there will be preserved to the States all the rights which should properly be preserved to them. If I were not firmly convinced of that fact I should not be supporting the bill. With that idea in view I can not see why we should not permit the Children's Bureau to take charge of this matter instead of the Public Health Service.

The Children's Bureau, Mr. President, will cooperate in an educational way, in a helpful way, with the authorities of the various States. It certainly has displayed in the past, as the Senator from Nebraska has demonstrated, a great deal more interest in this particular question than the Public Health Service has displayed. I am not saying anything against that service, however. It is one whose activities have been marvelously beneficial to the Nation, and it has on its hands a great deal of necessary work to perform all the time. It is as busy as it can be, and there is no reason why we should load it down with this additional duty.

I feel very strongly on the subject, Mr. President, that we should leave the bill as it was prepared by the committee, and I believe that if its provisions are carried out in the spirit of its conception it will do immense good and will not in any way interfere with any of the rights of the States.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator a question before he takes his seat?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Louisiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. RANSDELL. I yield.

Mr. HARRISON. It appears that I am the only Senator who has any doubt about this proposition. On page 7 there is an amendment which has been put in by the committee which reads:

That the cooperative work in promoting the care of maternity and infancy shall consist of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas; and this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Federal board and any State receiving the benefits of this act.

In other words, if a State receives any money, the Federal board must agree with them as to the manner in which it is to be used.

Mr. RANSDELL. In a general way, that is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. RANSDELL. The Federal board will have studied the whole question not only with the light of its investigations in this country, but in all other countries. Other countries as well as our own have dealt with this subject, and with the information which the board will have as a result of its investigations throughout the world it will be able to prevent the States from making mistakes.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the Senator from Louisiana believe that the Children's Bureau is better versed on hygiene and sanitation and matters affecting maternity and the care of infants than is the Public Health Service?

Mr. RANSDELL. I am inclined to think that it is better versed on those subjects and will make a much more detailed investigation of the particular subject than the Public Health Service will make. I feel that to be so.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I am quite sure that there is some justification for the position taken by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in the language of the amendment to which he has called our attention and to which I had been giving some study just before the Senator spoke.

I can not see why that amendment was ever put into the bill. It is, as Senators will observe, a substitute for the language of the bill as it was originally reported. I do not think that any confusion of thought can possibly arise concerning the matter under the bill as it was originally framed; but there is some ground, I am free to admit, for the contention made by the Senator from Mississippi that under the provisions of the amendment the State authorities might be blocked in what they wanted to do by a refusal of the Children's Bureau to agree with them upon the method of procedure. Of course, if the work is to "be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Federal board and any State receiving the benefits of this act," and there should be a disagreement between the State authorities and the Children's Bureau, the work could not be carried on in accordance with the provisions of this particular amendment. The bill as originally introduced provides that:

SEC. 8. That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its board described in section 4, submit to the Federal board detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act. These plans shall include the provisions to be made in the State for the administration of the act.

Then follows language somewhat similar to that incorporated in the amendment:

The provision of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas. If the Federal board finds these plans to be in conformity with provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

That is to say, the State must submit a general plan of what it is going to do in that direction. I think possibly the last sentence might be eliminated. That is also in accordance with the plan of the good roads act. Under that act the State applying for the aid submits to the Department of Agriculture exactly what kind of a road it is going to construct, how it is going to construct it, and so on, and if it meets the general rules of the Department of Agriculture the aid is extended. I do not think that the bill is in any manner improved by the amendment proposed by the committee, and I submit that to the consideration of the Senator having in charge the bill and of the author of the bill.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, as I read the language of the original bill and of the amendment proposed by the committee, I do not feel the language proposed by the committee amendment materially alters the bill, although I do realize that there is much, of course, in what the Senator from Montana has said. So far as I am concerned, I would be very willing, if a majority of the Senate should feel so inclined, to have the original language stand instead of the committee amendment which we have proposed.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will agree to that and let the bill go through as it was originally planned. I think it would be much better if we can agree to let the bill go through as it stands all along the line, including the placing of its administration in the hands of the Children's Bureau. I trust, therefore, that the Senator from Mississippi will withdraw his objection to its being placed under the jurisdiction of the Children's Bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, my objection, perhaps, is not very consequential. The Senator from Utah made the motion, and it struck me as a very sensible amendment, and that, if adopted, greater service could probably be rendered under it than in any other way. If those who have made the fight for this proposed legislation, and those who are most interested in it—and they are all able—believe that the greatest service will be rendered if it is administered by the Children's Bureau, of course, that is all right; let them have their way; but it has struck me that the proper way to have this great service performed was through the Public Health Service, and for that reason, if the Senator from Utah insists on his amendment, unless I am convinced to the contrary, I shall vote for his amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will vote down the amendment of the Senator from Utah. This bill has been carefully prepared by the committee and those interested in it. In my judgment, its administration by the amendment of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] will be put into the hands of the very best organization to effectuate and carry out its purposes. That organization is made up of those who believe in the measure, who are heartily for it, who are making a fight for it. Of course we know, nationally speaking, that it is an experiment, but why not put it in the hands of those who have taken an interest in it and who we know will continue to have an interest in it rather than put it into the hands of a bureau that may not want it? The Children's Bureau will take great interest in it; it is just as capable of managing and controlling it as is the Public Health Service, and I imagine very much more so. The bill deals with matters peculiarly affecting women and children and the bearing of children; it is a woman's measure; it is for the benefit of the women and the children of the land, and by all means its administration should be put in the hands of the Children's Bureau.

Of course, if we contemplate carrying out the details of the plan, the work will be carried on whether we put it in the hands of the Public Health Service or place it in the hands of the Children's Bureau. I wish, however, to appeal to the Senator from Mississippi to withdraw his objection to the bill as drawn and amended or to be amended, and to the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] who has offered the amendment to withdraw the amendment. If we are going to pass this bill, as I think we ought to pass it, let us put the machinery which it provides in the hands of those who will make something out of it, who are interested in it, and who believe in it, and do not let us put it in the hands of an organization without knowing whether that organization will take any interest in it or not. That organization has already many other matters to look after, and I think it would be a much wiser and better plan to leave the administration of this proposed act in the hands of the Children's Bureau.

Now, just a word or two about the amendment reported by the committee. Like the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I am rather sorry that the wording of the original bill was changed by the committee. It seems to me that the original provisions of section 8, which the committee have recommended be stricken out, are full and ample and would be more workable than the amendment which has been suggested in lieu of it by the committee.

The trouble with the amendment—and I appeal to the chairman of the committee in reference to that—is that if you adopt the amendment you are likely to have trouble arising between the national authorities and the State authorities. Whenever a provision of this kind is put in a bill it means that the authority and powers of the States are interfered with, and without reason, for Congress always has the power to make the appropriations, and that in itself gives enough power to the National Government. It can make these appropriations; it can appropriate the moneys provided for in this bill from year to year. It has to do it. They can be withheld if the State authorities do not do the right thing, and the State authorities know that. Now, to put in a provision that it must be made acceptable to the Federal board, in conformity with the rulings of the Federal board, is putting in a clause that is going to bring about some trouble, and unnecessarily, as it seems to me, because nobody knows better than the State authorities that it depends upon their action as to whether these aids will be continued by the Congress.

I sincerely hope the bill may pass. We are spending millions of dollars every year on far less deserving projects. We gave one hundred millions to starving, or alleged starving, people in Europe last year. Surely we might give this small sum to aid a cause like this at home. We are asked to spend a billion or more for war this year. Surely we might devote a million or two of that vast sum to save our women and infant children at home.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee let me ask him a question?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have completed what I wanted to say, but I shall be delighted to answer any questions I can.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It was in relation to the point made by the Senator, and therefore I thought it proper to direct the question to him.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall be very glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The language stricken out at the top of page 7 provides that—

> If the Federal board finds these plans to be in conformity with provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

Does not that give the Federal board the same authority to refuse the plan proposed by the State that the language in italics, which is the amendment proposed by the Senate committee, does? In other words, it seems to me that under the three lines stricken out, to which I have referred, all that the Federal board would have to do to compel the State to agree to their plan would be to say that, in their opinion, the plan proposed by the State was not in accordance with the provisions and purposes of the act.

Mr. McKELLAR. I very frankly admit that there is force in what the Senator has stated. However, if I may point out what I believe to be a difference, it is this: In the first place, it looks as if the plans are to be made in conformity with this law by the State authorities.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; but if the plan made by the State board and submitted to the Federal board should not be in harmony with the plan adopted by the Federal board, they of course would say that, in their opinion, it did not meet the purposes of the act, because the provisions that they are going to make are going to be for the purpose of carrying out the purposes of the act, presumably, in the best manner that they think they can be carried out.

Mr. McKELLAR. Now, let me ask the Senator a question: Does he think that they would decline? I think it very doubtful, though the plans were not approved absolutely. I think that the Federal board would be very likely to make suggestions, and state what would be approved, and the State authorities would be very likely to agree—that is, under the first provision, under the one that was stricken out. Under the second provision, it is a good deal stronger the other way. It says that—

> This work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Federal board and any State receiving the benefits of this act.

There is not so much difference between the two as I thought there was when the Senator first called my attention to it. I think it would be better, though, to leave it as it was originally.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I am inclined to agree with the Senator that the original language is preferable; but I will say this in reply to the Senator's question about what I think the board would do: He asks whether I do not think the board would be inclined to defer to the States in the matter in the interest of good administration. No; I do not. I think the board would be like most Government boards, and like most human beings who are charged with the execution of any duty. If they were fit for their business and interested in it, they would have very positive ideas about a plan to be pursued in cooperation with the States, and they would not be very competent for their positions if they did not. They would have clear ideas about it, and in my opinion the idea of the people who are urging the passage of the legislation is to standardize the procedure under this machinery which is to be set up, so that Louisiana can not have one plan and one method of aiding the mothers and children of that State and Oregon have another.

I think the purpose in the minds of the members of the board and in the minds of the promoters of the bill is to have this thing function from Washington, and to have the ideas of the board in Washington—the board which the Senators who have urged this legislation praise and say would be specialists in the thing—prevail as to the administration of this joint Federal and State cooperative effort. The Washington board, the administrative board, would be the recipient of the ideas of the people and the local branches all over the country, and in the end the Federal determination of the matter would be supreme.

It is inevitable. They get their appropriations from Congress. Although the States might want to discontinue the service, they could not do it. Congress, if it appropriated or withheld the appropriations, would be the master of the thing, and the master of the whole scheme would sit here at Washington.

In saying that I am not attempting to detract from the merits of the bill, because this and other related subjects are in themselves most commendable. The only question that ever entered any Senator's mind, I assume, as to whether he should vote for this sort of legislation or not, is whether he thought it was more legitimately a part of the Federal Government's activities or more legitimately a part of the activities of the several States. But if this bill passes I do not believe there is any Senator who has so recently arrived here, or who has learned so little about the operations of governmental departments, that he can for a moment think that any State can have its way about the administration of this law, irrespective of the Government or the plans that the other States have agreed to, except by retiring from the plan.

As long as the State participates with the Federal Government it has got to fall into the plan of the Federal Government. The majority of the States will do so. They will not want any quarrel with the Federal board; and the object of this and all similar bills is to standardize the method, to standardize the public health, to standardize the sanitary appliances and rules.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the Senator think that it would be best for the interests of these mothers and children that the best methods of handling them should be obtained? Will we not get the best results in that way?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly; the only question is, Who is the best judge as to what is the best method?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The only question is whether the board in Louisiana, that knows the mothers and babies in Louisiana, is better adapted to prescribe the method and the kind of care that they need or whether the Federal board here is better qualified, and whether the standards and whether the methods should be the same in all the 48 States, irrespective of the different conditions which prevail.

Now, I do not expect to oppose this bill. I expect to vote for it, but I can not do so without saying this:

I know that it is—I will not say the forerunner, because there have been other bills that foreran this—but it is one of a series of proposals that are to be brought before Congress by which the National Government is to be put in charge of things heretofore managed by the people of the several States and the cities, and the National Government is to take the lead and to put up at least half of the money and to take the responsibility of the administration. The people of the States, if there be any such, who think they are getting something out of the National Government, something extra, something that will not come out of their own people, of course are mistaken. The State will tax its citizens for its share, and then the National Government, in order to get its share, will simply tax the States over again for the National Government's share.

The States are going to pay for this thing; the people of the several States are going to pay for it, whether it is done by the States or the National Government, or half and half, the National Government and the States.

But what I started to draw attention to is this, Mr. President: All these things involve, in my opinion, the fundamental consideration of what is the province of government. Now, it may be, and I think it is coming to be held, that it is the province of the Government to give every person a living, to see that he is comfortable, to see that he has food and clothing and housing and medical attendance. If he has been unfortunate in the world, or is poor, or has been sick and has not the money, then there shall be a Federal board appointed, and the people of all the country shall be taxed to furnish him with coal and food and clothing and a house and attendance; because there can be no difference in principle in furnishing medical men and nurses and medicines and hospital appliances to mothers and children who are in need of them and in furnishing them with coal and clothing and proper housing conditions. Those who would bring children into the world and see that they are attended to when they are babies, that they have sanitary appliances in the processes of birth and their infancy, would be doing those infants a very small favor if, after they were properly born and put into swaddling clothes, they were abandoned to starvation and freezing, and liable to be put outdoors and endure the inclemency of the season.

So I say that if the principle of this bill is correct, and if the Government admits that it is its duty to go thus far in furnishing medical attendance and nurses and other proper assistance so that the babies may be born under good conditions, then it seems to me it is equally the Government's duty to see that they do not suffer when they get to be a little older, a month or a year older.

Of course, infancy, as alluded to in this bill, is undetermined in duration, unless it be the time which the law gives to the word "infant," which is until he is 21 years of age. If all the boys of the country are to be cared for by the Government until they get to be 21 years of age, the other people will have to abandon the 8-hour law, and work harder than they have ever worked before to support them.

That is an extreme case, and I do not suppose any Federal board would so rule. But you have a bill with such general terms in it as that. And of course this board, under the general terms of the bill, has to be pretty nearly absolutely a law unto itself. There is no appeal from its doings or its decisions, except where the board cuts a State off from its pro rata share of the appropriation, and then the bill says the State board may appeal to Congress. Of course, anybody can appeal to Congress, but if Congress is to stand here and reverse the decisions of a Federal board every time it disagrees with a State board, or to act as a court of appeals to sustain them, it would not be very efficient administration, Mr. President.

As I said, there is a whole line of questions in contemplation, and it may be that if the Government is to be a maternal government as well as a paternal government, there is no getting-off place for us. I recognize the force of the statement that if it is the duty of the Government to appropriate the people's money by the millions for the eradication of hog cholera, and the boll weevil, and the cattle tick, and the wheat rust, and everything that does damage to anybody, it is equally the duty of the Government to furnish proper treatment for sick people.

The Agricultural appropriation bill, Mr. President, would have been considered by most statesmen and public men and lawyers and writers upon governmental subjects 20 years ago as a chamber of horrors. Nobody knows whether the appropriations in that bill, which have been criticized upon the floor of the Senate year after year, but still go through, are constitutional or not. Everyone recalls the gamut of subjects for which we appropriate, field agents to go around and instruct the women on the farms and remote places of the country who are not supposed to know about home economics, how to take care of the kitchen, how to cook, how to make pies, apple sauce, cottage cheese, and so forth. Everybody is doing it and there is no end to it, and, as I said, I see no reason for anybody to criticize this bill or any bill which may succeed it, or any proposition which may come to us, if the appropriations in the Agricultural appropriation bills conform to the provisions of the Constitution.

This is a most commendable subject. Nothing could be more important than that the helpless infants, born into the world, should be properly taken care of. There is no comparison, of course, between taking care of the future citizens of the country, if they can be brought to maturity, and the taking care of our animal or vegetable life. So, holding to the kind of governmental ideas that I have absorbed during my life, I regret that the people do not want to do these things for themselves in their own localities, but prefer to shove them off on the Federal Government at Washington. While I think they were mistaken in starting upon that policy, while I think that not only are they abandoning their right to local self-government and home rule, which I believe is the strength of the citizens of this country, and of the country itself, still they appear to be willing to do it. Some of them, I think, are enticed by the prospect of getting something out of the Treasury which they think comes out of the United States Treasury without coming out of the pockets of their own citizens. They are dazzled by these large sums which are shown to them all at once, all collected from the Treasury of the United States, and are told, "Just match this, and you have twice the money you could raise from your own State, and half of it is money out of the Government." They have sold their birthright for a mess of pottage, so to speak.

I regret that these humanitarian efforts are not concentrated at home upon themselves, for I think that each State, if the effort were brought upon it, and each State legislature could be prevailed upon to appropriate the money necessary to care for the sick and the poor and the needy in that State, and if they do not want to do it they are not only heaping a load upon the Federal Government which endangers its existence but they are heaping a load upon Congress in the annual appropriations for these purposes, and in the levy of the taxes to provide the money, which is making all sorts of dissatisfaction in the country, and the country does not understand the cause of it. The country, bowed down with taxation, which everybody now is begging us to relieve it from, at the same time is demanding in stentorian tones that we lay more taxes for the purpose of putting the Federal Government into these channels, which, in my opinion, the framers of the Constitution never for a moment contemplated that the National Government should enter upon.

But, worse than all the financial obligations which are imposed by this policy, in my opinion, is the fact that it takes away the capacity of the people at home to govern themselves. They want everything done by Congress now, and then complain that it is not done properly. It diminishes the sense of responsibility by the voters at home to have the Federal Government enter into all these things which they used to manage for themselves.

It may be that the Federal Government will do it better—I do not know; but, as I said, these being very commendable things, and the Government having decided to do them, there being precedents for it, really I do not see how anyone can vote that it is the Government's duty to cooperate with the States in building highways, which is a commendable purpose, but it is not the duty of the Government to cooperate with the States in protecting the people from disease or in taking care of the children.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit a suggestion there?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator of course recalls that under the Constitution the Federal Government has the right to build post roads and military roads, and it has been held by many strict constructionists of the Constitution that under that constitutional authority the Federal Government may make appropriations for the construction of highways, post roads, and military roads—that is, highways for post roads and for military purposes, and that in the execution of that constitutional authority it may collaborate with the States. It seems to me that the power of the Federal Government with respect to the construction of post roads and military roads may not be challenged. Yet, in conceding this authority to build roads and highways, this authority is to easily be distinguished from its authority to make appropriations for the health of the people. It occurs to me that if there is any duty resting upon the States it is the duty of educating the citizens within the States, and if the obligation rests upon the State of caring for the poor and the needy and giving succor to those who are in need of financial or other aid, that it can not be transferred to the Federal Government. There is authority for the construction of roads, but there is not authority, it seems to me, or at least it does not occur to me at present, for the Government to make appropriations to build hospitals and to furnish medical aid and assistance to the people within the States.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course there is no question of the constitutionality of Congress having the power to establish post roads; but that is not what I am talking about, Mr. President. I am talking about the Bankhead good roads bill, which was not designed for post roads or to carry the mails, nor for military roads, but was designed for the high rollers who want to roll over the country on rubber tires, and every automobile club in America was back of it, and they started it and originated it. It was not confined to trunk-line roads between the States, which would promote interstate commerce, but there was a corollary to it, if I remember correctly, which applied to the building of intrastate roads, right in the States themselves, and little roads leading to the farms.

The argument was that the farmer who did not happen to have access to one of the big trunk lines to be built was just as much entitled, by reason of the taxes he paid, to have a good road coming to his farm, so that he could market his vegetables and save horseflesh and wear and tear, as were other more fortunately situated men.

I regard the Bankhead good-roads bill, be its merits what they may, as the prototype of this legislation. It was a very ready refuge and shield of those who were met by decisions of the courts, that the Federal Government could not walk into the States and absorb the police powers of the State because it gave them an alternative by which, under the cooperation between the Federal Government and the several States, the Federal Government could be eventually made the director, the standardizer, and the promoter of all these things. Mr. President, I predict that in time every one of the States which rejoices in the receipt of the Government stipend in the beginning of the operation, under one of the bills founded upon this pattern, in the end will come here and say, "You have loaded us down with taxation which we, as poor States, can not any longer stand, and we demand that the Federal Government assume the entire expense of this work." A Senator remarked on the floor yesterday or the day before that some of the States were demanding that the Government's duty was to build the roads of the country and to pay for them exclusively. And why not, they ask? Are not these highways? Are not the citizens of one State, as well as of another, entitled to travel freely over all the highways in the United States? Is it possible to differentiate the amount of traffic in interstate commerce from one State to another, in these days of the automobile and the motor truck, from the intrastate traffic over the road confined entirely within the limits of the State itself?

So I predict that they will be here saying the entire expense of the good-roads movement, of this bill, meritorious as its object is, for the protection of mothers and their infants, and of other bills of a similar nature which we are advised are to follow, should be assumed by the Federal Government; and that then, when they have drawn in the majority of the States, tempted by the bait that in some way they are getting something for nothing out of the Federal Government, having standardized the operation of the business and having a majority of the States, then a constitutional amendment will be brought in here to make it constitutional to compel the other States to come in, whether they want to or not, and join the procession which started as a voluntary matter entirely. The States which offered themselves as volunteers in a good cause will then militantly demand that the States which are so backward or sodden, in the opinion of the volunteer States, as not to appreciate the blessings of this great national reform, will be drafted and conscripted under a constitutional amendment, willy-nilly, to join the noble procession.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not obligatory upon any State to accept these things.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, I did not say that it was.

Mr. McKELLAR. Or anything in the bills to which the Senator refers.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No. The Senator evidently has not followed my prediction. I say they are volunteers at first, willing volunteers, volunteers for the bounty they will get out of it. They think it is coming out of the Federal Treasury and not hitting their own citizens. Then, when they volunteer, they point the finger of scorn at the slacker State which declines to come into the uplift movement ratified by the Federal Government, and they will propose a constitutional amendment. Then we will have the same forces that are compelling the passage of this and similar bills let loose upon the legislatures of the several States, just as they were when they adopted the national prohibition amendment. There is not a legislature of a single State that can or will stand up against that pressure, although the people of the State may be utterly opposed to that action of their representatives in the legislature.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator speaks of the prohibition amendment. It is true that we have adopted that, but the Senator would not undo it to-day?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not a wise and beneficent amendment?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did what I could to prevent its adoption at the time, and I shall always be proud of it, because I think it was an outrage to amend the Constitution of the United States in a matter of that kind involving the personal habits of the people at home in their daily life, for the Nation to make a constitutional amendment of what ought to be a statute or an ordinance, a sumptuary ordinance, putting it basically in the Constitution and compelling great cities and States, who did not want to pattern their lives after the rule prescribed by two-thirds of the Congress or three-quarters of the legislatures, to act, not by their own votes but by the votes of one legislature which ratifies the amendment and then scatters to shelter.

A constitutional amendment in a matter of that kind never was dreamed of until recently—a constitutional amendment made by the votes simply of legislatures, including this one, no governor participating in it, no President participating in it, no executive of any kind having the veto power of the acts of the Congress or of the State legislatures, no submission to the people, either of the country or of any State or city, put across on the people without half their knowledge and without their consent. God save the mark, if we are to continue to make the Constitution of the United States the fundamental law of the land, the vehicle for governing one-quarter of the States against their will, although they may be the biggest and richest and most powerful in the Union, at the whim of three-quarters of the other States' representatives.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator from Connecticut introduced a constitutional amendment, I think, providing that no amendment hereafter shall be adopted unless by a vote of the people. I think that would be a great amendment for us to adopt at this Congress. It would save a great deal of trouble in the future. It seems to me that the passage of that joint resolution would be good legislation.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did introduce a joint resolution proposing the amendment to provide, as to future attempts to amend the Constitution of the United States, that the Congress might submit the amendment to the electors of the several States as well as to the legislatures or the conventions held in them. I think it is a wise thing to do. The Judiciary Committee reported it favorably and it is on the calendar. I had it up for consideration several times at the last session of Congress, but inasmuch as we were just freshly emerged from two constitutional amendments which had not been submitted to the people, I did not want anyone to think that that amendment, which I designed to apply to the future solely, should be thought to apply to the past or in any way to be in derogation of what had already been done.

That proposed amendment to the Constitution is still on the calendar, and I hope, when the Senate can devote the proper time to its consideration, to call it again to the attention of the Senate, for it is an important matter and ought to have due consideration and not be put through when there is simply a handful of Senators on the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. THOMAS. I am largely in sympathy with the purpose sought to be subserved by the proposed constitutional amendment, but let me ask the Senator if the last two amendments were adopted in any other manner or by any other process than was utilized in the adoption of the first sixteen?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh, no; they were adopted in a perfectly constitutional manner. I have no criticism to make upon that. They are just as much a part of the Constitution and just as valid as the original Constitution or as the Bill of Rights, or the first 10 amendments. The point I make is that I did not then believe—it is immaterial now, because it is in existence—and I do not now believe that the Constitution of the United States, being the great charter of our liberties, as describing what kind of a Government we have here, dividing and separating the powers of the Government into its coordinate branches, describing what shall be the power of each, guarding public rights, guaranteeing that private property shall not be taken for public use without just compensation, and fundamental things of that kind, almost logical conclusions from Magna Charta—I do not believe that great instrument should be made the repository for sumptuary laws.

I do not think we ought now to attempt to amend the Constitution by putting into it the Sabbatarian blue laws of the ancient Puritans. I do not think we ought to put into it a curfew law saying what time the people of the different States shall go to bed nor what they shall eat nor how many pieces of mince pie, without any hard cider in it, they shall be allowed for Christmas dinner.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator know that the contention is—and that contention is largely supported by previous and pending legislation—that the National Government through Congress has the power to do all those things under the Constitution as it now exists?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes, I agree; and I shall not be surprised to see the attempt made, but I say I do not believe that such a class of subjects affecting the people in their daily life, in trivial matters, should be put into the fundamental law of the land where, if the people in the practice of the things find they do not work or are offensive and outrageous, they can not be repealed.

Mr. THOMAS. I fully agree with the Senator.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. A sumptuary law, meaning a law providing what may be consumed in food or drink, should not be dignified and made a plank in the great national charter defining our liberties; but it has been done. Human beings are so constituted that if a certain schedule by which they are to regulate their daily conduct does not work or gives more trouble than it does good, they ought to be able to have it repealed; but when you get a constitutional amendment, which requires not only a two-thirds majority of both branches of Congress concurring but the affirmative vote and approval of the legislatures of three-quarters of all the States, and it is then embedded in the fundamental law of the country, if it does not work in certain sections of the country it is impossible to get three-quarters of the States to reverse their decisions and two-thirds of both branches of Congress to reverse their decision. Inasmuch as sumptuary laws and statutes regulating daily conduct are liable not to work as anticipated, inasmuch as they are largely experimental, they ought to be passed by bodies where, if the experiment does not work, the body can repeal them or modify them. They ought not to be put in the Constitution.

But I say that water is all over the dam. I do hope that in the future we can amend the Constitution by the amendment to which the Senator from North Carolina refers, so that in the future the Constitution of the United States shall not be amended except by vote of the electors of the several States, so that the people can have something to say about the making of their own Constitution and not have to rely entirely, as they do now, upon the votes of the legislatures.

Mr. President, it seems that we can not consider any bill without dragging in the poor old Constitution. Nevertheless, I did not drag it in; but now that it is in, I want to pursue just for a moment that subject.

The constitution of no State in the Union can be amended without submitting the proposed amendment to the electors of that State, but the Constitution of the United States, preeminent over them all, can be amended simply by the vote of Congress and the State legislatures, without submission to any elector in a single State in the Union; and when so amended the Federal Constitution ipso facto amends every State constitution which itself is incapable of amendment except by a vote of the electors of its own State. That presents, to my mind, a perfectly anomalous state of affairs and an undesirable state of affairs.

Mr. President, I have said all I want to upon that phase of the question. I rose simply to call attention of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] that, in my opinion, there is no substantial difference between the amendment proposed by the committee on pages 6 and 7 and the provision of the original bill. It is perfectly immaterial to me which is adopted. I think the same results will flow.

Mr. KING. Before the Senator resumes his seat, I desire to say that I understood the Senator to state, in answer to an inquiry propounded to him by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], that operations under this bill would be standardized in all of the States; and he expressed his approval of a policy that would lead to the standardization of the methods by which the bill would be enforced.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. No; the Senator from Utah misunderstood me.

Mr. KING. I am very glad to know that.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I say that I think the object of the promoters of the bill is to standardize its administration, and that the inevitable determination of the Federal board in operation would be to standardize it, for I do not think a Federal board will want to see a scheme which they may adopt for New York State said to be improper for some other State. Their object will be to have a uniform set of rules as to health, hygiene, sanitary administration, and everything else; everything will be standardized from their office. The field inspectors and agents that will be sent out to visit the families of the country will have the same instructions in their pockets; every blank and every circular that is printed will be standardized and will be known as Form 1, Form 2, Form 3, and so forth. The whole thing will work in national scope, as is the case with everything that the Government has anything to do with. The advertising and the circularizing and information bureau and printing press and propaganda system—if that is a proper word to apply—will be standardized, just as in the case of the Forestry Bureau and in the other bureaus which went to such excess—no limitation having been put upon them as to their expenditures for the circulation of the ideas of the central authority—that, if I recollect correctly, the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] last year either had passed through the Senate, or tried to have passed, a provision cutting out this endless, irresponsible duplication of propaganda that went on amongst different overlapping bureaus and departments of the Government here in Washington. No one of the Federal bureaus that is established, of course, is going to fail to spend less than the whole appropriation.

One of the chief functions of this bill, as I take it, is by a process of dissemination of Government circulars and information to educate the beneficiaries of the bill in the way they should go and to distribute for the benefit and guidance of the people pamphlets on sanitary and hygienic science. Anyone who examines this bill and similar bills can not help being struck by the fact that they are drawn in the broadest terms. Congress is to do the appropriating; the machinery set up in Washington is to make the expenditure, and is in the possession of absolute discretion. For the purposes of this measure Congress will not only appropriate this year $2,000,000, or whatever the sum may be, but the bill authorizes the appropriation annually through six or seven other sessions of Congress of an increased appropriation. I do not know whether it is in the mind of the draftsman of this bill or not, that he can bind those Congresses to appropriate the money; I do not know, but I predict, as has happened in every similar scheme upon which Congress has embarked, that the sums mentioned here are simply for illustration.

If this bill is to fulfill a long-felt demand, and if the demand is universal on the part of 110,000,000 of people, scattered all over this country of empire extent, the sums mentioned here to fill the necessities of the case are simply ridiculous; they are microscopic. All the poor children and all the poor mothers in this country can not be taken care of and furnished food and doctors and the necessary conditions of comfort at the time of childbirth and for an unlimited time thereafter with $2,000,000 a year or with $22,000,000 a year or with $200,000,000 a year, if the Government is going to do it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator from Connecticut permit an inquiry?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Is there anything in the bill to indicate the persons who will be the beneficiaries of the measure? Is it to be limited to the poor and the needy? If so, may it not be charged that such legislation is discriminatory? If the parent Government is to furnish doctors and medicine and hospitals in all maternity cases and to teach hygiene, is there any warrant for any limitation upon the number or character of the individuals who shall be the beneficiaries of the appropriation?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have read the bill, Mr. President, but that was several days ago, and I am not particularly familiar with it in all its terms. I do not, however, remember any limitation, as I recall the language of the bill. As I have said, it is couched in the most general terms. It does not even refer to women and children or to women and their babies. It is in aid of maternity and infancy. Of course, I know what maternity is; but whether it is to apply to the rich or poor or high or low I do not know. That, however, is for the Federal board to determine. They are bound by no limitations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the word "infancy" has a legal definition, as the Senator from Connecticut knows. It includes all those under 21 years of ago. Does the Senator think that it is possible under the terms of this bill that its provisions may be extended to all those under legal age?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think legally that would be possible, but I referred to that while the Senator from Colorado was temporarily absent from the floor.

Mr. THOMAS. I am sorry I was absent.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course, I do not apprehend that any member either of the State or Federal boards would extend aid to an infant of 20 years of age unless it were an idiot or somebody who could not take care of himself.

Mr. THOMAS. Of course, there are degrees between the extremes of birth and 20 years of age. Does not the Senator think that it would be perfectly easy, in accordance with the terms of this bill, to apply its provisions to young children of 4, 5, 6, or 7 years of age?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; and I said that on principle, if the object of the bill is to guarantee that the future citizens of this country shall be able-bodied and sound in mind and body, it is not enough merely to provide that they shall be safely and sanitarily brought into the world.

Mr. THOMAS. I think that is true, Mr. President. Of course, the Senator from Connecticut recalls in other times and in other countries caring for the spiritual welfare of the infant was a governmental function, and if we are to place within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government the physical well-being of the young, why not also extend it to include their spiritual and religious well-being?

In other words, a good citizen should be mentally as well as physically sound and well disposed, and, of course, religious sentiment being a common and elevating sentiment amongst humanity, as a consequence, if that is the function of the Government, does the Senator perceive any reason why we should stop merely at the physical side of his nature?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I see no reason for it except that under our Constitution, as I recall, religious beliefs are to be tolerated but not interfered with.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true; but "what is the Constitution amongst friends"?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They might not all be friends on that question.

Mr. THOMAS. That is possible; I hope not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator should attempt to standardize religion in this country, he would have his hands full.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true, Mr. President, and those who are attempting to standardize physical conditions will have their hands full.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They will.

Mr. THOMAS. It is an absolute impossibility. I certainly would be the last even so much as indirectly to support or defend, much less champion, anything that would even have the appearance of the standardization of the religious sentiment, thought, and belief of the country, because I am opposed to that absolutely; but I think that, notwithstanding the constitutional inhibition, the tendency of what the Senator has very aptly called "sumptuary legislation" will reach a point where the distinction between the intellectual or mental or emotional side of humanity and the physical side of humanity will not cut much figure in our appropriation bills.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes. The Senator may be quite right in saying that if it is the business of the Government to see that physically the children are standardized according to the ideas of those who are sure they are right about what the standard ought to be, in principle, perhaps, it is just as important that they should be standardized mentally—and that attempt is already being made and is pending before Congress—and morally; and when the Government attempts to enter into the realm of morals and legislate about them it will have its hands full.

Mr. THOMAS. Its hands will be full and its Treasury will be empty.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; the Treasury will be empty without any morals. But, Mr. President, I have no doubt this money will result in good when it is appropriated; it will help a lot of people who are in need of help. However, when any Senator asks me whether I think there is any limit to the beneficiaries who may apply for aid under it, or whether people who are able to help themselves may not apply, pretending to be poor when they are not, I can not tell him; all I can say is the bill leaves it entirely to the Federal board here and the State boards in cooperation with it.

I do say, however, that the appropriation is bound to grow. Anybody who will advertise that he has a fund with which to pay doctor's bills and hire nurses and furnish hospital attendance and take care of people in need will have his doorbell rung all night and all day. This will be a popular board, so long as it furnishes the appropriation. There is a proposition now to apply the same principle to the schools.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, Mr. President; and the identical propaganda behind this bill is behind the other. They are coupled in all of the letters and telegrams which I received.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I myself think the names of the two bills have become confused in the public prints.

Mr. THOMAS. They are, but not in the petitions that reach me. They are mentioned not only by name, but by number. I have no doubt that the other bill will be pressed after the pending measure has been disposed of, and as a consequence, if it passes the two Houses and is approved by the President, the educational interests of the country will pass under the domination of a Federal bureau.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope the several States will maintain control of their own schools, Mr. President; but I shall not attempt to cross that bridge until I come to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think many of the State officers are supporting the educational bill. They seem to see in it another opportunity to rid themselves of a very great responsibility, and an expensive one. I do not say that is true of all the States, but if my correspondence is any indication, I know it is true of several of them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no doubt that is so; but, Mr. President, because I vote for this bill I should not want it to be inferred that I shall vote for the Smith-Towner bill, if that is the name of the educational bill. As at present advised, I could not support that bill; but, as I say, there will be others coming along based upon the same principle as this, and it may be that I could support the whole line of bills of this kind. But, Mr. President, I want to say this:

When the ardent friends of measures make lists of measures in which they are interested; when the great organizations of the country formulate legislative programs, or agenda, I believe the word is in the League of Nations lingo; when they take pen in hand and formulate congressional or legislative agenda consisting of mere general topics of improvement, things that the Government ought to do, and send them on to you and ask you to mark with a cross "yes" or "no," which you are in favor of and which you are opposed to, before the bills have been drawn or introduced, or before the committees have heard the evidence about them, or before the Senators who do not happen to be members of the committees to which they are referred have had any opportunity of hearing from the committee, or reading the committee's report, or listening to the debate, I feel compelled to notify the interested parties that I have to see the specific bill, not only drawn up in coherent and intelligible English language, but I have to consider the relation of one section to the others, and I have also to reserve nailing myself to the cross as to whether I shall vote "yes" or "no" on it until I see how it is amended and in what particular form it comes before the Senate; and sometimes I am not willing to hang myself on the hook of the central office of the propaganda back of the bill until the roll is about to be called.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to say to the Senator that I received such a list the other day, and I marked most of the measures with a double cross.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Some of them ought to be marked with a double cross—I will not say all of them. I have not double-crossed this one.

That is all I care to say, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The present occupant of the chair understands that the Senator in charge of the bill, without objection, withdrew the committee amendment found on page 7, which restored section 8 as originally introduced.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to that section.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There is another amendment pending at the present time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is pending.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, there is an amendment which I have offered to the amendment tendered by my colleague which has not been disposed of.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The amendment of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] is pending.

Mr. McKELLAR. May the amendment of the junior Senator from Utah be stated?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the first amendment of the senior Senator from Utah has not been agreed to. The amendment has been offered, and, without objection, it will be agreed to.

Mr. KING. One moment, Mr. President. If the first amendment offered by my colleague is the one found on lines 10, 11, 12, and 13, then I desire to state that it has not been agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that it is not that amendment. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. The first amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah is on page 1, to strike out all of line 10, and on page 2 to strike out lines 1, 2, and 3, and insert:

> For the use of the Children's Bureau, for the promotion of maternal and infant hygiene, for the administration of this act, and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the first amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, my amendment, I think, probably should also extend to the first amendment offered by my colleague, and I therefore move to amend the amendment which has just been read by striking out the words "Children's Bureau" and inserting in lieu thereof "United States Public Health Service."

I will ask to have that amendment stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. After it is stated I desire to submit one or two remarks.

The READING CLERK. On line 3 of the amendment strike out the words "Children's Bureau" and insert the words "United States Public Health Service," so that, if amended, it will read:

For the use of the United States Public Health Service, for the promotion of maternal and infant hygiene—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] a moment ago combated the amendment which I offered to the second amendment tendered by my colleague. He contended that the activities of the Children's Bureau had been so extensive and so beneficial that this bureau ought to have committed to its care the administration of this important bill.

I have had occasion to make some little investigation into the workings of the Children's Bureau, and a number of persons have complained to me of the inefficiency and the extravagance of that organization. I am not able to determine whether the complaints made are well founded or not. Certainly if we are to believe the statements made by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the charge that this bureau has been extravagant would seem to be justified. Starting out with a demand for a small appropriation, $25,000, and insisting that that is all that would be required, it now makes a demand for six or seven hundred thousand dollars. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] corrects me and states that it is between seven and eight hundred thousand dollars, and, as I recall the figures submitted by the Senator from Wyoming, the salaries of the employees of that bureau for one period of its existence consumed 50 per cent or more of the appropriations which were made for the bureau. The appropriations asked for now, or the estimates for the coming year for that bureau, amount to substantially $200,000 for the expenses and salaries alone of its numerous employees.

Mr. President, this bureau is merely an illustration of the rapacity of other bureaus of the Government. If we create an organization or a bureau or any Federal instrumentality, and attempt to circumscribe its activities by the most drastic statutes, we find that we are absolutely unable to curb its activities and to restrain its voracious appetite for enlarged appropriations, and when we attempt to limit within a legitimate field its operations, it projects itself into other fields and invades other avenues of human endeavor, and comes here and demands an extension of its functions, and a greatly enlarged appropriation for the purpose of compensating the army of employees that attach themselves to it.

Mr. President, there seems to be no way of limiting these bureaus and Federal agencies. They seem to thrive upon statutes which seek to limit their activities; and if we do not make an adequate appropriation to cover their operations deficiencies are created. Congress, instead of refusing to meet these deficiencies, makes appropriations, no matter how large, to cover them. The criminal statute prohibiting the creation of deficiencies is flouted by officials, and the action of Congress treated with contempt.

I do not see any reason why the administration of this bill should be committed to the Children's Bureau; and if it is to be committed to one of the bureaus in the Labor Department, it seems to me that it would be better to commit its administration to the Woman's Bureau. That is an organization recently created.

I am not quite clear as to the functions of that organization. Perhaps the officials of that organization are not clear themselves; but I make the prophecy to Senators that it will be here soon, knocking at the doors of either the House or of the Senate for increased appropriations mounting up into the hundreds of thousands if not into the millions of dollars and demanding that its field of operations be extended until it will invade the operations of the States, the activities of the schools, and other organizations clearly local and domestic in their character.

I ask again, why commit the administration of this bill to the Children's Bureau? It has been conceded that one of the principal functions of this organization is to care for maternity cases, to take care of children, to arrange for hospital service, and for nursing service, and for medicines, and for instruction along the line of hygiene and medicine and medical development.

Mr. President, the science of medicine is a progressive one. Perhaps the medical men of the United States and of the world are more progressive than those in almost any other profession. The physician of 10 years ago, unless he has been a student and attended postgraduate courses, is incompetent to enter the homes of the people and minister to their needs because of the great discoveries and advances which have been made. In the Public Health Service we have men who are charged with the health of the people. They are studying the great questions of the conservation of the health of the people. They are in contact with medical men from all corners of the world. They are attending the great medical organizations, not only in the States but organizations international in character. They are paid for the purpose of obtaining knowledge in regard to the health of the people, and they are distributing information in all of the States of the Union.

We made large appropritions for the printing of information which they are obtaining, not only upon tuberculosis but upon hygiene, upon sanitation, and upon all those questions which affect the health and welfare of the public. Manifestly those who administer this bill ought to be conversant with medical matters. Is there anybody in the Children's Bureau who is particularly qualified for the administration of the bill? I make no charge of incompetency, but it seems to me that the work of the Children's Bureau is along an entirely different line from the work which this bill requires to be performed.

I am not sure as to the number of men in the medical department, but my recollection is now that there are three or four thousand competent physicians and surgeons. We find them in every State and almost all of the large cities of the United States. There are hospitals of the Government in a large number of the States. More hospitals will be erected, and large appropriations will be made for the erection of additional hospitals.

I repeat, Mr. President, that if it is competency that is desired, and the efficient administration of this law is sought, then we should place the administration of it in the hands of men who are familiar with the subject. I have heard no argument, and I have listened hoping that I might, which would justify the Senate in concluding that the Children's Bureau was the proper governmental instrumentality for the administration of this act.

I sincerely hope, Mr. President, that the amendment which I have offered will be agreed to.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator read his amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, the bill as it has been offered creates a Federal board of maternal and infant hygiene, and the amendment of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] strikes out that section and provides that the Children's Bureau shall administer this act. Section 3 of the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah provides that the Chief of the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor shall be charged with the carrying out of the provisions of this act. The amendment which I have offered provides that the United States Public Health Service shall be charged with the responsibility of executing it, and if the Senator will pardon me, further on in the bill there is a provision that the United States Public Health Service shall be called upon in a sort of consultative way to aid in the administration of the act, thus recognizing that the Children's Bureau is incompetent to administer the act without the advice of the Public Health Service.

If the Public Health Service is called upon to give advice and is consulted in an advisory way, why should it not have the entire administration of the act? It certainly would make for economy and efficiency.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, as I understand it, the idea of the Senator from Utah is that any work of this kind should be by a bureau under the Public Health Service?

Mr. KING. I would not create a bureau, but devolve the work upon the Public Health Service.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it needs a bureau, there ought to be one created there?

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And it should be managed and directed by the Public Health organization.

Mr. KING. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With its corps of officers all over the United States?

Mr. KING. Exactly.

UMI

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With its hospitals already distributed in many places in the United States?

Mr. KING. Exactly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And with men who really know something about it?

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. Yes. My idea is if this measure is for the benefit of the people, for mothers and for children, then the administration of it ought to be placed with those who are most competent to deal with hospitals, maternity cases, hygiene, sanitation, and the questions of public health.

Mr. HARRISON. I merely rose to suggest to the Senator that perhaps he, as I am informed, has fallen into an inaccuracy, as I did in my remarks, and I want to say that I thoroughly agree with the conclusion the Senator has expressed. I stated, and so did the Senator state, that there were no doctors in the Children's Bureau, no branch in that bureau which could function under this bill. I am advised that they have a branch in the Children's Bureau with five doctors in it who have been giving out instruction in hygiene. I merely make that statement out of fairness to the bureau, as I have just been advised of that fact.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator where the authority was for the creation of a medical bureau or subbureau or attachment to the Children's Bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. Where the information comes from?

Mr. KING. No; where is the authority for the creation of such an organization?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. On the part of those people in the bureau?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know.

Mr. KING. Where is the legal authority?

Mr. HARRISON. I do not know. I merely made the statement because I had made the statement that there were no doctors in the Children's Bureau, and the Senator has, too.

Mr. KING. I want to say to the Senator that there is warrant for the belief that if the bureau thought that by organizing a subbureau it could extend its authority and perpetuate its power and increase appropriations by Congress, it would create, without authority, such an organization; it would merely be following the example set by other bureaus and organizations of the Federal Government.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question, and I would be glad if he would yield.

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I want to know, even if there are five doctors connected with the Children's Bureau, whether it would not perhaps be wise to transfer those five to the Public Health Service and develop what we do where we already have a magnificent corps of trained men at work? Is it not true that our Public Health Service has been one of the most effective in the Government, and that much splendid work has been done by it; that we have hospitals and physicians now connected with that bureau in all the States; and that to a large extent wherever they go they enjoy the confidence of the communities in which they work, and we are frequently having urgent requests that they be not moved from one place to another? Having this splendid organization to start with, is it not clear that we have the background of this work and ought to develop it, if we are going to do anything further along this line; and also ought we not to transfer those five doctors from the Children's Bureau, if they are there, to the Public Health Service?

Mr. KING. I thank the Senator from Georgia for the information which he has furnished the Senate and for the suggestion which he has made. Obviously, Mr. President, that course should be pursued. But it is clear that this bureau is entering upon the same pernicious course that has been followed by so many other Federal agencies. Here was the Children's Bureau, created presumably for certain purposes, certainly not for the purpose of establishing a subordinate branch of the Public Health Service, and yet, before it has functioned very long, a medical organization or attachment to the bureau has been created, and, as the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has stated, from information just conveyed to him, it has five doctors in that department.

So, Mr. President, that bureau now has a medical attachment, and other bureaus of the Government have medical and public-health attachments and subbureaus and Federal agencies and instrumentalities. Instead of combining into one proper organization all agencies and instrumentalities connected with the public health we have a large number of them.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. It was stated by my colleague at the last session of Congress that there were some 15 or 20, as I recall, health bureaus or services under the control of the Federal Government, many of them paralleling the work of other like organizations. I am glad to know that the joint resolution which was agreed to by this body has been agreed to by the House, and that a committee will soon be appointed for the purpose of revising existing statutes and coordinating the Federal agencies of the Government, and bringing into proper relation the various bureaus and Federal activities of the Government. The duplication of governmental agencies is indefensible and costs millions of dollars annually. I noticed that a distinguished Congressman from Nebraska and others have predicted that it will save a million dollars a day if that idea shall be carried out. I wish such predictions could be realized. Doubtless there could be great saving, because the duplication in the departments of the Government is appalling. No business organization could save itself from the bankruptcy court one year if it followed the business methods of the United States Government, and Senators have voted for years to perpetuate these organizations which duplicate and parallel the work of each other. It is about time that we should use—I was about to employ the expression "common sense." It is not presumed that will be done in legislative bodies. But, at any rate, we should try to conserve the interests of the Treasury, and cut appropriations wherever it is possible, bring the activities of the Government under proper regulation and coordinate them wherever it is possible to be done.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, touching the doctors in the Children's Bureau, I have no doubt that the persons the bureau has employed are employed to discharge duties affecting child welfare and hygiene, along that line. I do not know how wonderful the doctors are or anything about them, but I am sure they are thoroughly qualified to do their work.

Mr. KING. I hope the Senator does not think from anything I have said that I was disparaging their ability. I will assume that they are very able doctors, perhaps the ablest doctors who could be found in the United States. But, conceding that, it only supports the argument suggested by the Senator from Georgia that they should be transferred to the Public Health Service, where their invaluable services and their superior ability would afford them a larger field for operations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I hope the amendment to the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DILLINGHAM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], who is absent. I do not know how he would vote on this question. Therefore I withhold my vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (when Mr. HENDERSON's name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], which I transfer to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I am informed that he is in favor of this legislation. So I feel at liberty to vote. On the pending amendment I vote "nay."

Mr. MOSES (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GAY]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. OVERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. If he were present he would vote "yea" and I would vote "nay." In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. POMERENE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] and vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] and vote "yea."

Mr. HEFLIN (when Mr. UNDERWOOD's name was called). My colleague [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is detained on account of serious illness in his family. He has a general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. On this vote the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] is paired with the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN], and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS].

Mr. HARRISON. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is unavoidably absent. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], who is also absent.

Mr. HARRIS. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER]. I do not know how he would vote on the question and I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the absence of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], who is unavoidably detained, and of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON], who is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX]. In his absence I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] and vote "nay."

Mr. FERNALD. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (after having voted in the affirmative). The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with whom I have a general pair is absent. I transfer my pair to the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH] and let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 6, nays 47, as follows:

YEAS—6.

Harrison	McCumber	Smith, Ga.	Thomas
King	Myers

So Mr. KING's amendment to Mr. SMOOT's amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now before the Senate is upon the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT].

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] just the effect of the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah. Assuming that that prevails, to what extent does it change the bill as it came from the committee in its administrative features? The Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and myself are not in agreement upon that point.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, under the bill as it came from the committee a new board was created for the administration of the provisions of the bill. That board was to be composed of the Secretary of Labor, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, and the Commissioner of Education.

Under the bill, as it will be amended, the Children's Bureau will have charge of the administration of the provisions of the bill. The Chief of the Children's Bureau, however, is authorized to appoint an advisory committee, composed of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Commissioner of Education, on the theory that that would promote cooperation between these various agencies in the carrying out the provisions of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Is the Senator from Maryland in favor of that amendment?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator propose to turn this over to the head of that bureau and let that bureau create the board instead of the Congress creating it? I vastly prefer the bill as it came from the committee.

Mr. FRANCE. No; the administration will be carried on by the Children's Bureau, and the Chief of the Children's Bureau will appoint the advisory committee, but the committee is named, of course, in the bill.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator from Maryland if the original bill in this respect shall be passed, which of these three agencies would have the administration of the provisions of the bill?

Mr. FRANCE. The Children's Bureau.

Mr. KING. Would that create a new bureau or utilize the machinery of existing governmental agencies?

Mr. FRANCE. Under the original bill the Chief of the Children's Bureau was to be the executive officer to carry out the provisions of the bill.

Mr. KING. And the man or the woman, whoever was at the head of the Children's Bureau, would be under the direction of the board?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes; under the direction of the board.

Mr. KING. Why would it not be better to have a board of the character described in the original bill and have the chief of the bureau under the board instead of having the board under the chief of the bureau?

Mr. FRANCE. Because that creates a new agency, whereas if the administration is charged to the Children's Bureau no new agency whatever is created. It seemed to us that it is better organization to use agencies already in existence rather than to create a new agency.

Mr. KING. I confess that I do not understand that the original bill created a new agency. There are three officials of the Government specifically named. The bill selects those three and empowers or directs that they shall employ a given agency of the Government through which to administer the bill. That does not create a new agency.

Mr. FRANCE. Of course, that is a matter of terminology. We were of the opinion that it was better organization, after considering the matter carefully, to have the Children's Bureau in charge of the work rather than to have an interdepartmental agency carrying on the work, cooperation with the other departments being secured by the appointment of this advisory committee. The change is not material, but I think it is beneficial.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will this advisory committee have no authority to control the head of the Children's Bureau? Does the Senator propose to let the party at the head of the Children's Bureau do what that party may please regardless of the advice of the Surgeon General and the two members of the Cabinet who are allowed to advise but in no way to control? The Senator just turns it loose, then, with the privilege of the head of the Children's Bureau taking advice but with the privilege of running it as the head of that bureau sees fit. Would it not be vastly better and could we not feel more confidence in it and would not the country have more confidence in it if we would retain the bill as it originally provided, with two members of the Cabinet and the head of the department of health in control, with power to act and direct?

Mr. FRANCE. As a practical matter, I do not know that it makes any material difference. Under the original provisions of the bill the Chief of the Children's Bureau was to be the executive officer. I assume that under the amendment of the Senator from Utah the Chief of the Children's Bureau will still be the executive officer; but I do not anticipate that the Chief of the Children's Bureau would disregard the views of the advisory committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Would it not be advisable and better not to allow them to disregard it? Will not the situation be stronger if the authority is put into the hands of these three men? Then we shall have the benefit of the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service to direct and control rather than somebody who knows nothing about medicine and knows nothing about the subject, perhaps.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] is not present. He explained the purpose that prompted him to offer the amendment; that purpose was acceptable to the Senator having charge of the bill; and I think he very properly consented to the amendment, so far as he could do so.

Fundamentally, the purpose of the amendment is to prevent the creation of another bureau, and in that particular I think it is commendable. The Children's Bureau was selected by the Senator from Utah because of the harmony between the work they are now doing and the purposes of the bill. A Federal board, composed of men who have their hands full, necessarily will have to perform their duties vicariously. We are loading the members of the Cabinet and many of the heads of divisions and bureaus with all kinds of duties which it is impossible for them to perform for the very good reason that they have not time to perform them. As a consequence, they are obliged to delegate the authority.

The Children's Bureau, if I am correctly informed, is not so circumstanced. Hence, without increasing the expense, as we hope, which will attend the administration of this bureau, we shall get just as good if not better service. The appointment of an advisory committee in this instance, by means of which the members of the Children's Bureau may receive counsel and advice and information and help, will be like the appointment of other advisory committees.

The Federal reserve act creates an advisory board, drawing no salary and meeting at such times as the Federal Reserve Board may desire their services. Nobody suggested at the time of the passage of the act that we thereby created a bureau and placed it under the charge of some other bureau. I think under the circumstances, therefore, that the proposed amendment is far preferable to the purposes of the original bill, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. KING. May I ask the Senator from Colorado a question?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; though I do not know that I can answer it. The senior Senator from Utah, however, is now present. I will say to him that I have endeavored to explain the purposes for which he introduced his amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that I have had a meeting with Representative GOOD, chairman of the Appropriations Committee of the other House. I just came in from that meeting and did not hear what the Senator said.

Mr. KING. I should like to say——

Mr. THOMAS. If the junior Senator from Utah will permit me, I desire to say that objection is made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] and I think by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the plan of administration of the bill under the amendment of the senior Senator from Utah, the Senator having charge of the bill having given the reasons why he accepted it. Those Senators are able to and they can explain their positions much better than can I.

Mr. KING. I asked the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] what reason there was for accepting the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] and modifying the bill as it originally came from the committee. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], who was defending the amendment of the Senator from Utah, stated that a reason for the amendment was that it avoided the creation of another bureau. I was about to ask the Senator from Colorado, when the senior Senator from Utah entered the Chamber, if he was not in error in assuming that the original bill created a new bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. No; I think, Mr. President, that it does, and I wanted to avoid that contingency.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator from Utah considered the advisability of having a board administer these duties under the Children's Bureau, a board composed of the Surgeon General, the head of the Children's Bureau, and some one else?

Mr. SMOOT. I could not think for a moment that at this time we ought to go into the question of the reorganization of the Children's Bureau. The amendment provides that the Children's Bureau shall be aided by an advisory board or committee consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. They are a committee with which the Chief of the Children's Bureau shall consult in the direction of the activities of the bureau.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What seems so unsatisfactory to me is that it is proposed to trust this large sum of money and the administration of this great task to the head of the Children's Bureau. I merely feel that it is a very unwise thing to do and that we ought to have some kind of supervising organization, not simply an organization to advise but one with some authority.

Mr. SMOOT. The way the bill was drawn——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not mean to approve the bill as it was drawn. I was asking the Senator to consider some way by which we might have the benefit, at least, of the Surgeon General as one of a board to direct the Children's Bureau in the performance of its new responsibilities.

Mr. KING. As a directory board instead of a mere advisory board.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think that the mere advisory part of it amounts to anything.

Mr. SMOOT. It certainly would not do, Mr. President, to have three heads of departments or bureaus in the Government act in a directory capacity, because of the fact that nobody would be responsible.

They would meet about once a month, or something like that. So I thought it would be very much better to have somebody responsible, and then have the three officers of the Government to whom I have referred act in an advisory capacity. It looks to me as if we would get better results in that way than by following the other method. Not only that, but we would not build up here a new bureau or agency that would begin with the employment of as many clerks as those in some other bureau, no matter whether they were needed or not, and make a demand for additional space in the Government buildings, or else go out and rent buildings in the District of Columbia. What I had in view was to save expense as much as possible. That is why I desired the change made.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I appreciate the object the Senator had in view, but I suggest to him that this large sum of money that we are about to appropriate should be expended under the supervision of the most skilled board. During his absence I voted for an amendment to put the whole matter under the charge of the Public Health Service of the Government. I would not be afraid for it to go there without any other supervision, perhaps; but to put it under the Children's Bureau, which I had not thought had proceeded very far, is a different matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to suggest that the language be made to read: "The Children's Bureau shall have charge of all matters concerning the administration of this act, and shall have the power, under regulations of the Federal board," to do so and so; so that the Federal board may have the power to make regulations; but in the absence of them the Children's Bureau would go forward.

Mr. SMOOT. I doubt very much whether we would have responsibility then resting either with the Childrens' Bureau or with the Federal board.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Children's Bureau could undoubtedly go forward unless the board made regulations which restricted it, but when they made regulations of that sort, they would have effect.

I am moved to make that suggestion because I have just discovered in the report of the Secretary of the Treasury the fact that the Public Health Service is carrying on a work at the present time which somewhat overlaps the work which it is now proposed to place under the Children's Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, we have known that fact. The Public Health Service now has, I think, according to testimony that was given before the Appropriations Committee, 42 agencies doing about the same work. If we add to the matters under their charge the work which is contemplated under the pending bill, then there will be a duplication of work the extent of which it will be difficult to tell.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Ought it not all be put under the Public Health Service? Is not that the place for it, and are they not already doing work along the same lines?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think not. I think the Public Health Service is already a jack-of-all-trades and has got too much work. It seems to me it would be wise to have the head of the Public Health Service on some committee which might coordinate the work.

Mr. SMOOT. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service under the amendment I offer would have a place on the advisory committee, together with the United States Commissioner of Education and the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think an advisory committee has not necessarily much power. It seems to me that the committee, composed of a Cabinet officer, the head of the Public Health Service, and the Commissioner of Education, should have really the authority to make regulations under which the Children's Bureau could carry on the work. I only suggest that as a modification of the Senator's amendment, which I am disposed to support.

Mr. SMOOT. The Public Health Service would have to be in close touch with the work as it progressed; in fact, it ought to have knowledge of what was required and what was being done or it could not make rules and regulations. If we are going to favor such a proposition, the best thing to do would be to put the new work under the Public Health Service direct, for some one will have to know what the work is daily, some one will have to know what the requirements are, some one will have to be responsible for that work, and I think that some one ought to be the Children's Bureau rather than the Public Health Service.

I said the other day that I thought the Public Health Service one of the most extravagant agencies of the Government. I am still of the same opinion, which is based on the appropriations that are made for and the estimates that are presented by that service, the demands that are made by it upon Congress, by the way in which it has grown, and by the duplication of work carried on by it. I hesitate to put more millions of dollars under their control, but I am perfectly willing, if we are going to establish this new line of work, to have it carried on under the Children's Bureau, acting with an advisory committee consisting of the Secretary of Agriculture, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education.

Mr. KING. If I may, I desire to make a suggestion to my colleague. I know he is very much interested in consolidating the departments and bureaus and eliminating the frightful waste, extravagance, and duplication which characterize the executive departments. I am afraid the amendment of the Senator will create another medical department. We are advised by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] that there are already five doctors, and I do not know how many subdoctors and nurses and medical advisers, attached to the Children's Bureau. Now, it is manifestly wrong to create another medical department of the Government.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Which Senator from Utah has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The senior Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. The senior Senator from Utah has the floor. I was inquiring of him as to the character of his amendment. I again suggest to my colleague that his amendment will carry into effect a policy which I know he is earnestly seeking to modify.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to be perfectly frank with the Senate, and say that I thought it would be very much better to have this legislation postponed until after the reorganization of the departments of our Government—I am speaking now personally—and I have said so to ladies who are deeply interested in this legislation; but they seemed to think that if it was not passed at this session it would hold it off for two years before the legislatures of the different States could act, and therefore they wanted it to pass even though after the reorganization of the Government takes place, if it does take place, the whole program will be changed.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to suggest to him, and also to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], who is in charge of the bill, that we have been in constant session now for nearly six hours, and in all probability we shall not get a vote to-night unless we remain here an hour or two longer, and that it might be well to recess over until to-morrow and take up the matter at that time. Then this amendment can be thrashed out between the Senator having the bill in charge and other Senators.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I offer two amendments to be printed.

The amendments were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed, as follows:

On page 1, in line 3, strike out the word "annually," and after the word "appropriated," in the same line, insert the word "annually."

Page 2, line 14, strike out "1921" and insert "1922"; line 15, strike out "1922" and insert "1923"; line 17, strike out "1923" and insert "1924"; line 18, strike out "1924" and insert "1925"; line 19, strike out "1925" and insert "1926"; line 20, strike out "1926" and insert "1927."

Mr. FRANCE. I did hope we might have a vote on this bill this evening, so that we could adjourn over until Monday; but there seems to be very little probability of that.

Mr. KING. There are a number of amendments which I have to offer, and they will take considerable time.

RECESS.

Mr. FRANCE. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, December 18, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, December 17, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who art supremely great, humbly and reverently we bow in Thy holy presence, we pray that we may be guided by Thy counsels through the changing scenes of this new congressional day that as individuals and collectively we may accomplish the highest good for ourselves and for the Nation we represent; that we may lie down at its close with a clear conscience and rest securely under the shadow of Thy protecting wings sanctified by the supreme thoughts of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

TREATMENT OF TUBERCULAR EX-SERVICE MEN.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes on the question of tubercular ex-service men being held, to their detriment, at Houston, Tex.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, there is now in one of the Government hospitals at Houston, Tex., quite a number of tubercular patients. They are ex-service men. The greater number of them are from States outside of Texas. They are strangers to me; they have never been in my district, so far as I know; but they have been appealing—a number of them—to me to get them away from there. Houston is my birthplace. I know the conditions there. If you were to search the whole United States over, you could not find a climate or altitude more unfavorable for the treatment of tubercular patients than Houston. Upon the insistence of several of these ex-service men I have been able, during the last four months, to get only six of them transferred to Arizona and New Mexico. About a score or more of them are yet at Houston who have been clamoring for transfer. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service asserts that he can not transfer them, because he has no more room at Fort Bayard, N. Mex. He seems to think that that is the only hospital to which he could transfer them. There is a hospital at Roswell, N. Mex., that has been especially fitted up as a tubercular hospital at an enormous expense. It does not happen to be a Government hospital, but these ex-service men could be transferred there immediately if the officials of the Public Health Bureau would see fit to do so. I think it is a shame and an infamous outrage for these men to be kept in that hospital at Houston to die when they could be transferred to another hospital. There is a hospital at San Angelo, Tex., and there are other hospitals on the Rio Grande border, in Arizona and New Mexico, and at other places to which they could be transferred.

The following is a copy of a letter I wrote December 1, 1920, and I wrote again on December 8 and December 10, insisting on the numerous ex-service men afflicted with tuberculosis held at Houston being removed from there:

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 1, 1920.

Gen. HUGH S. CUMMING,
Surgeon General, Bureau of the Public Health Service,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GEN. CUMMING: I am herewith inclosing you a letter just received from Surg. John M. Holt, of the United States Public Health Service, Dallas, Tex., claiming he is unable to transfer Jas. D. Elliott (C-451325) from the hospital at Houston, Tex., to some of the hospitals in the Southwest, because they are filled to capacity. This young man, Elliott, is suffering from tuberculosis. During the past six months I have had a great deal of trouble in getting ex-service men suffering with tuberculosis transferred from the hospital at Houston, Tex. On numerous occasions I have called the attention of your department, and also that of Col. R. G. Cholmeley-Jones, to the fact that it is almost criminal on behalf of our Government to continue to keep ex-service men suffering with tuberculosis at Houston, Tex. I again assert that if you were to search the whole United States over you could not find a climate or location more unfavorable and disastrous to tubercular patients than at Houston, Tex. I was born there, and I know what I am talking about.

In this connection I desire to call your attention to the fact that during August or September of this year I had a voluminous correspondence with Col. Cholmeley-Jones, wherein I advised him that the Southwest Sanatorium, located at San Angelo, Tex., and the sanatorium conducted by Mrs. Morgan, of Roswell, N. Mex., had each gone to considerable expense in making preparations to care for such tubercular patients. On September 22, 1920, Col. Cholmeley-Jones wrote me a letter embracing the following:

"At the present time there are a great many available beds at Fort Bayard. This institution is considered by some of the best tuberculosis experts of this country to be a model institution for the care of patients suffering from this disease. The hospital itself is modern in every detail and fully equipped, and the climate is considered to be especially beneficial."

If this letter is true, why is it that our tubercular patients can not be moved from Houston, Tex.? I think that your department should take immediate steps to see that all ex-service men now suffering with tuberculosis are transferred at once from the hospital at Houston, Tex., to hospitals in the Southwest.

Very sincerely, yours,

THOMAS L. BLANTON.

I submit the last letter received, to wit:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE,
Washington, December 14, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON,
House of Representatives, Washington.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letters dated December 8, 1920, and December 10, 1920, together with your letter dated December 6, 1920, addressed to the Director, Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and to advise that the medical officers charged with the responsibility of hospitalizing tuberculous beneficiaries in Houston and other points in Texas have been instructed to utilize to the fullest extent all contract hospitals affording proper facilities for the care of tuberculous patients, and that both the Southwest Sanatorium located at San Angelo, as well as the Morgan Sanatorium located at Roswell, N. Mex., are being utilized.

The service officers at Houston and Dallas are in close touch with all the institutions where beds can from time to time be secured, and are zealous in their endeavors to find places where patients can be suitably cared for.

It is believed that until additional facilities are placed at the disposal of the Public Health Service, everything humanly possible has been done.

Yours, very truly, H. S. CUMMING,
Surgeon General.

Notwithstanding what is stated in this letter from the Surgeon General, these men are still held in Houston. If they die there, the Public Health Service ought to be held responsible.

CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, as the chairman of the Committee on the Codification of the Laws, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] be allowed to address the House for five minutes this morning, with leave also to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that he and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] may address the House for five minutes this morning and be allowed to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GARNER. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] here?

Mr. LITTLE. He was in his room, closeted with several constituents, a few minutes ago, and if he has not already come we can notify him.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Revision of the Laws directed that the chairman ask your attention to the bill to establish a Code of The Laws of the United States, a copy of which has been sent to every Member of the House through the mail and is now on the Members' desks, whether they have found it or not. This bill is similar to the Revised Statutes passed in 1874. It is therefore the second bill of the kind ever introduced in Congress.

You will want to know something about how it was done, and in the extension of remarks which we shall make we shall endeavor to further meet that desire. The chairman will call your attention to some of the details immediately, in the short time he has, and if the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] gets away from his constituents he will do the same thing.

This committee is given an annual fund of $4,000 to revise the statutes. Last spring you gave the committee $9,000 more. The chairman, authorized thereto by the committee, with those funds and its clerk hire, employed revisers to assist him in this work. The chairman had given nearly all of his time to it for a year and a half.

When we first began the work we began to go through the statutes and pick out and compile the various statutes, beginning with the old Revised Statutes, pursuing the same method of compilation which the original revisers used. They compiled them for themselves and undertook to revise them under the law. When the committee came to the revisers' report in 1873 they decided not to revise, because that gave opportunity for too much changing. Nevertheless, the work of 1873–74 still retains the name of Revised Statutes, although they were in fact practically making a code, which we have done. We began by compiling our copy from the Revised Statutes and having it typewritten for the printer. As we did so we made comparison with the several compilations which had been made by private parties in recent years—West, Thompson, Barnes, Flood, and Pierce.

As we went on for weeks observing the work done by those people, we finally reached the conclusion that they were all reasonably correct and useful, except that they included considerable legislation no longer in force. Because West's compact statutes was most like the Revised Statutes we accepted them as our basis of operation, and we clipped its sections and sent them to our revisers. For example, we sent to a reviser all West's sections on education, and others, as his copy for examination. His instructions were to take them and look up the original laws to see that they were right and correct. Then he would compare them with Thompson and Barnes, and then, when he had finished the comparison with the original Revised Statutes, and the Statutes at Large since, he would have his own judgment and, for example, that of West and Thompson and Barnes, who are three of the greatest compiling concerns the country ever had. It would be sent in to the chairman with four examiners back of it—our reviser, and West, and Thompson, and Barnes. Then it went to another reviser for the same process. Then the chairman went all over it section by section, availing himself, as did the revisers, of the annotations in West and Thompson. After the chairman's investigation he sent the sections, now numbered and with headlines, to the Public Printer. Whenever possible the chairman had the aid of the committee. When sent to the printer it had in effect the approval of Thompson, West, Barnes, two of our revisers, and the chairman—six separate investigators. It came out in galley form, and the galley was sent then to a third reviser, who proceeded to go over it just as did his predecessors—making seven independent examinations. Meanwhile another galley was sent to the bureau or department that has the closest relations to that work, whenever we could get them to take an interest in it, which several did. In 1874 Mr. Poland complained that none of the bureaus or departments gave the committee their assistance. The result was, when the proofs came back from the given bureau or department, and came back from the other revisers, eight had gone over it. The Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and both Secretaries of the Interior—Mr. Lane and Mr. Payne—and others, all gave full, complete, and detailed replies, having their legal departments go over the work carefully. The result was that we now have eight O. K's on that.

There is in the Library a legislative reference department. Years ago they assembled an index to the laws of the United States. The way in which that was done was this: They would begin with a section of the Revised Statutes, then they would put on a card every amendment to that particular section.

Then they would take any law passed since coming under that head, and index underneath it every amendment to it, so you can see at a glance all the amendments to any given legislation, and if you ask for them they can list them for you. This galley proof also went to them and they went over it and compared it, and if they thought they discovered any erroneous statement or any failure to include everything that should be included, they made a note of it and brought it to our attention. Now, nine legal people have gone over the copy. Then the chairman of the committee, after securing the help of such members of the committee as could give it their personal attention, went over it carefully for a last examination, and it was sent to the printer with the approval of nine careful investigators.

It is proof-read by copy carefully, of course, at the Printing Office. It is proof-read by copy in the chairman's office very carefully. The result is that 9 lawyers and 2 proof readers have gone over it, the chairman twice. For the last month the chairman has had 6 excellent proof readers, one detailed from the Printing Office and one expert employed by the chairman, besides the revisers, and they have read it over again. As a result, there is much less probability of mistakes than there was the other time. That time they did not even have the compiler's help. They did not even have the system that we adopted. I think it is safe to say that with 9 lawyers going over each section before it is finally put into this shape, it is as nearly right as human skill can make it.

Three great compiling concerns—Thompson, West, and that of Barnes, three studious and scholarly revisers—the Legislative Reference Bureau of the Congressional Library, the department most interested—if its aid can be had—and the chairman of the Revision of Laws Committee, 9 examiners, each acting alone, assure the House after nearly 18 months of unsparing effort, that this bill is drawn from your official publications and expresses them in full without any change of laws made by Congress. In 1874 they lacked many of the resources used in this work. Yet for 46 years the Revised Statutes has been the greatest code the world ever saw and had the respect of courts, Congresses, and people unchallenged. There is every reason to believe this code even more accurate.

Mr. BEE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. I have glanced over this, and while the gentleman's statement is very interesting it is unnecessary, because the work itself is the best evidence of the careful attention that has been given to it. I wish to ask if you have brought the revision down to the last Congress?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; down to this Congress.

Mr. BEE. To this present Congress?

Mr. LITTLE. Just as they did in 1874.

Mr. BEE. There is no attempt to annotate?

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, no. At the end of each section is a citation, which you might call an annotation, as to its origin. You can take the references at the end of any section and learn for yourself whether the section is correct. That is the best report that could be made on it. In 1874 they made no report, because they said the report would be so much bigger than the statutes that it was impracticable.

At the end of each section is the citation of its origin, and any Member or any person can take it and analyze it for himself and make up his mind whether it is a correct statement of the law. As the gentleman from Texas says, the bill is its own best argument. "Good wine needs no bush," and there is the bill, gentlemen. [Applause.]

After becoming chairman of this committee I gave some six weeks to the study of the history of our laws, finally reaching the decision that a bill should be prepared similar to that of 1874, and that it could be completed for the third session of the Sixty-sixth Congress. I began work July 1, 1919, and on December 14, 1920, the first volume of this proffered legislation finally received its last stitch. It has occurred to me the House may care to read some of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 10, 1873, and June 22, 1874, when the Revised Statutes became a law and the law. So the following extracts from those proceedings are presented:

[CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 10, 1873, p. 129.]

REVISION OF LAWS (IN THE HOUSE).

The SPEAKER. The morning hour has almost expired and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Butler] desires to make a report for reference to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

Mr. BUTLER of Massachusetts. I desire to report certain bills, prepared by a committee under a joint resolution of the two Houses, for the revision of the general laws and those on certain specific subjects, and, with the leave of the House, I will explain what this mass of paper is that I have before me.

Between five and six years ago the two Houses of Congress, by law, provided for the revision of the statute laws of the United States, and a commission was appointed, who sat three years engaged in that revision. They had not accomplished the work, and an extension was given and another commission appointed, substantially, and they attempted a revision. Then that commission not being ready to report during the last Congress, the two Houses by a resolution appointed a joint committee, whose duty it should be to prepare a bill or bills to carry out the objects of that resolution.

As you are all aware, the statute laws of the United States are in 16 or 17 volumes, averaging between 1,000 and 1,200 pages each, including the several treaties. Taking the revision partly accomplished by the two sets of commissioners, the committee of the two Houses have during the recess subjected that revision to a thorough revision by one of the best lawyers in the country, who has devoted his time and ability to it with the most indefatigable industry and greatest success, so that now we have all the laws of the United States, with a single exception, which I shall mention, in this book, containing about 1,400 pages, printed in large print in the form of an act, with an index, in a shape in which every Member can examine it. If the revision is carried through Congress and becomes a law, all the general laws of the United States will be found within the limits of one volume instead of its being necessary to wade through 16 volumes in referring to them.

I desire to premise here that your committee felt it their bounden duty not to allow, so far as they could ascertain, any change of the law. This embodies the law as it is. The temptation, of course, was very great, where a law seemed to be imperfect, to perfect it by the alteration of words or phrases or to make some change. But that temptation has, so far as I know and believe, been resisted. We have not attempted to change the law in a single word or letter so as to make a different reading or different sense. All that has been done is to strike out the obsolete parts and to condense and consolidate and bring together statutes in pari materia, so that you have here, except in so far as it is human to err, the laws of the United States under which we now live. And it will be necessary, if the bill passes Congress, that it shall pass without anyone undertaking to amend the law as it stands in this revision, because, once beginning to amend the revision by altering the law from what it is, will lead into an interminable sea in which we shall never find soundings and which will never find a shore. But if there be any omission of any provision of law, the theory of this revision is that that shall be supplied, and to that the committee desire to call the attention of the House.

I have taken the liberty, Mr. Speaker, to present this bill thus early in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws, the chairman of which, the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Poland], was associated with me on the last committee, together with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. Leach], in order that there may be an early report to the House, that the bill may be passed in its integrity early in the session and printed, for which arrangements have been made, at an early day and sent to the country, so that if any errors have crept in those errors may be corrected during this long session and a perfect body of the laws, or a body of the laws as nearly perfect as we can make it, shall be sent out for the guidance of the people of the United States. Before I press the motion to refer I yield to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Poland.]

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say a word in reference to this subject and to call the attention of Members of the House to it. It is now nearly eight years since a bill was passed for this revision. Three years each have been allowed to two several sets of commissioners to make the revision. A long time and a good deal of money have been spent to get the work in the state of forwardness in which it now is. As my friend from Massachusetts has said, the committee have endeavored to have this revision a perfect reflex of the existing national statutes.

Mr. POLAND. The expenditures have already all been incurred and the whole expense has been somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000.

* * * * * * *

I will say further, Mr. Speaker, that this work is already printed, and in a very few days at least every Member will be supplied with a copy of the entire work for his examination. It is already in print, but not stitched.

Mr. WOOD. I would ask the gentleman if he is not in error in estimating the expenses which have been involved in this codification, which has been going on for six years, and if it will not exceed twice the sum he names?

Mr. POLAND. Oh, no, sir; we have had two sets of commissioners for three years, at $5,000 each, and one of them was not paid for the full time. That would be $90,000, and then there is something for clerk hire.

* * * * * * *

The documents were then referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

* * * * * * *

REVISION OF THE LAWS.

[Jan. 14, 1874, p. 646.]

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Revision of the Laws to report a bill (H. R. 1215) revising and consolidating the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, 1873. I suppose, Mr. Speaker, it is understood by all gentlemen in the House that for a considerable number of years we have had commissioners at work making a revision of the United States statutes; that this work has been completed, laid before the House, and referred to the Committee on Revision of the Laws for examination. The committee now report this work for the consideration of the House.

* * * * * * *

This work, as gentlemen know, was done by three commissioners appointed under a law of Congress. Their labors were completed last May. Under a law passed on the very last day of the last session of Congress a subcommittee of the Committee on Revision of the Laws employed Mr. Durant, a lawyer of eminence in this city, to go over this revision and put it in the form of a bill to be brought before the House. The volume I hold in my hand is the work as completed by Mr. Durant, going over the work of the commission. * * * Therefore the committee, when they employed Mr. Durant to go over this work, directed him, in every case where he found that new legislation had been inserted by the commissioners, to strike out such changes. Mr. Durant has, in the main, done this.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suppose the committee, of course, have a written report accompanying this bill, which will set forth all the facts more fully; and if that report be printed it can be examined by Members of the House, which will, perhaps, be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. POLAND. Does the gentleman ask whether the committee has submitted a written report?

Mr. MAYNARD. Yes, sir.

Mr. POLAND. We have not made any written report and do not expect to make any. It would be impossible.

* * * * * * *

Mr. POLAND. But the committee have not yet gone through with the entire work. We have examined a considerable portion in reference to which the report is ready to be presented; but there are various chapters we have not yet examined.

We have not gone through with the entire work and expect to devote a great deal more time to its examination. We have, however, enough examined to lay before the House.

Mr. G. F. HOAR. I desire to inquire what is the parliamentary attitude of the bill? Has it been reported from the Clerk's desk?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. Poland], chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, reports this consolidated revision of the laws for some agreement of the House as to how it shall be disposed of.

* * * * * * *

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Durant, of this city, was employed under authority given to the committee at the close of the last Congress.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. * * * When we meet for this purpose and we come to a particular chapter, and it is stated that chapter contains no alteration of the law, and the committee has no amendment to suggest from the committee, and no Member present has any amendment to suggest, I do not suppose we need then do more than read it by its title and pass on to the next chapter.

Mr. NIBLACK. I agree with the gentleman, that if we debate it at all we will go on debating it indefinitely, and it will be an endless task. We have to trust the committee in great part. I propose to trust them in every respect, and to vote on this bill as the committee reported it, which is, in my judgment, the most practicable thing we can do. I think we ought to have a reasonable length of time given to Members to examine the subject and to dispose of it in some summary way.

Mr. POLAND. If my friend from Indiana had spent any time on this subject, he would see the utter impossibility of our adopting his suggestion. Now, no one man, no one member of the committee, can go through the whole of this. The work has been parceled out to different members of the committee for their special examination, and each one has some suggestion to make, or some amendment or alteration to move. I have discovered in that portion I have examined some things which I think are not perfect as they stand. We want to amend the work of the commissioners. It is utterly impossible that our suggestions and amendments should be laid before the Members. The work has been printed. It is utterly impossible that Members of this House should know everything about it. While I expect about as much faith will be given to us as my friend from Indiana suggests, I suppose the evening sessions which I propose will be more a session of the committee than of the House; but they will enable the members of the committee who are here, and as many Members of the House as may please to be here, to know about it; and when we go through a chapter, and any amendment is proposed and agreed to, we can then go on to the next chapter. It is utterly impossible that this can all be acted on any other way. We are willing to be out of everybody's way, and therefore I propose a series of evening sessions, which, I suppose, will practically be sessions of the committee.

Mr. NIBLACK. I desire to say one word in this connection. I do not wish to get rid of any responsibility which attaches to me as a Member of this House in regard to this revision or compilation, for I regard it as more of a compilation of existing laws than a revision of them.

* * * * * * *

Any consideration that may be given in this House will be of necessity merely a formal consideration, and will be likely to do more mischief than good.

Mr. LAWRENCE. * * * I know, sir, that it is not possible for any one Member to examine the whole volume. It embodies the labors of commissioners for six years, and also the labors of Thomas J. Durant for nine months. Now, the labors of six years and nine months can not well be understood by any one Member of the House. It is utterly impossible that any one Member should go over this volume to ascertain if the work has been rightly done or not. I do not suppose that with all that has been done absolute accuracy has been arrived at. My friend from Indiana [Mr. Niblack] said that he regarded this as rather a compilation of the laws than a revision of the laws. I am not sure that he is quite correct. This is not a compilation of the laws. This volume does not undertake to present the text of the statutes on any one subject as enacted by Congress. That would be utterly impossible. You have half a dozen statutes on a different subject, one modifying another, and a subsequent statute modifying both, and it is impossible to collect these together and preserve the original text of the laws passed by Congress. As a consequence of that, this revision undertakes to give not the language of Congress but a transcript of the laws; the reviser translates the ideas of Congress in his own words, giving his understanding of the law in his own words, and that I regard as rather a revision than a compilation.

* * * * * * * * *

Mr. POLAND. Well, sir, we will not trouble ourselves about the RECORD at present. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. HALE], who has charge of the naval appropriation bill, is a little impatient, and I am desirous to get this matter disposed of this morning, so as to leave the morning hour of to-morrow to some other committee. I ask unanimous consent that Wednesday and Thursday evenings of each week, beginning with next week, be devoted to the consideration of this measure until disposed of, the House meeting at half past 7, and I am willing that it shall be considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. STORM. The House will meet, I presume, for that business only?

The SPEAKER. For that business alone; nothing else will be considered in order. If there be no objection, the order will be made.

No objection was made.

Mr. Poland moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. It is suggested to me that unless some order be made by the House on the subject, the Congressional Printer will be bound to print this revision of the laws in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I had not anticipated any such consequence.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks he will not be so bound; he will have to insert merely the title.

The SPEAKER. Last week the House ordered that on Wednesday and Thursday evenings of each week at half past 7 o'clock there should be sessions to consider the consolidated statutes of the United States, as reported by the Committee on Revision of the Laws. During the consideration of that subject the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. G. F. Hoar] will occupy the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The motion of Mr. Hale of New York was agreed to, there being—ayes 90, noes 55; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess till half past 7 p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., Mr. G. F. Hoar in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

REVISION OF THE STATUTES.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House meets this evening for the consideration of the bill reported from the Committee on Revision of the Laws of the United States. It is entitled "A bill (H. R. No. 1215) to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873."

Mr. POLAND. Mr. Speaker, the general purpose of the committee is very well shown by the title they have agreed upon for this revision. I will take no time to go into the history of this matter. It is known to every gentleman on this floor that for three years we had three commissioners at work revising the statutes of the United States.

* * * * * * * *

Our statutes had fallen into such a state of almost inextricable confusion that for many years it would have been almost impossible for anyone to ascertain from the statutes what the law was upon any particular subject. These commissioners had three years in which to complete their work. The time expired early in May last. Under the act by which these commissioners were appointed they were authorized to make changes in the law to a certain extent for the purpose of harmonizing the provisions of the statutes, of which liberty they availed themselves to some extent but probably not to any greater extent than by the law they were warranted in doing.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. BECK. Is this the book as revised by Mr. Durant, or is there a separate report?

Mr. POLAND. That is the volume as revised by Mr. Durant.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. POLAND. I ask the Clerk to read——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment of the bill. Unless other order is made by the House, the Chair will direct the several chapters of the bill to be read by their titles.

Mr. POLAND. I apprehend, Mr. Speaker, the first question will be on the adoption of this title which the committee has submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

"House bill No. 1215, to revise and consolidate the statutes of the United States in force on the 1st day of December, A. D. 1873."

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the gentleman will allow me, this volume, which he says contains the whole thing, has no title whatever.

Mr. POLAND. The committee move this title.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That is not in this volume.

Mr. POLAND. It is our first amendment.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Does it come under another erratum? I think the title had better be deferred until we get through with this bill. The title is the last thing in order in legislation.

Mr. POLAND. We desire to establish, in the first place, that this was not a work where there was to be new legislation.

Mr. ELDREDGE. We ought to have the babe before we christen it. [Laughter.]

* * * * * * * *

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The understanding of the Chair is that the bill has had several readings by its title without objection. The title which has been just reported by the committee is the title read to the House on the second reading of the bill.

* * * * * * * *

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will complete his statement, with the leave of the gentleman from Wisconsin. This stands as the title of the bill unless a motion be made to amend it. It will be in order after the adoption of the bill, with or without amendment, as the case may be, to amend the title. This now stands as the title of the bill.

* * * * * * * *

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The House is not in session as a Committee of the Whole, but is in session as the House in execution of a special order.

* * * * * * * *

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The following section was read:

"SEC. 3. The word 'vessel' includes every description of water craft or other artificial contrivance used, or capable of being used, as a means of transportation on water. It also includes every utensil for holding liquid or other substances."

* * * * * * * *

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Speaker, the act of Congress of June 27, 1866, authorized the appointment of three persons, learned in the law, for the term of three years, as commissioners—

"To revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate all statutes of the United States, general and permanent in their nature." (14 Stats., 74.)

The commissioners were duly appointed, and executed a part of the work assigned them, when the term expired. Congress by act of May 4, 1870, revived the original statute and authorized the appointment of three commissioners to complete the work within three years. (16 Stat., 96.) The commissioners were duly appointed. They were authorized not merely to copy and arrange in proper order and classify in heads the actual text of the statutes in force, but to "supply the omissions and amend the imperfections of the original text."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

"SEC. 82. After the 4th day of March, 1875, no money shall be paid from the Treasury for the publication of the laws in newspapers."

Mr. CONGER. We have made a good start in this good work to-night, and I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. POLAND. I would suggest that at the rate we have gone to-night it will take a hundred evenings to complete the work.

Mr. CONGER. I think we had better not discourage Members by keeping them too late the first night.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. E. R. HOAR. I will say to the Members of the House present, if they think we can safely go on, without the reading, to the end of this title (title 2, the Congress), that I have carefully compared every section in that title, and that there is no amendment to be offered by the committee or by the revisers; and I believe that every section will be found to correspond exactly with the law as it now stands—the laws being recent which apply to the subject—with one single exception. This is in section 89, where the committee propose to strike out three or four words which are wholly unnecessary. That is the whole amendment, to the end of this title, which they propose to make. If it would be in accordance with the wishes of gentlemen present that these chapters under these circumstances should be read by their title, and that we should consider the work completed as far as title 3, commencing on page 28, this would make about the proportion of work we had hoped to get through with to-night. If any gentleman objects, or has any reason to think that there is anything here to which he wishes to call attention, I will not press the suggestion I have made.

* * * * * * * *

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Conger] insist on his motion?

Mr. CONGER. I am under the necessity of objecting to-night to passing over any of these chapters without reading. I may assent hereafter to such a thing being done.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Then I assent to the motion of adjournment.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

[Jan. 22, 1874, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 849.]

The House reassembled at half past 7 o'clock p. m., Mr. G. F. Hoar in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. SPEER. Has the reading of the bill been dispensed with?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill has had two readings.

Mr. SPEER. In full?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By title. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. DURHAM. I understood one of the committee who had this branch of the subject under consideration said he could vouch for the correctness of the balance of this title; and if there is no objection, I move that the balance of this title be read only by the titles of the chapters.

Mr. POLAND. The committee, I believe, proposes a slight amendment in section 89.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If no objection be made, the reading of the sections, with the exception of section 89, will be omitted.

Mr. POLAND. Therefore all the legislation subsequent to the 1st day of December is to be an alteration of the law as we will leave it.

Mr. DURHAM. I inquire whether the reading of this, too, can not be dispensed with?

Mr. E. R. HOAR. There is an amendment to be made in the next section.

Mr. DURHAM. Of course, except as you propose to amend it.

Mr. MCCRARY. There is no possibility, and, indeed, there is no necessity, for reading this entire volume through; and when we reach the beginning of each chapter I see no objection to making a general order to read the title only and such sections as may be designated, in reference to which there may be some amendment to be offered, either by the committee or by any gentleman upon the floor. And to carry out that suggestion, I propose to make the following order.

* * * * * * * *

Mr. POLAND. So far as the committee are concerned, they prefer no order should be made, but that we proceed by unanimous consent. We have no reason to suppose that every Member of the House is not anxious to get on with this work as speedily and as well as it can be done. I think we had better trust ourselves to the House than to have any order made.

* * * * * * * *

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless some order is adopted, under the rules of the House any Member may require the reading of any chapter of the bill, so that nothing will be gained by the course suggested by the gentleman from Vermont. If the House wishes to adopt the course suggested, an order had better be adopted to that effect.

Mr. CONGER. I believe it is understood by common consent that we shall proceed in the course proposed.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, after several nights of the evening sessions, on April 1, 1874, the Committee on Revision completed its work and the bill was passed, as appears on page 2714 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of that date.

During the evening Mr. Poland presented a written copy of the last chapter of the Revised Statutes on "Repealed provisions," which is the last title of this bill, to be known here as "establishing the code." You will see by the RECORD there that up till that moment those important provisions had not been presented to the House and had never been printed when they were passed and adopted. One Member suggested that they should be sent to the printer and that the House should wait until the next meeting to take them up, but it was decided it would take too much time. So when this code bill was presented 47 years ago the final title did not appear until the last night, and appeared then unprinted, important as it was. After seven years of effort the bill passed the House, the committee having offered its last amendment, and here is the record of that event:

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I now move the previous question on the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. Poland moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed, and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 9 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

This was at the evening session, and the bill then went to the Senate, and the House may be interested in some of the things that happened there, which follow:

REVISION IN THE SENATE.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 25, 1874, Senator Conkling, chairman of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, reported to the Senate H. R. 1215, to revise and consolidate the statutes in force December 1, 1873. He said:

They are now as nearly right as we can hope to get them by any additional process to which they could be subjected.

Senator Martin said:

I inquire whether these commissioners or the joint committee have condensed the statutes, changing their phraseology and clothing them to any considerable extent in new language.

Mr. Conkling said:

The commission find, if you please, a page of sections relating to a particular subject have condensed the true intent and meaning of that page of sections into words as few as they could employ for that purpose. Such has been the aim and object of the work. * * * And although phraseology, of course, has been changed, the aim throughout has been to preserve absolute identity of meaning, not to change the law in any particular, however minute, but to present in miniature or in condensation the law in all its parts, as it was actually found to exist dispersed through 17 volumes of statutes.

On page 4264 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, May 26, 1874, Mr. Conkling moved to proceed to the consideration of the bill:

The PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE. The bill is before the Senate.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CONKLING. Then I ask by unanimous consent the reading of the bill be waived except so far as the reading of specific parts of it may be called for by Senators.

* * * * * * *

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so understood.

The Senate adjourned then, leaving this as unfinished business.

In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of May 27, 1874, page 4284, the bill was taken up.

The Chief Clerk read title 74, repealed provisions.

The bill was reported to the Senate without debate.

Senator Edmonds inquired as to how sure the committee was that it "does embrace existing law and nothing new," "as we necessarily take this revision entirely on trust?"

Mr. CONKLING. That is not a very easy question to answer. "How sure is the committee?" I scarcely know how to answer that.

Perhaps I should be more candid in my answer if I were to say to the Senator from Vermont that I have no expectation that this work is free from error. I have never known any revision of laws that was.

* * * * * * *

I presume errors will be found here, and as they are developed they must be corrected by future legislation.

Mr. EDMONDS. * * * But it is impracticable, as a fact, to do that at this session of Congress; and the question therefore recurs whether we are to let it go or whether we are to take it, as the committee ask us to do, in bulk, without reading or knowing its contents otherwise. I am disposed, for one, to take it, because, as the Senator from New York says, it undoubtedly does contain a very carefully prepared saving of all created and existing rights of everybody; and if there are errors, of course, they can be corrected hereafter, although that is not a good way to legislate as a rule.

Mr. CARPENTER (Mr. Anthony in the chair). The Senator from Indiana says this is a dangerous thing. That is undoubtedly so. It is dangerous to pass any law, because there may be a mistake in it that will harm somebody. That danger is inherent. We can not avoid that difficulty. Every exercise of sovereign power is dangerous in that sense, that if there is an error lurking in it and if it is not discovered it may do harm.

The Senator says this work has been done by three commissioners, and from that he derives an objection to it. I think it would have been an improvement if it could have been done by one competent man. Where you have got one thing to do, whether it be to carve a statue or paint a picture or revise the laws of Congress, if it can be done by one mind, you are more likely to have it correct than you are if it is participated in by more than one.

Now, what does the Senator suppose would become of that revision if it were to come in here and take the fate of ordinary bills in the Senate Chamber? The youngest boy born in this country to-day never would live to see it disposed of. Suppose it were put into installments, part of it taken up one session and part another, by the time you had gone through two or three sessions your accumulated legislation would make a new revision absolutely necessary; you never would end anything and never would come to any conclusion.

Undoubtedly there will be found errors in this revision. There never was a revision made, as the Senator from New York has said, that did not have errors. It is not in the nature of things that the revision of so many statutes should be absolutely perfect. All that we can do is to give it every guaranty that such a work can have that it is correct. The great benefit of it is that it gives us a starting point for the law, and if errors are discovered, as undoubtedly there will be more or less, they are to be corrected by subsequent legislation, and every man, every citizen, every lawyer, every judge knows what he has got to start with to find what the law is. He is to start with that volume, and then subsequent legislation is all he has got to discover. Tell any common man in the complicated relations of official life who is an internal-revenue collector, if you please, or has something to do with the distilling business, that he is supposed to know all the law on that subject and it is to be found in 17 volumes, and he is to be indicted if omits a single particular or mistakes a single provision, and he would as soon go to the insane asylum at once as attempt to wade through it. Now, then, he has got a start. He has got the statute of revision; and then he has got to look to subsequent legislation and nothing else, and is certain he has all the enactments on the subject before him.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, from a glimpse of these old records one gets a good view of just how the House passed the only code the United States ever published. You will readily observe that the care and preparation given that bill does not compare with that given the present bill. The first part of this bill was presented to the House nearly a year and three months ago, so that the Members could read it. Almost a third of it was published so that every Member had an opportunity to read it and every critic a chance to examine it more than eight months ago, and it has been appearing since in galley form continuously. The old bill was not nearly completed when the House began to act upon it and the last great chapter was never printed until after it was passed. This bill must be at least fully as accurate as the other one, which has withstood the storms of almost half a century. At that time except that the committee had read to the House the particular sections comparatively insignificant in number which the committee desired to amend, the bill was read each time by title only. It was conceded that no advantage would be gained by further reading and that if further reading were attempted it would be impossible for the United States to ever have a code, without which their laws would remain scattered as they were then through 17 great volumes. There was no general debate in the House and the moment the committee's last amendment was adopted, the previous question was moved and carried, and the bill was passed, being read by title, and the House adjourned. In the Senate not a line of the bill was read, and less than an hour's discussion occurred. Conkling, Edmonds, Carpenter, Morton, among the greatest lawyers and Senators who ever served our country, took part in those proceedings. In the House, Garfield, Hoar, Beck, Alexander H. Stephens, Butler, Poland, men of equal distinction at the bar and in the councils of the Republic, participated in a discussion of and the adoption of that great measure, all by these almost summary proceedings. That bill possessed no citation at the heel of each section, as does this bill, by which its accuracy can be tested. That bill had no report, and the report in this bill on each section is with the section. We hope that the Members will make examination for themselves. The committee feels that every possible care has been taken and that the bill is as free from the probability of mistake as it can be made, so we present it for the approval of the House, in the hope that the bench, the bar, and the litigants of our country, for the first time in a long generation, may be able to find the law of the land with accuracy and promptness whenever they shall appeal to it.

The committee reports unanimously in favor of the adoption of this Code of the Laws of the United States, and hopes that it may receive the approval of the House at the earliest possible date, so that it may have time for consideration in the Senate.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I did not know until this morning that anything would be expected of me in the way of a statement about this matter, but having been informed that something would be expected, I have made a brief summary of the reasons that influenced the undertaking which our committee has now completed.

The statute law of the United States, which has in the course of time become very extensive, is now to be found in the Revised Statutes—a single large volume—published in 1878 and the many volumes of Statutes at Large published since then.

The passage of this bill, which embodies a complete codification, will gather into one volume of 1,251 pages, exclusive of the index, and containing 10,747 sections, the entire statute law as it was in effect on the 4th day of March, 1919. This volume as now actually printed and submitted for consideration and approval will be furnished with a careful and exhaustive index made in the same manner in which the Statutes at Large are indexed.

The committee—and the credit is due very largely to the able and energetic chairman [Mr. LITTLE]—was led to undertake this compilation work by several facts of a very controlling character, some of which I may indicate.

The mass of statutes, which are scattered through many volumes, for that very reason are not available for quick and easy reference. This makes difficult the ascertainment of the law on any given subject and the use of the law as evidence in the trial of cases.

The publication of 1878 is now out of date, and there has been but a limited distribution of the annual publications. The compilations issued by various publishing companies and individuals are unofficial, and they are expensive, their present cost, as I found this morning by inquiry at a local bookstore, ranging from a maximum of over $100 for an annotated compilation to a minimum of about $10 for the very cheapest compilation now purchasable.

Mr. BEE. Will it interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Not at all.

Mr. BEE. Complimenting the committee on its work, why is not the index included in the volume that has been published as a part of it?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The indexing of the Statutes at Large has, I believe, always been done under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing. This bill, if approved by the President, will, I assume, go into the hands of that committee and the index will be prepared under its supervision.

Mr. BEE. Is it proposed to take these volumes in the pamphlet form that are now supplied and bind them and furnish them to the public at cost price, or what is purposed to be done in the way of general distribution?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The thought of some of the members of the committee, I being one of that number, is that when this volume is printed, assuming that the bill is enacted into law, it will be freely distributed among the agencies and officials of the Government, and perhaps also among the courts of record of the various States, and that beyond that it will be available to the public at a cost of not more than $5. The bill is printed in such form—not in the ordinary bill form—that the type or plates used in printing the bill can be used to print as many copies of the volume as are desired or may be directed by Congress.

Mr. BEE. After the bill has been passed and approved.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; after the bill has passed and been approved. I was going on to say that the demand for this official compilation, which will be within reach of the public on very easy terms, has been very urgently made by, I think I may say, the general public and by the bench and bar as well as by officials of the Government in the executive branch. Every effort has been made by the committee, as I am in position to testify, to do the work accurately, and I believe it has been done as accurately as is possible. The committee does not, of course, claim to be infallible, but does believe it has produced a codification which is just as dependable as any that has ever been made.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In the distribution of these copies will it be possible for the individual lawyer to secure a copy of the Government?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is no thought, I believe, that the distribution or sale shall be made otherwise than by the Government itself. I hope very much that it will be possible for the Government to sell the volume at a price not to exceed $5 and to anyone who wishes to buy it.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. I understand the revision brings up to date the law in force up to the adjournment of the last session and excludes all that has been repealed and abrogated otherwise, and that there has been no attempt at amendments or additions.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is correct. We are submitting a compilation or codification and not a revision. It would have been an almost endless and a dangerous task to attempt to do more than compile. The aim has been to reveal in a single volume all of the living law, as it was enacted, without any change that can be regarded as an amendment or addition.

Mr. RAKER. One further question: The material that the committee have accumulated, as suggested by the gentleman from Virginia and also by the gentleman from Kansas when the act was originally enacted with its amendments and additions—when the volume is finally printed, can all of that be inserted at the end of each section so that we can have an entire history of the section?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is such a history afforded by the references given in the individual sections to the statutory sources from which they are derived.

Mr. RAKER. So that if one picks up a section as now printed he will find the history of that statute from the beginning down to the compilation of the act?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. He will find the history furnished by citation in each section of the enactments that have been consulted in determining that the law is as written in that section. I hope very much that gentlemen may find it practicable to examine the bill before it is brought forward for consideration so that the advantage of their criticism may be had.

WAR TROPHIES.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 643, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill S. 643, disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for. The Clerk will report the title to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

S. 643. An act to provide for the equitable distribution of captured war devices and trophies to the States and Territories of the United States and to the District of Columbia.

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, has the gentleman taken this up with the ranking member of the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. KAHN. I have not taken it up with Mr. FIELDS, for I have not seen him here; but I am quite sure that it will be satisfactory to him. I propose to put him on the conference.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. KAHN, Mr. MCKENZIE, and Mr. FIELDS.

BALTIMORE DRY DOCKS & SHIPBUILDING CO.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1865) for the relief of the Baltimore Dry Docks & Shipbuilding Co. The bill was passed by the Senate March 23 and referred back to the Committee on Claims on March 25.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Claims from the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1865.

Mr. WINGO. What is the necessity for this action?

Mr. EDMONDS. I wish to get the bill through. The Senate took out the clause which the House disagreed to——

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman wants to get the bill before the House?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes. If my request is agreed to, I propose to make a request to agree to the Senate amendment and let the bill go through.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, what is the bill?

Mr. EDMONDS. This bill is to send the case to the United States court for adjudication. It grows out of a collision that occurred between two boats. The Senate amendment strikes out the appropriation of money, and if we agree to the Senate amendment there is no appropriation, but it refers the matter to the court for settlement.

Mr. GARD. Is it a bill that the House passed?

Mr. EDMONDS. The House passed a bill with a clause in it appropriating the money. The Senate struck out that clause, and I simply want to agree to that amendment, as it seems to be the sentiment of the House that we should not appropriate money for these claims.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. MONTAGUE. This bill follows one or two precedents, does it not?

Mr. EDMONDS. It follows what the House has agreed to in bills that have passed since this bill passed the House.

Mr. MONTAGUE. There have been several acts on the same subject.

Mr. EDMONDS. Yes.

Mr. BEE. As I understand it, it merely proposes to conform to the Senate views and strikes out the appropriation of money that the House has passed, and let it go to the court, so that the court may adjudicate it, whatever amount may be due.

Mr. EDMONDS. That is correct.

Mr. GARD. What was the original appropriation?

Mr. EDMONDS. It was not an appropriation. It allowed the court to pay the damages, whatever they were.

Mr. GARD. What was the appropriation carried in this bill as it passed the House?

Mr. EDMONDS. None at all. It allowed the courts to pay the damages, whatever were found.

Mr. GARD. I understood the gentleman to say that there was an appropriation and that the Senate struck it out.

Mr. EDMONDS. There was an authority for an appropriation. The bill provided that any decree of the court should be paid out of the money in the Treasury of the United States. That authority was in the bill.

Mr. GARD. And what is the Senate amendment?

Mr. EDMONDS. It struck out that and it allows the court only to adjudicate the claim and report back how much the damage is.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDMONDS. Mr. Speaker, I now move that the Senate amendment be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the Senate amendment be agreed to. The Clerk will report the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 7, strike out all after "further" down to and including "further" in line 11.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the Clerk report the language stricken out?

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the language stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

That should damage be found to be due from the United States to the owner of said dry dock, the amount of the final decree or decrees therefor shall be paid out of any money in the United States Treasury not otherwise appropriated for: And provided further.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the District of Columbia appropriation bill, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The Clerk reported the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of corporation counsel: Corporation counsel, $4,500; assistants—first $3,000, second $2,500, third $2,000, fourth $1,800, fifth $1,500, sixth $1,500, seventh $1,500; clerk, $1,400; stenographer and typewriter, $1,200; two stenographers, at $900 each; clerk, $720; in all, $23,420.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I notice that the compensation of the corporation counsel is fixed at $4,500. Do the duties of the corporation counsel require all of his time in the discharge of his office? City attorneys all over the United States, in much smaller cities, draw larger pay than that.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. He spends all of his time in connection with the duties of that office and in connection with his duties as counsel for the Public Utilities Commission.

Mr. BEE. Does he receive additional compensation for that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. He receives $1,000 for that.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Public Utilities Commission, $43,340.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of getting some information. Is there any increase in this salary of the executive secretary of the Public Utilities Commission?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is not.

Mr. GARD. The Public Utilities Commission, as I remember it, is composed of the personnel of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. That is correct.

Mr. GARD. Has there been any bill from any legislative committee which seeks to make a different Public Utilities Commission than one composed of the Commissioners of the District?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know of any. It has been suggested; I have heard it rumored that there would be, but I know of none.

Mr. GARD. It would seem to me that the Public Utilities Commission in the District of Columbia, being composed, as it is, of the Commissioners of the District, does not constitute the kind of body which would have the opportunity of devoting the very necessary services which a public utility commission should demand. We are sadly in need in the District of Columbia of better public utilities. We have the very strange situation here in the District of having two street car lines, one line making money, in a thriving condition, and the other with an increased fare unable to make money. The additional fare is thrust upon one street car company and a growing increase in fare is continually asked by the other. The service of the street car companies is not similar. In the past there seems to have been no way by which these different street car companies could be under such supervision by the Public Utilities Commission that would require uniformity of service. Of course, it is true that one street car company has a greater area of traffic in what may be called suburban districts, and possibly that to some extent would control the fact that it seems to be unable to get along in a financial way; but whether that be a thing of immediate interest or not, I take it that the people of the District are entitled to a street car service and a public utilities service which are consistent with the amount of money they are required to spend. We get on one of these cars, if we are successful in getting on at all, and for seven and a half cents, I believe, if we buy four tokens, we are accorded the privilege of carrying these lavallière-like sections around in our pockets, and now one of the street car companies wants us to part with this great privilege and to pay the street car company a straight fare of 8 cents. This is something that affects everybody in the District, and I make this statement to bring it to the additional knowledge of the chairman of the committee to see what information he has. Does he not think that better results could be obtained if we had a well-organized and efficient public utilities commmission composed of others than the Commissioners of the District?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I hope the gentleman does not want me to denounce the present commission, who act as a utilities commission, for their actions?

Mr. GARD. No; I do not want to denounce anybody.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Every word the gentleman has said is familiar to me and the committee of which I am a member, every word of it. Now, I know of no objection to these companies uniting, consolidating, and arranging the matter satisfactorily. I know of another way to compel them, and that would be by legislation. I question very much whether the utilities commission under the present law could do it. There has been very much discussion along that line. I agree very much with what the gentleman has said, but I do not believe that the utilities commission as at present organized has neglected their duty as far as the law authorized them to proceed.

Mr. GARD. I do not want the gentleman to understand I have even suggested that they have neglected their duty. My suggestion is that the public utilities law be so amended as to give increased authority for doing those things I think should be done in the interest of the people of the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know the gentleman is right along that line, but it is a matter of legislation rather than anything that should appear upon an appropriation bill, and that is one reason why this committee has not taken this matter up.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, if I may have the attention of the chairman of the committee—a moment ago the gentleman said that the salary of the corporation counsel was taken care of with a thousand dollars additional from the funds of the Public Utilities Commission. I want to ask the gentleman under which heading or item the thousand dollars additional salary for the corporation counsel would be found?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. In lines 9, 10, and 11, page 9, the gentleman will find the following:

For incidental and all other general necessary expenses authorized by law, including the employment of expert services where necessary, $12,500.

Mr. BEE. Who will authorize the $1,000 to go to the corporation counsel?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The law does.

Mr. BEE. In furtherance of what the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD] has just said, I want to ask the chairman of the committee what are the duties of the Public Utilities Commission in the city of Washington? The street car companies belong to private individuals. What public utilities in the city of Washington are controlled by the Public Utilities Commission, if any?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Gas, telephone, electric light, street railroads, and a number of others.

Mr. BEE. They all belong to private institutions?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. BEE. This Public Utilities Commission is composed of the present Board of Commissioners——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. By positive law now upon the statute books.

Mr. BEE. I am not much of an advocate of public ownership, but I have often wondered whether it would not be well to experiment on the District of Columbia by owning the street car and telephone systems and take them out of the hands of the people who create the conditions the gentleman from Ohio has so well expressed.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is a diversity of opinion along that same line.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For postage for strictly official mail matter, $12,500.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the pro forma amendment to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Which paragraph?

Mr. BLANTON. The one just read.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Telephones?

Mr. BLANTON. The whole paragraph that has just been read, for the purpose of calling attention to a matter which I think is pertinent.

Mr. Chairman, Washington newspapers reported in August last that Mr. Joseph H. Hurley, president of the organization of city employees in Washington, demanded of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia that unless a certain specified wage increase was granted within two days to the several thousand employees in his organization they would strike and tie up every public utility in the District. Even water for the whole District of Columbia, with its 455,428 people, was at stake. The commissioners hesitated and asked for more time. Government Conciliators Mahany and Colpoys, from the Department of Labor, being union sympathizers, tried to force compliance and prevent more time being granted. I immediately sent the following telegram:

ALBANY, TEX., August 6, 1920.

Hon. LOUIS BROWNLOW and Col. CHARLES W. KUTZ,
Commissioners District of Columbia, Washington, D. C.:

The law and Constitution loving citizens of the United States heartily indorse your action in refusing to be held up and subject Government business to demands of highwaymen. If Government employees strike, then kick them out permanently, as Coolidge did police in Boston, and fill their places with loyal service men. As one Member of Congress I denounce the action of Conciliators Mahany and Colpoys as a disgrace to our Government and grounds for their immediate removal from public office. The first duty Congress owes to the people is to separate all Government employees from striking organizations. The United States must remain the one supreme Union, enforcing law and order and protecting all of its people against selfish class demands.

THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Congressman.

I received the following reply from the commissioners:

ENGINEER COMMISSIONER DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
Washington, August 7, 1920.

Congressman THOMAS L. BLANTON,
Albany, Tex.

MY DEAR MR. BLANTON: Beg to acknowledge receipt of your telegram of August 6, in which you indorse the action of the commissioners in refusing to accede to the demands of the City Employees' Union, even when supported by the conciliators of the Department of Labor.

We believe that we are entirely right in the matter, and appreciate your words of commendation.

Very truly, yours,

C. W. KUTZ,
Colonel, Corps of Engineers, U. S. Army,
Engineer Commissioner District of Columbia.

In the last session of Congress we fortunately succeeded in separating the police and the firemen in the District of Columbia from the American Federation of Labor and strike organizations. It is equally as important that we should separate all other employees of this Government from strike organizations, and prohibit them from striking against their Government. Otherwise, sooner or later, we are going to have the disgraceful spectacle of Government employees striking against their own Government.

Let me read you the following from the leading daily newspaper in Wichita, Kans., issue of December 10, 1920:

WILL THE ARMY BE UNIONIZED?

Local No. 215, Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind., has been formed recently. Its membership is drawn from the quartermaster's department of the detachment of the United States Army stationed at that place.

This local is a part of the National Federation of Federal Employees.

Federal employees throughout the Nation have become pretty well organized into unions, and the main office is at 1423 New York Avenue NW., Washington, D. C. Among the members of this organization are postal employees, railway mail clerks, and various law-enforcement officers of the Government service.

The organization of the labor branch of Federal service is one thing. The organization of public safety officers is another. The unionization of law-enforcement officers recalls the issue brought up on the Boston police strike, and the move to unionize the Army itself is a new and startling one.

What would happen if the United States Army should be entirely unionized and some radical leader should issue an order that was in conflict with the orders of the Government or superior officers? Would the soldier obey his union officer or his Army officer? Could a soldier strike for higher wages? Could he refuse to serve except upon condition that certain demands were granted?

We do not believe this new move is generally known. So far as we have noticed there has been no public statement of the project. It may be well to inquire into the nature and purpose of the enterprise.

I heartily congratulate the United States Senate for passing yesterday the Poindexter bill to prevent strikes on railroads, where the United States mail and our commerce, as well as human beings, are to be protected in the future. We ought to promptly pass that measure as soon as it reaches the House.

The industrial problem with no agreed solution is still the most dangerous menace to our Republic. Every posted statesman knows that here as in Europe organized labor is controlled by foreign radicals in deep sympathy with the Russian Soviet. England, France, and Italy have all been cowed by it ever since the armistice, and can not fight or repel bolshevism because sympathizing unions forbid. Col. House warned in vain. In Italy unions have forcibly taken mines and factories away from the owners, are holding same by armed forces, and threaten to confiscate all industries. Italy's Government seems impotent to protect life and private property. This same doctrine is openly preached and advocated by unions in England, France, and the United States. Labor journals here are still advocating and demanding the Plumb plan, which is to take the $20,000,000,000 of privately owned railroad properties away from the owners and turn it over to the employees. Members of the machinist's union still threaten to take over and confiscate the steel mills. Miners still threaten to take over and confiscate the coal mines. Employees still threaten to take over and confiscate all the factories. All industries are thus menaced by bolshevik threats.

And while the public still sleeps and officials are cowed, unions are successfully carrying out their program. They will support only such candidates who will bind themselves unequivocally in pledged questionnaires answered to their satisfaction.

The soviet procedure of taking over and confiscating all industries is their ultimate goal. They are strengthening their forces through propagation of the closed shop. And this is why Samuel Gompers has recently denounced the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, because in its program to save the Republic from bolshevism it has insisted on the open shop.

On front pages numerous labor journals claim a great closed-shop victory, asserting that by over 75,000 votes Texas conclusively repudiated the open shop. This is not true. Fully 100,000 ardent advocates of the open shop voted for Mr. Neff. Many ignored this question. Many held it in abeyance, deeming other matters of controlling importance. Many did not understand the question or its scope or the full meaning of its descriptive idioms. Many personally disliked its champion. With the closed-shop issue fully understood and fairly before the people of Texas for decision, there would be a majority of more than 200,000 in favor of the open shop, for without it democracy and our Republic are doomed.

During the campaign for governor in Texas it is simply remarkable how many divergent views were expressed over the meaning of the terms open and closed shop, collective bargaining, and sympathetic strikes. Even Senator Bailey, able and usually well posted, displayed unfamiliarity and a want of understanding, for when answering my question 3, which I publicly propounded to the four candidates for governor, viz, "If elected, will you favor a law prohibiting all sympathetic strikes?" he answered, "No," because he said he believed that a man had the right to quit work whenever he pleased, with or without reason. Such inapropos answer was wholly irrelevant to my question, for in every sympathetic strike there are employees who are perfectly satisfied with their jobs, who have no grievance whatever against their employer, and who don't want to quit work, but who are forced to strike because their union has been influenced to so vote by some other union the members of which have a grievance. And in every sympathetic strike unions ruthlessly break sacred contracts. Unions hold their contracts binding upon and enforceable against employers, but so far as their own obligation is concerned treat contracts as mere scraps of paper. And thus unions make collective bargaining a farce.

What do these labor terms really mean? When employees organized into a union, acting through it or affiliation with other unions, select a common representative to act for them in negotiating the terms of a contract of employment with some employer, such constitutes collective bargaining. No sane public would deny to labor such a right. But a sane public must demand of labor that it respects its contract and performs it, and not treat it as a mere scrap of paper. In recent years labor has broken its contracts at will. There is no recourse. In all of the 6,000 strikes by organized labor during the war, they repudiated a sacred contract, and in all instances made extortionate demands. In the construction of many private buildings the same employees have repudiated their contract repeatedly, forcing a more onerous agreement almost each week, until both owner and builder frequently have been bankrupted before completion. Union representatives have become continual agitators, constantly demanding more and offering less, and assuming the authority of requiring new contracts, even when the employees are perfectly satisfied and are ignorant of such new demands.

Labor has well said that the open shop is the antithesis of the closed shop. The two can not exist together. No employer ever voluntarily consented to maintain a closed shop. There never has been an agreement mutually entered into between the employees and the employer for him to maintain a closed shop. In every case through coercion and intimidation the employer has been forced to thus agree, and thereby lose his right to run his own business, but he invariably passes all of the extra expense on to the public.

The open shop is where the owner at will employs either men or women, and whether union or nonunion, or both, just as he prefers, and exercises his own initiative in the conduct of his business, and has the right at will to specially reward service that is more than ordinarily efficient, and to discharge any employee who renders inefficient service. His employees may contract that he shall open and close at certain hours, that he shall furnish them with certain facilities and conveniences, and that they are to do only certain kind of work. It is a place where every American citizen has equal rights and an equal show without having to join a union.

The closed shop is one where the owner is permitted to employ only union members and where he must conduct his business strictly in accord with specifications dictated in a contract by union representatives; where he is not permitted to discharge any of his employees except his foreman; where he is prohibited from rewarding special efficiency or industry; where he can not change his business system without permission; where all complaints must be decided by union representatives; and where employees strike, walk out at will, refuse to work themselves, and refuse to permit anyone else to work in their places, who picket the establishment and assault and designate as "scabs" every honest American who is willing to earn a living by taking the job, and who will kill and murder and destroy by dynamite before they will let the employer resume business without granting all their demands.

In every controversy between labor and capital the public has paid the bill. All expenses and increases are regularly passed on to the public. Every concession granted is but another burden to be borne by the public. The time has come when the public must be safeguarded. The rights of the public must be held paramount to the rights of both capital and labor. We must force capital and labor to justly settle their differences in a way that will not further disturb the peace of the public. We must require capital to pay a living wage, and we must require labor to earn it by giving service worth it.

But what must be done and what is the solution for this industrial problem? Congress and State legislatures must bravely do their duty. They must quit truckling. The following action must be taken:

Unions must be forced to incorporate and made responsible for their contracts and all lawless acts.

Unions must be forced to purge themselves of all lawlessness, radicalism, and anarchy.

Sympathetic strikes must be prohibited by law.

Picketing of business establishments must be made a serious offense and stopped.

All police and firemen must be forced to separate from striking organizations and strikes by them prohibited.

It must be made a serious offense for any person to threaten, intimidate, or in any way interfere with any other person in their right to work.

Our boycott laws must be made to apply to labor as well as to capital.

The decision of the railway board must be made binding upon employees as well as the railroads. And railroads must be permitted to demote and discharge all inefficient or unsatisfactory employees to insure good service.

Intimidations forcing closed shops must be stopped.

Much of the above must be done by State legislatures as on account of State rights Congress will be prohibited from acting. Our governors and legislatures must follow the splendid example set by Kansas and protect the public from broils between labor and capital.

The late census gives the United States a population of 105,000,000 people. There are 5,000,000 members of unions and 100,000,000 people who do not belong to any union. Surely the rights of the 100,000,000 are superior to the rights of the 5,000,000. Nevertheless unions are now maintaining a strict boycott against the rest of mankind. Their labor journals now are weekly exhorting members of unions not to wear a garment that has not the union label in it, not to patronize a barber shop that is not union, not to buy a newspaper than is not made by a union plant maintaining a closed shop; to trade only at stores friendly to unions and which carry out union requirements. In building construction they will stop work if a single item of material is purchased from a nonunion store. They are instructed to employ union doctors, union dentists, and patronize union teachers where they are accessible. While members of unions feed and fatten off of the other 100,000,000 people whom they designate as "scabs," they boycott them all the time.

The open shop must be maintained throughout the United States. Chambers of commerce in every city must awake to the danger that menaces our Republic, and fight fire with fire. If organized labor can not successfully compete with unorganized labor, and offer to the public an equal amount of efficient service for each dollar paid, then organized labor must suffer, just as every lawyer, doctor, preacher, teacher, editor, and farmer suffers when he is not able to compete with his neighbor.

And Mr. Chairman, we owe it to the people of the United States to establish the American principle of the open shop here in the Nation's Capital. Requiring employees to join a union in order to hold their jobs here is a disgrace. To show you that after all a Congressman who will stand up and fight for all the people, and against class rule, is respected by labor organizations, I want to read to you a letter of commendation I received from Mr. Joseph H. Hurley, president of the City Employees' Association here in Washington, just 10 days after I telegraphed the commissioners here not to give in to their demands.

[City Employees' Association, Locals 127–128, affiliated with the National Federation of State, City, Town, and County Employees. Organized 1907. Office, 1311 G Street NW., rooms 306–307; phone, Franklin 3711. (Union seal 51.).]

WASHINGTON, D. C., August 17, 1920.

Hon. THOMAS LINDSAY BLANTON,
Member of Congress, Seventeenth District, Abilene, Tex.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: This organization, which is made up of the employees of the District government, at its last meeting took up your record since coming to the Congress of the United States as a Member. It gives me great pleasure to announce to you that nothing was uncovered which could be considered as at all discreditable to you. We went into consideration of your record as it pertained to labor very thoroughly, and whilst we differed with you in some respects as concerned minor matters, in the main we find that as regards the larger aspects of labor your votes and speeches were consistently used for the interest of those who toil with their hands.

We, of course, are aware that certain organizations and interests have been captiously critical of you, but our investigation has not justified them in the continuance of this attitude. We believe that men like yourself who are filling high positions should not be subject to harassment at the hands of those who have selfish interests to be served.

In the opinion of the men and women who work for the city government in this the Capital City of this great Nation, the interests of the seventeenth congressional district of Texas, nor any other district represented in Congress, has ever been more worthily and faithfully served than by the present incumbent from the seventeenth, yourself, and it is our hope that the intelligence displayed in sending you here in 1916 will continue to manifest itself for many years to come, and will eventuate in sending you to the Senate when Senator CULBERSON retires in the near future.

Very sincerely, yours, JOSEPH H. HURLEY,
President.

That shows you that if a man will stand up and act for all the people of the United States, although this union may fight you for a while, after calm reflection it will stand by you and with you, as many of the good union men did in my district in reelecting me by a good majority. I want to ask you if we are not going at this session to take action which will protect this Government from strikes against it by the public utility employees of this country, the employees of the Government and the Army and Navy. Do not you remember in that book on anarchy which William Z. Foster wrote, and which was printed and sent broadcast throughout this land, that his confederate, Jacob Margolas, the anarchist attorney who was disbarred from practice in Pittsburgh, advocated boring from within by unionizing every police officer, every Government employee, and the Army and the Navy? We ought to take steps right now to stop it. We have got to maintain an open shop in the United States. We ought to begin here in Washington with the United States Government. It is American to maintain an open shop, where every American citizen, man and woman alike, has an equal opportunity and advantage without joining a union and be subjected to the rules and regulations of that union, and where the whole business and commerce of this Government is dictated to by a little handful of class individuals. I appeal to my colleagues to stand here like men when that Senate bill comes here that was passed yesterday, and pass it by unanimous consent. And at the same time, as soon as opportunity offers, pass a law here that will separate every Government employee from striking organizations.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For carrying out the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to remove dangerous or unsafe buildings and parts thereof, and for other purposes," approved March 1, 1899, to pay members of the board of survey provided for therein, other than the inspector of buildings, at a compensation of not to exceed $10 for each survey, and to pay the cost of making safe or removing such buildings upon the refusal or neglect of the owners so to do, the unexpended balance of the appropriation made for this purpose for the fiscal year 1913 is reappropriated for the fiscal year 1922.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. How much is this unexpended balance at the present time, this 1913 appropriation mentioned at the top of page 17, for removing dangerous and unsafe buildings?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is quite small. It is not very large. They have the $10,000. I could not tell you until I look at the hearings. I will look it up and let you know in a little while.

Mr. WALSH. Is it considered necessary that we continue this money available for this purpose?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think so. They wanted more. I think it is within the limit of $10,000. They thought they ought to have more than that in case of emergency. In fact, they wanted it double and treble that, but we cut them down to the bone.

Mr. WALSH. Have they expended some money each year since 1913?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Very little. But there might be an emergency arise in which they would want to spend $5,000 or $10,000. It does not do any harm to let it lie there.

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me if this is to be a continuing fund for an emergency the best way to do is to make an appropriation each year rather than carry over an appropriation from 1913.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I have no objection, and I did not have any at the time, to striking out the entire matter, so far as that is concerned; but it is just as easy to reappropriate as to make another appropriation. There is no special difference.

Mr. WALSH. That is so with a lot of these appropriations. They might be handled that way. It seems to me if this is to be a permanent part of the functions of the commissioners they ought to come in and get an appropriation each year and not ask to have an appropriation made seven or eight years ago continued available. They ought to be able to close their books up each year on all these matters.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman wants to make a point of order, I will not object.

Mr. WALSH. I will not insist on the point of order. I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order, which I did not make.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Court of Appeals Building: For fitting up the top story and basement of the Court of Appeals Building to provide accommodations for the office of the recorder of deeds, including material and labor and each and every item incident to such work, $22,000, to be available immediately. This work and the expenditure of this sum shall be under the supervision and direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph. How did the Appropriations Committee bring in an item like this?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman that when this new building of the Court of Appeals was erected it was the intention not only to house the Court of Appeals but the recorder also. The Appropriations Committee has been surprised that that was not done. The building was constructed at considerable expense. Now, in the arrangement and the partition of the building among the judges, clerks, and so forth, of the Court of Appeals, they have taken up all the room except the basement, and since then we have been paying $6,000 a year as rent for the Recorder of Deeds. Now, we have made this appropriation to rearrange the basement and supply the deficiency and have stricken out the $6,000 for rent each year. In other words, we will save the entire amount of this rent in a little over three years. That is what we have done it for.

Mr. WALSH. That is all right, but your committee has not any jurisdiction.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All right. Strike it out, and we will continue to pay the $6,000.

Mr. WALSH. That is all right. These people should come to recognize now that the appropriation should be made by one committee, and legislation must be asked for by the other committees of the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I understand there is an authorization for this item.

Mr. WALSH. For fitting up the top story and basement?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes, sir; in the overhauling of that and the building. The Court of Appeals Building has just been extensively remodeled.

It is my understanding that that authorization would include this as well. The Court of Appeals Building, as the gentleman understands, is a large building, which at the present time is occupied only by the Court of Appeals, a court of three members.

Mr. WALSH. Well, the Court of Appeals Building was transformed or refitted under authority carried some few years ago, and that work has been completed, and they have moved in there, and have expended money within the amount set aside for the purpose This is asking for an additional appropriation which does not come within the authority originally conferred. It is asking for an additional appropriation beyond the amount authorized to be expended for refitting and reconstructing and rearranging this building.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman understands that very frequently an authorization is passed and the appropriations under it are made from time to time. In this particular case the building was remodeled, and a part of it, the third floor, has not been completed, and that being now available for the use of the register, if put into condition, the committee thought it wise to complete the improvements of the building in that way.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman that I have sent for the clerk to the committee to bring the authorities, so that if you will pass this over for a few moments I think we can clear it up.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that this item be passed over temporarily without prejudice, with a point of order pending.

Mr. TILSON. There are probably plenty of idle committees sitting around here that probably have jurisdiction of this matter, and it should be shown that this item is authorized by law. Otherwise it should go out on a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

District Building: For fuel, light, power, repairs (including $8,000 for special repairs to the roof), laundry, mechanics, and labor not to exceed $5,000, and miscellaneous supplies, $42,500.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. What is this special item of $8,000, repairs for the roof of the District Building, on page 19?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. My understanding is that the roof is leaking badly. They have to keep 40 or 50 pails there now to prevent the leaking roof from injuring the building.

Mr. WALSH. They had $35,000 last year for repairs of this building.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Since then the roof has been leaking very badly.

Mr. WALSH. Since they spent that money?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. I think about $8,000 is needed for repairs on the roof.

Mr. WALSH. But what is the need of carrying the language, "including $8,000 for special repairs to the roof," when they have language already in there that will permit them to make repairs to any part of the building?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The point is to specifically state it, so that next year, when we make an appropriation, we can strike out the $8,000 and not add it to the $42,500. This was put in for that reason.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Bridges: For construction and repair, including the allowance to the overseer of bridges for the maintenance of an automobile for use in performance of his official duties of not to exceed $30 per month, $25,000. This appropriation shall be available for repairing, when necessary, any bridge carrying a public street over the right of way or property of any railway company, or for constructing, reconstructing, or repairing in such manner as shall in the judgment of the commissioners be necessary reasonably to accommodate public traffic, any bridge required to carry or carrying such traffic in a public street over the right of way or property of any canal company operating as such in the District of Columbia, on the neglect or refusal of such railway or canal company to do such work when notified and required by the commissioners, and the amounts thus expended shall be a valid and subsisting lien against the property of such railway company or of such canal company, and shall be collected from such railway company or from such canal company in the manner provided in section 5 of an act providing a permanent form of government for the District of Columbia, approved June 11, 1878, and shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do so simply for the purpose of inquiring of the chairman with reference to who is responsible for the atrocious condition of the so-called parks between the Union Station and the Senate Building, and whether that is looked after under the appropriation in this bill. This may not be the proper place, but I do not know where else inquiry should be made.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is not. There is nothing in this bill, at least, about it. The matter has not been called to our attention at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is that under the jurisdiction of your committee?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not say, but I hardly think it is. I think Congress appointed a special commission to look after that and clear off that particular plaza between the Union Station and the Capitol; and, as I told the gentleman the other day, I could not remember, but I rather think that our friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], is a member of that commission and could tell you something about it. But nothing of that kind has been called to the attention of the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia since I have been a member of that committee.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Who pays the expense, and how are the expenses of this commission paid? Is there no appropriation?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is no appropriation that I know of, unless it would be carried under the sundry civil bill. I think perhaps the chairman of the committee [Mr. GOOD] could tell the gentleman. But there is nothing in the District of Columbia bill, or in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, concerning it. Those are the only two subcommittees I am on.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman think this would be a matter for the attention of the Committee on the District of Columbia, or what committee?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Perhaps that, or the gentleman might make inquiry of the chairman of the sundry civil subcommittee. Matters of that kind are usually carried in that bill, amounting to several hundred million dollars. I think if the gentleman will inquire of the chairman of the committee, Mr. GOOD, he could tell the gentleman. I am informed that if there is any particular item of street cleaning needed, the commissioners see that the streets are kept clear. The removal of a building would have nothing to do with it.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. After these buildings are removed I should think it would be a park matter. Does the gentleman's bill cover park matters?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It does, but there is nothing connected with that in this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Has the gentleman no appropriation in his bill for that?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have no appropriation for that at all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Part of this region was cleaned up at one time, but under what appropriation it was carried I do not know.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think perhaps it was carried in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hereafter the jurisdiction and control of the Highway Bridge across the Potomac River, including appropriations and employees, shall be under the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on that paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask the committee the reason which prompted them in reporting this piece of permanent legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say to the gentleman that we reported this same provision last year, and it went out on a point of order. It is subject to a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. That is what will happen to it now.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will ask the gentleman to make the point of order if he desires to; but I will say this, that the War Department has come before us for two different years now and requested that it be taken out of their hands. We make all the appropriations for it, but we have no control over it. They do not want it. They desire to get away from it.

Mr. TILSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. TILSON. Why does not the gentleman from Minnesota instruct the War Department that under the rules of this House jurisdiction of legislation along that line is conferred upon some other committee, and in addition to that the subcommittee over which the gentleman so ably presides has plenty of other work to do, to consider the amounts appropriated, and that it ought not to be compelled to go into the matter of considering legislation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I wish the gentleman would make the point of order. It will relieve me from the responsibility.

Mr. TILSON. If it will relieve the gentleman, I will. There is an able Committee on the District of Columbia that is not overworked.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I know that.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman's committee is overworked, and I do not think it ought to begin putting legislation on these bills under the new régime.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The gentleman is causing the committee more trouble by not making the point of order immediately than he would if he made it at once.

Mr. TILSON. If it will facilitate matters, I will do so.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will withhold it for one moment, I think it ought to appear in the RECORD that the reason for the committee placing this provision in the bill is that the District Commissioners have a bridge engineer and other employees available, and they can save two or three thousand dollars a year by making this transfer.

Mr. TILSON. I am not going into the merits of the proposition. I assume that the disposition of this matter which has been made by the committee is a proper one. I have no doubt of that, but I do have serious doubt as to the propriety of this committee going into the matter at all. The committee has plenty of other work to do, and there are other committees in this House under whose jurisdiction this work should be done. The Committee on Appropriations ought not to take all the legislative duties away from other committees.

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman will allow me, the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia [Mr. MAPES] is present, and I think he will join with us in stating that his committee is not deprived of all its work. That committee has sufficient work to do, and he will not interfere with any step in the direction of economy in Government expenditure, even though the initiative does not come from his committee.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman's colleague [Mr. MAPES] is a very modest man and will not attempt to claim any additional jurisdiction for his committee; but I have no doubt that if the jurisdiction is left with him and his able committee, he will doubtless cause all proper matters to be considered.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] has the floor. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SISSON. I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. TILSON] if he does not think that when the time of the House and the time of the Senate is so much engrossed in other matters a little item like this, which has been carried heretofore, ought to be attended to in the appropriation bill and not in a separate bill introduced by a legislative committee? To illustrate, as has been stated on the floor, all the other bridges of this character are now under the control of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. The money is already appropriated in this bill to care for it. The War Department does not want it.

In the early history of the Republic the War Department controlled the building of these bridges. This is nothing but a hold over from the old régime, and it ought to have been taken over a good many years ago; but, like the clock winder that we had and like the man who carried the snuffbox up to the Vice President's chair up to the time that Jim Sherman became Vice President, these little things hang on. The result is that they come to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations. The suggestion is made by the War Department, and the commissioners realize that they ought to have it, and we put it in the bill solely because it ought to have been in the bill many years ago.

There is another little item where money is now due to the District of Columbia for the use of a bridge. There is a law for the charge, but there is no law for the collection of the half cent per passenger for the use of the bridge. It is another small item that is not important in itself; but when you begin to multiply these bills and these little items it takes up time. We have been most careful to keep out of this bill all sorts of legislation. In fact, there are a good many things that I think ought to have gone into it which are not in it because the committee left them out.

Mr. TILSON. The gentleman understands that there has been a change in the rules?

Mr. SISSON. We understand that.

Mr. TILSON. There are Members who doubt the wisdom of that change and whether it will work well or not. There is one thing certain: If it develops that all legislative power is gradually gravitating to the Appropriations Committee it certainly will not be permitted to work by the membership of this House.

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman from Connecticut is a good legislator, and I know that he does not want to make any captious objections.

Mr. TILSON. I do not; but this is a question of the rules with me.

Mr. SISSON. I understand; but that means legislation of a substantive character. Now, there are so many of these little items that may come up that will never be remedied in the world if we wait for legislation. We are cutting out the legislation from all of the bills that I have anything to do with, so that they contain less legislation than they ever have before. I believe that the infinitesimal amount of legislation on this bill is negligible.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We are cutting legislation out.

Mr. SISSON. Yes; we are cutting it out, but when there has been any legislation of any magnitude the committee has conferred in the past with Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, the chairman of the committee, and now with the gentleman from Michigan, the present chairman, as well, and if there was the least objection to it we have left it out of the bill. Little items like this mean that these little evils will go on——

Mr. TILSON. Does not the gentleman think that it means that the other committees, like the one that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] presides over so ably, will take up these matters and work them out? We should educate the people so that when they want anything in the way of legislation they will go to the proper committee and not to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SISSON. You do not have to teach us anything, because we are already doing that, but when these little matters come up, if the House desires that they shall continue to remain as they are, it can so determine. But these little items mean a great deal in the expense of the Government, where by a slight amendment of that kind you can correct the situation and have an orderly administration.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If you do not do it, this law will remain on the statute books until the gentleman and I are dead.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 12 of the act entitled "An act to provide for eliminating certain grade crossings on the line of the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad Co. in the city of Washington, D. C., and requiring said company to depress and elevate its tracks, and to enable it to relocate parts of its railroad therein, and for other purposes," approved February 12, 1901, is amended by adding thereto the following:

"And such tax shall be a lien, until paid, upon all the property of such street railway company and may be enforced in the name of the District of Columbia by a bill in equity brought by the Commissioners of said District in the supreme court of said District against such street railway company; and in addition thereto the District of Columbia shall have all common-law remedies for the collection of such tax and shall be entitled to those provided in paragraph 12, section 6, of the act entitled 'An act making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, and for other purposes,' approved July 1, 1902."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a short statement. The present law authorizes the tax of one-half a cent for each passenger hauled across the bridge on the railway. For the last two years that tax has not been paid, and I do not know of any accounting that has been made to the Commissioners of the District. I am informed that there is a balance of about $60,000 due the District of Columbia now for this unpaid tax, and there is no way under the present law, as I understand, of enforcing collection. So this was put on simply for the purpose of expediting the collection of this tax through the court. If the gentleman insists on his point of order, this will go on for three or four years before the District can get at it. We put this in simply to aid the District in enforcing the lien upon the $60,000. I assume that it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. BUCHANAN. If the gentleman will yield, I want to say that recently they not only have refused to pay the tax of one-half a cent for each passenger carried across the Government bridge on the street railway, but they have refused to make an accounting of the number of passengers for which they are liable. It is important that this law be passed by some committee as soon as possible, so that the Government can collect this tax.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase or condemnation of a piece of ground to take the place of the present site of Park View playground, $32,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order. Where is this proposed site and what has become of the present Park View site?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will read the hearings on that matter as it is very short.

Mr. DAVIS. The next item is:

"For the purchase or condemnation of a piece of ground to take the place of the present site of Park View playground, $32,000."

Miss BOARDMAN. The Park View playground is a piece of ground in lot 1. The area is 64,000 square feet. It is directly across from the Otis School, and north of the Park View School. It is the only vacant piece of ground near the school, and the school itself has no playground. The board of education and the superintendent of public schools have gone on record as favoring the purchase of this ground for a playground.

Mr. BUCHANAN. For the school, or for the playgrounds?

Miss BOARDMAN. It is used for the schools, the Park View School particularly.

Mr. SISSON. It is several squares from the school, is it not?

Col. KUTZ. Immediately across the street, and just north of the school. It is now used as a playground, and is covered with playground apparatus.

Miss BOARDMAN. It is directly across Otis Street and north of the Park View School.

Mr. SISSON. Is there a street in front of the Park View playground, or is it a vacant lot?

Miss BOARDMAN. There is a street.

Mr. WALSH. That gives no intimation as to what has become of the Park View playgrounds.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There never was a Park View playground that amounted to anything. They need this as additional playground to take its place. The trouble with many of the school buildings is that they were built without any playground, but now they are short of playgrounds and we have tried the best we could to help them.

Mr. WALSH. I can not understand from the hearings and the language in the bill what they are trying to do.

Mr. CRAMTON. They are now using vacant land under a temporary lease, and they may lose the use of that land at any time. It happens that the site they have in mind to buy is the land that they are now using and some additional land adjacent to it; but it would not be desirable to put it in the bill requiring them to buy that one particular piece of land, and so we simply authorize them to buy a piece of land to use for a playground in place of what they are now using. They anticipate that they will acquire the land that they are now using.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think they could secure the land they are now using under the language of this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is no question about it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think they could; however, if they take other land, they may be able to do so.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman would not want to limit them to that one particular piece of property and place them at the mercy of the owner?

Mr. WALSH. They are going to condemn it, are they not?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If it is necessary, they will condemn it.

Mr. WALSH. Then, if they condemn it, they would not be at the mercy of the owner.

Mr. CRAMTON. They do not always proceed through condemnation, and, of course, prefer not to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the purchase or condemnation of a piece of ground to take the place of Logan playground, $17,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make the reservation of the point of order for the purpose of asking if this is a similar case?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand from the hearings, they are using the site and they wish to make a purchase.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; the same thing.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman that the object of putting the condemnation proposition in is in order to assist in making a better purchase price. If the parties know they can and will condemn, if they can not make a favorable bargain with them, it serves to influence the purchase price. That is one reason we put it in.

The Clerk read as follows:

For placing wires of fire alarm, telegraph, police patrol, and telephone service underground in existing conduits, including costs of cables, terminal boxes, and posts, connections to and between existing conduits, manholes handholes, posts for fire-alarm and police boxes, extra labor, and other necessary items, $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, a comma will be inserted after the word "manholes," page 32, line 11.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Americanization work: For Americanization work and instruction of foreigners of all ages in both day and night classes, including a principal, who, for 10 months, shall give his full time to this work, at $1,800 per annum, and teachers and janitors of Americanization schools may also be teachers and janitors of the day school, $12,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order. What is the authorization for this particular class of work, and what is the committee's definition of "Americanization"?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is a course of instruction prescribed by the school board. They have it absolutely under their control, and they have prescribed the entire course. They educate foreigners to try to make them Americans. For instance, one thing is to teach them how to answer questions put to them when they become naturalized. The point I make is that they have been given $12,000 when they should have been given $30,000.

Mr. WALSH. What is the authority for it? Is it community work?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This is not the community-center work.

Mr. WALSH. I suppose it is a part of the night school system?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This is the same authority that the school board have for everything that they do.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of necessary expenses connected with the organization and conducting of community forums and civic centers in school buildings, including equipment, fixtures, and supplies for lighting and equipping the buildings, payment of janitor service, secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks, and employees of the day schools may also be employees of the community forums and civic centers, including maintenance of automobile, $35,000: Provided, That not more than 60 per cent of this sum shall be expended for payment of secretaries, teachers, organizers, and clerks.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the paragraph. What authorization is there for the expenditure of money for community forums and civic centers in school buildings?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Of course, the gentleman understands that this matter is all controlled by the board of education.

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will read the law. Chapter 165 is an act to regulate the use of public-school buildings and grounds in the District of Columbia. It provides:

Be it enacted, etc., That the control of the public schools of the District of Columbia by the board of education shall extend to include and comprise the use of public-school buildings and grounds for the pupils of public schools, other children and adults, for supplementary educational purposes, civic meetings, for the free discussion of public questions, social centers, centers of recreation, and playgrounds. The privilege of using said buildings and grounds for any of said purposes may be granted by the board upon such terms and conditions and under such rules and regulations as the board may prescribe. The board of education is authorized to accept on written recommendation of the superintendent of the schools free and voluntary service of teachers of the public schools and other educators, lecturers, and social workers, officers of the United States and the District of Columbia: Provided, That teachers of the public schools shall not be required or compelled to perform any such service or solicited to make any contribution for such purpose: Provided further, The public-school buildings and grounds of the District of Columbia shall not be used for any purpose whatsoever other than those directly connected with the public school system.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I do not hear anything in there about community forums or civic centers.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Those phrases perhaps may not be used, but it seems to me that this act covers them. It comprises the use of the public-school buildings and grounds by the pupils of the public schools and other children and adults for supplementary educational purposes, civic meetings for the free discussion of public questions, social centers, purposes of recreation, and playgrounds. That is a good definition of the community-service work. I am willing to stand on that as being the work they do. I think it is duly authorized by law.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I think the language of the act clearly indicates that there is no authorization whatever for it. The act specifically provides that the board of education is authorized to accept free and voluntary service of school-teachers. The item in the bill carries an appropriation for necessary expenses, including the payment for janitor service, secretaries, teachers, and so forth. This act the gentleman from Minnesota has cited is for the occasional use of school buildings for purposes outside of the ordinary school instruction, such as discussion of a public question and using the playgrounds for recreation centers. That is all very well, but it is quite different from the proposition of making appropriations out of the Federal Treasury to pay teachers for work in connection with "conducting community forums and civic centers in school buildings." There is no authorization there to pay teachers for work done in this fashion. These community forums and civic centers are in a sense a fad with certain would-be reformers. We have them in every city in the United States, and if we were to adopt all their recommendations the Federal Treasury and the State treasuries would soon be depleted. It seems to me clear under the act to which the gentleman has referred, which was approved the 4th of March, 1915, that there is no warrant for carrying in the District bill an item such as this, which would apparently initiate and put upon a permanent basis a system of community forums and civic centers in school buildings, paying teachers for work there and calling for an appropriation of $35,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Minnesota please refer to the page of the statute that he quoted?

Mr. WALSH. Page 1190, volume 38, part 1, chapter 165, third session of the Sixty-third Congress.

Mr. SISSON. I suggest to the chairman that he send that to the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would simply read this language, "Civic meetings for the free discussion of public questions," which they do. "Social centers," which they do.

Mr. WALSH. What do they do?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Social centers? Why, what is usually a social center? They entertain those who are there in these large assembly rooms, both the young and the old. That is a social center. "Schools of recreation and playgrounds." I believe this community-service work is universal, as the gentleman says, all over the United States. I will admit it has increased in this instance, and I understand they have entertained, educated, and discussed matters to over 50,000 people in this city of that nature in the last year. That is my information. I send this statute to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has it now.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I believe I am correct in saying that over 50,000 people, young and old, have been entertained and educated as best they can in this way.

Mr. WALSH. How do they use an automobile in connection with the work?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, this is simply one automobile used in going from one to the other of these meetings. There are 10, 15, or 20 of these civic centers at school houses on different evenings and different afternoons. They have at least a dozen of these meetings going, some in the afternoon and some in the evening, and the automobile is to convey, for instance, the official secretary around to see that the meeting is properly conducted in a proper, orderly manner for the best interests of those entertained. It is only one small automobile—a Ford at that. It is a flivver; I do not know whether you call it an automobile or not.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know what a flivver is.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is something made in Michigan——

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. SISSON. I am asking for recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts still has the floor.

Mr. WALSH. I have no objection to the gentleman discussing the point of order; I reserved it.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, the act which the chairman of the committee sends to the desk is the act under which in 1915 this item first went into the bill, and it has been carried in the bill under that authorization from the passage of that act down to this time. The Chair will note that this whole work is under the control of the board of education, and the act provides for the use of public-school buildings for this purpose, and under that authority from that date to this, as has been stated by the chairman of the committee, this activity has been conducted.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask a question?

Mr. SISSON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. From a casual reading of this law passed in 1915 it would appear that the authorization to use these buildings was granted, but the Chair does not find anything in the law which relates to the expense to be borne by the Federal Government.

Mr. SISSON. Does not the Chair think it would be an et sequitur that if there is a certain activity it must necessarily follow that the authority to carry the activity into force has been carried with the act? Now, if the Chair will go and look at the Army activities he will find it carried any number in the same language. I happened to have occasion to look into that during the consideration of the Army bill which is now in progress, and the authority for an activity of the Government is et sequitur in that you must have an appropriation to carry the activity into effect. Then the other question suggested is this: This is under the control of the board of education, and they select these officials, and it is essential in order that the school property should be used for the purposes indicated by the board of education that some one must be there for the purpose of conducting the activity in accordance with the direction of the board of education and in accordance with that law for the preservation of the school property and the use of it for that purpose. While the activity is conducted by the community itself, and, as suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the various cities throughout the United States carry these activities on their tax roll, it is nothing more or less than an activity under the direction of the schools, and in order that the school property might be used for that purpose the school board appointed these people for the purpose of directing and controlling the activities under their direction for which the school buildings are authorized to be used.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire further to discuss the point of order?

Mr. SISSON. I have discussed it all I care to, and I think there is sufficient authorization under this statute for doing just exactly what they do in these community centers.

The CHAIRMAN. Do I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts reserved the point of order or made it?

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to discuss the point of order any further?

Mr. WALSH. No; Mr. Chairman, except to show, if the Chair will permit me, what they have done and to what limits they have gone in this work as shown by the hearings. In some activities they have had candy pulls, masquerades, parties, picnics, birthday parties, minstrel shows, card parties, motion pictures, recitals, lecture on "Children I have known." Those organizations, many of them of course——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Has the gentleman read all, or only picked out a few?

Mr. WALSH. I will put them all in the RECORD if the gentleman desires, or I will read it all if it is desired.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They had much more than the gentleman has recited there.

Mr. WALSH. Well, now we will take one. The community's secretary reports, "Connecticut Avenue and McKinley Street—Lecture on current events, wild flower lectures, stereopticon lectures, community buying, distribution and sale of war food, assisting teachers on opening of schools, community sings, Red Cross card parties, entertainments, reception on opening of new school building, Woodland recital, Red Cross meeting, lectures on Russia, Washington, Children I have known; Arts Club plays, Chautauqua course, motion pictures, Boy Scout band. Those are the activities——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They are pretty good, are they not?

Mr. WALSH (continuing). That are conducted under the Girl Scouts and Boy Scouts, and boys' and girls' dancing class, and the Civic Center Association, and Parent's Teachers Association. Yes; it is pretty good. But it is being paid for out of the Federal Treasury. It is about time we began curtailing some of these activities. There is no more reason why we should pay for a lecture to those people who attend that community center than there is why we should pay for it in the gentleman's district or why we should pay for it in any other State of the Union. There is no more reason why the people of this particular center should have a lecture on the children that the lecturer has known than they should have a lecture up in the gentleman's district at the Government expense, upon the children they have known up there.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will say that my home State is paying a part of this.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes; but it is a very small part that the great State of Minnesota pays for this.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It pays as much as Massachusetts does.

Mr. WALSH. I doubt it. I think, however, the statute clearly does not authorize any such programs as have been outlined in this report. While it authorizes the use of the buildings for this purpose, it clearly does not authorize the expenditure of the setting up of an organization to carry out the work.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I suppose there are frequently lectures in the public schools in the District of Columbia and elsewhere. If there are not, there ought to be. Certainly no one would contend that a teacher who presided over a room where a lecture was had was violating the law by drawing her salary for the day that she attended. Why is not this a part of the school work and treated as such? The authority of law was given for the use of these school buildings for community centers. The work that is being carried on is as much school work as any other work that is being carried on by the schools. It may not be the learning of A, or B, or C in the primary grade, but it is much more educational in many respects than the study of algebra or geometry is. No one will contend that they are not a necessary part of instruction in many cases. It seems to me this is a part of the school work for which an appropriation should be made as is made for other school work.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that instruction in dancing is a part of school work?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Just as much as instruction in playing baseball or football, and the gentleman will not contend that the students who play football for the different high schools here in the District and elsewhere in the country are violating the law because they use the schoolrooms?

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that instruction in card playing or card parties is a part of school work?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Just as much as they are a part of the duty of a Member of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman evades the question.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, no; I do not.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Not at all. It is a very direct answer.

Mr. WALSH. It is an evasive answer.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not need such instruction. I never had any education in that way, and I do not play cards. Probably I would be better off if I did, or probably worse off than some Members that I know.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will.

Mr. MILLER. Several of the brethren here are inquiring where that school is which furnishes instruction in cards.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will rule. The Chair has no desire to be captious in his ruling or too narrow in his interpretation of the law. He realizes the importance of activities of this kind, as suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. It is probably a proper and very desirable part of our educational system to have the activities as provided for in this paragraph. The Chair is troubled, however, from the parliamentary standpoint, in endeavoring to find the authorization in existing law for the expenditure of money for this purpose. In this paragraph it states that the payment for expenses shall include "equipment, fixtures, supplies for lighting and equipping" the buildings. In looking at the law the Chair fails to find any authorization for the expenditure of money for those purposes. The Chair can find no authority other than for the use of the buildings, not for the expenditure of money in their upkeep and maintenance. It has been suggested that the matter of maintenance should be implied in the law. The Chair does not feel justified in going that far, and while the Chair feels that these activities are very essential and very proper, he feels compelled to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Major and superintendent, $4,500; 2 assistant superintendents, at $3,000 each; 3 inspectors, at $2,400 each; 12 captains, at $2,400 each; chief clerk, who shall also be property clerk, $2,400; clerk (who shall be a stenographer), $1,800; 2 clerks (who shall be stenographers), at $1,500 each; clerks—1 (who shall be assistant property clerk) $1,200, 1 $1,200, 3 at $1,000 each, 1 $700; 4 surgeons of the police and fire departments, at $1,600 each; additional compensation for 35 privates detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, $16,800, or so much thereof as may be necessary; additional compensation for 14 privates detailed for special service in the various precincts for the prevention and detection of crime, at the rate of $120 per annum, $1,680, or so much thereof as may be necessary; additional compensation for 1 inspector or captain and 1 lieutenant detailed for special service in the detection and prevention of crime, at $400 each; 21 lieutenants, one of whom shall be harbor master, at $2,000 each; 56 sergeants, one of whom may be detailed for duty in the harbor patrol, at $1,800 each; privates—501 of class 3 at $1,660 each, 214 of class 2 at $1,560 each; 89 of class 1 at $1,460 each; amount required to pay salaries of privates of class 2 who will be promoted to class 3 and privates of class 1 who will be promoted to class 2 during the fiscal year 1922, $16,031.99; 9 telephone clerks, at $900 each; 18 janitors, at $600 each; laborer, $720; messenger, $600; inspector, mounted on horse, $540; 38 captains, lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted on horses, at $540 each; motor vehicle allowance to 20 sergeants and privates, at $480 each; 64 lieutenants, sergeants, and privates, mounted on bicycles, at $70 each; driver-privates—31 of class 2 at $1,560 each, 5 of class 1 at $1,460 each; amount required to pay salaries of driver-privates who will be promoted to class 2 during the fiscal year 1922, $1,200; 6 police matrons, at $720 each; in all, $1,656,291.99.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I do so, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of asking a question. The policemen and the firemen of the District of Columbia are the only Government employees who do not have one day off each week. Of course, it would be impossible to lay all of them off on Sunday, but with regard to all other employees, where it is necessary for one to work on Sunday, they are given at least one week day off in seven. I understand the policemen and firemen are not granted the usual vacation leave of 30 days like most of the other employes of the Government are granted. In other words, they have no vacation, no leave. And I wanted to ask the chairman if some such provision could not have been made in this bill? I know the answer is that it is legislation, but the chairman can not answer me that way when he has had three pieces of proposed legislation knocked out of the bill on points of order. If the committee can put in three pieces of legislation which are objectionable here, could not the committee have put in one piece of legislation which, I take it, would not be objectionable to any Member of the Congress? Certainly the Members of Congress would be willing for the policemen and the firemen, who perform arduous duties and service, to have one day off each week.

Would the committee object to an amendment carrying that provision into this bill or would a point of order be made against it? If not, I would like to offer an amendment that would cover it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will state to the gentleman that if that amendment that he suggested were put in the bill it would require an additional force to the fire department and the police department, an increase of one-seventh in number and expense. Furthermore the matter of the police and firemen was thoroughly canvassed at the last session of Congress, and legislation was had upon it, and their salaries were very materially raised, more so than those of any of the other employees of the District of Columbia other than those in the schools. That was all done, and then this matter that you speak of now was thrashed out, as I understand, before the legislative committee and denied. We could not put that in unless we raised the number of policemen and firemen one-seventh, so that I think that is a matter of legislation of so much importance that this committee would not be justified in attempting to put it in.

The other matters that were put on were matters of saving to the District of Columbia. For instance, this matter of collecting $60,000 from the street railway company in connection with the bridge down here was to obtain from $60,000 to $100,000. That was the object of putting it in. Here you would add an expense of two or three hundred thousand dollars, and the committee did not think it advisable to attempt that thing.

Mr. BLANTON. When it comes to doing the right thing by an individual, the fact that it costs money is not, in my judgment, a valid excuse for not doing it. These men are entitled to one day off a week; I think they are clearly entitled to it. There is not a day or night when some members of the police force and of the fire department of the District do not risk their lives in the interest of the service. They should have a day off. Yet simply because it requires an additional force it is denied. I am in favor of economy, but I say let us pay the extra one-seventh.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. At the last session of Congress we gave them two platoons in the fire department, cutting down the hours, and so forth. That has all been taken care of.

Mr. BLANTON. Yet every fireman and policeman on those forces works eight hours a day, seven days in the week, every month in the year, and I do not think that is any answer or excuse. I hope that the legislative committee will see to it that before this short session of Congress ends justice and right shall be done to the police and the firemen's force in this District. I am for economy, as I said, but I am in favor of this proposition to do justice to the policemen and firemen of the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For one aerial hook and ladder truck, motor driven, $14,500.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on lines 22 and 23.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman wait until we have finished reading one more item?

Mr. WALSH. No. I reserved a point of order on line 22 of page 58.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts reserves a point of order.

Mr. WALSH. I would like to ask a question in reference to that item and the next two, whether these are new pieces of apparatus that are desired or are they to replace something else? Is that a new departure?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I would state that in line 22, "for one aerial hook and ladder truck, motor driven," that is for the purpose of replacing a horse-drawn truck, and such is the case with the item on line 24. That is for the same purpose, to replace a horse-drawn vehicle by a motor-driven vehicle. It is held that it will give better service and be more economical.

Mr. WALSH. Is that the gentleman's position and the position of the committee?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. The authority to do so has not been questioned before.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman thinks if Congress gives them the authority to buy a horse-drawn vehicle they can go out and buy a motor-driven vehicle?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. I have not heard it questioned before. We have done it, and have done it in all branches of the Government. About 60 per cent of all the vehicle activities of the Government are now motor-drawn, about 40 per cent are horse-drawn. We are trying to do away with horse-drawn motive power as fast as possible.

Mr. WALSH. In what government?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The government of the District, the fire department. About 60 per cent of the vehicles are now motor drawn.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

The CHAIRMAN. The reservation of the point of order is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To be expended only in case of emergency, such as riot, pestilence, public insanitary conditions, calamity by flood or fire or storm, and of like character, and in all cases of emergency not otherwise sufficiently provided for, in the discretion of the commissioners, $8,000: Provided, That in the purchase of all articles provided for in this act no more than the market price shall be paid for any such articles, and all bids for any such articles above the market price shall be rejected and new bids received or purchases made in open market, as may be most economical and advantageous to the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, may I ask how much of this emergency fund has been spent either for the last fiscal year or for the current fiscal year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I believe they spent $3,000 last year.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is that for a real emergency, or are they building up some service under this which requires a permanent expenditure of the money every year?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Here was the cost of roping Pennsylvania Avenue for the Czecho-Slovac parade, July 18, 1919, $125; Washington Asylum and Jail, plumbing at hospital, $1,000; health department, repairs to pound motor wagon, $300; salaries for temporary laborers in pound, $320; purchase of formaldehyde, $700; removal of brick wall at sand wharf and cleaning and filling of site, $650; total, $3,095.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of bailiffs: For not exceeding one crier in each court, of office deputy marshals who act as bailiffs or criers, and for expenses of meals and lodging for jurors in United States cases and of bailiffs in attendance upon same when ordered by the court, and per diems of jury commissioners, $28,000: Provided, That the compensation of each jury commissioner for the fiscal year 1922 shall not exceed $250.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. WALSH. What have the jury commissioners been receiving heretofore?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Each one of them receives $600. This is a limitation that they shall not receive more than $250.

Mr. WALSH. I notice that the appropriation has been increased by some $800, and you put a limitation upon the pay of the jury commissioners. What is the necessity for the increase?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The jury commissioners were not paid at all prior to April, 1920. Then they were raised to $1,800. Now we have cut them down to not exceed $250.

Mr. WALSH. Three jury commissioners?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. They used to sit five days, at $10 a week. We thought it was excessive. We thought it should not exceed $250 apiece.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HUSTED having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Craven, Chief Clerk of the Senate, announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolution of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 1302. An act for the relief of John H. Rheinlander;

S. 3031. An act to appropriate $1,189.35 for the relief of the Southern Iron & Metal Co., Jacksonville, Fla., for salvage material consisting of submarine cable purchased from the War Department;

S. 4526. An act to amend section 501 of the transportation act, 1920;

S. 4572. An act granting to the city and county of Honolulu, Territory of Hawaii, a right of way over and across the Fort De Russy Military Reservation, for the purpose of extending its sewer system; and

S. J. Res. 172. A joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to sell a certain parcel of land known as Fort Jackson, at New Deptford, on the Savannah River, Ga.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 12887. An act establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 7900. An act for the relief of Rudolph L. Desdunes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 7930. An act to provide for the treatment in hospital of diseased alien seamen.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

National Training School for Girls: Superintendent, $1,200; matron, and 4 teachers, at $600 each; overseer, $720; 2 parole officers, at $600 each; 7 teachers of industries, at $480 each; engineer, $720; assistant engineer, $600; night watchman, $480; 2 laborers, at $300 each; in all, $11,880.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee a question in connection with this school. Are the girls who are inmates of it, all of them, residents of the District of Columbia?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Not all of them. Some of them are committed by Federal courts.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. That is, some of them are juveniles committed by Federal courts outside of the District?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. Can the gentleman inform me just what proportion are from outside?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I can not. Most of them are from the District—a very few from outside.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. About how many inmates are there in the institution at present?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The clerk of the Committee on Appropriations informs me that the average daily attendance is about 160.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Gallinger Municipal Hospital: For continuing construction of the Gallinger Municipal Hospital, $500,000.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Has the contract been entered into for the construction of this hospital?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It has. They are now constructing the psychopathic ward and have contracts for building the power house and everything connected with it. We have increased the limit of cost. Originally it was $500,000, and then we increased it to $1,000,000, and we have since made it $1,500,000. This appropriation leaves $400,000 yet to be appropriated.

Mr. WALSH. There will be $400,000 still to be appropriated?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. After this; and we have given them in this appropriation all they can actually use this year.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hospital for the Insane: For support of indigent insane of the District of Columbia in St. Elizabeths Hospital, as provided by law, $800,000.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I should like to ask about this item for the maintenance of St. Elizabeths Hospital for the Insane. There was a good deal of talk some time ago in the newspapers about their not having adequate guards out there. Does this appropriation carry enough to enable them to maintain an adequate number of guards to keep the inmates of the asylum within the grounds?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This appropriation is for the care, custody, and maintenance of District of Columbia patients. The other items for the hospital are carried in the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. NEWTON of Minnesota. This does not have any relation at all to the employment of the guards?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This appropriation is governed by the law, so much per capita for so many patients. The other matters, in relation to guards, and so forth, are all taken care of in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. BRIGGS. And they have no relation to this item?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

The Clerk read as follows:

For maintenance, including superintendence, custody, clothing, guarding, care, and support of prisoners; rewards for fugitives; provisions, subsistence, medicine, and hospital instruments, furniture, and quarters for guards and other employees and inmates; purchase of tools and equipment; purchase and maintenance of farm implements, live stock, tools, equipment, and miscellaneous items; transportation; maintenance and operation of means of transportation, and means of transportation; supplies and labor; and all other necessary items, $95,000.

Mr. BLANTON. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of making an inquiry about this appropriation of $95,000. Does not the chairman of the committee think that the amount to be expended for each purpose enumerated in this paragraph ought to be specified? Ought we not to specify how much shall be spent in one way and how much in another? Here are a number of items, and at the bottom of the paragraph there is a blanket appropriation of $95,000.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It is pretty hard to designate the items, because of the uncertainty as to the number of prisoners. The amount is gauged by the number of prisoners. The amounts are itemized in the estimates.

Mr. BLANTON. That is not the point.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will give the gentleman the items.

Mr. BLANTON. My point is this: I understand that probably there are enough items in here upon which this sum could be expended, but would it not be better to specify that so much shall be spent upon such an item and so much upon another, because under this blanket appropriation they could, if they saw fit, expend the whole $95,000 upon any one of the various items enumerated?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; the items are specified in the estimates, and they have got to conform to those.

Mr. BLANTON. Have they got to conform to the estimates, or to the authorization?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. To the authorization, which is based upon the estimates. They must comply with it. That is all there is to it. Let me read these items:

Food, $40,000.
Clothing, $12,500.
Furniture, $800.
Medical supplies, $1,000.
Laundry supplies, $800.
Stables, farm, and garden, $24,000.
Transportation, $2,900.
Miscellaneous, $12,000.

The one item in there that is not particularly designated is the miscellaneous item of $12,000, and the expenditure under that item, as I say, will depend largely upon the number of inmates and patients they have.

Mr. BLANTON. I do not intend to be captious about the matter or to waste time unnecessarily, but I am seriously asking the chairman if he does not believe that it would have been preferable to have incorporated the various items contained in the estimates in this paragraph of appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If we did that, this bill instead of containing 100 pages would contain 500 pages.

Mr. BLANTON. As to the question of pages, the chairman admits that this bill appropriates $19,878,012.99; that the last appropriation bill appropriated $18,373,004.87, which is $1,505,008.12 less than the present bill, and for the fiscal year 1917, which was the war year, the total appropriation was $12,842,216.10. In other words, the present bill is the largest District appropriation bill ever appropriated in the history of Congress, because it is $7,035,796.89 more than the bill during the war Congress of 1917. In such a big bill as this why quibble about having a few more pages in it in order to be explicit and show these fellows how they should and can expend the money and to what extent.

This is quite a little item, and we ought to cut out appropriations in blanket form and specify exactly how we want the money spent. Then we are going to stop waste, then we are going to stop extravagance, then we are going to stop officials crowding over and running over the express will of Congress.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I want to say that the increase in the amount of this bill is due largely to the increase in the amount for school building of a million and a half and a half million for the Garfield Hospital. That accounts for $2,000,000 of the increase. Then we have added to the amount for streets. I showed in my remarks on the bill where three or four millions of the increase went, and it was not in little specific items of detail. It would be impossible to detail all the items as the gentleman mentioned.

Mr. BLANTON. The chairman fails to catch the point. My point is that we ought to stop blanket appropriations. If it is necessary to appropriate, do so, but be sure that we are going to have the money spent just as Congress expects it to be expended.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I feel pretty sure that it will be.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words. I do that to call attention to the ordinary method of accounting in items of this sort. The Book of Estimates in the hands of the accounting clerk will rest side by side with the total appropriations, and it is the duty of the auditing officer to hold such items within the amount specified in the estimates. The Book of Estimates becomes an itemized statement under the appropriation and will be just as effective in the line of proper auditing as if you put the whole matter in the body of the bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Suppose you have one item of $95,000 and another item of $100,000 in the estimates, and we will suppose that the committee cuts the estimates by putting a paragraph in the appropriation bill giving $95,000 under that head. I want to ask the gentleman if under the authority given by Congress that bureau if it saw fit could not use the $95,000 that was appropriated for one specific item in the estimates and let the other $100,000 item go?

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. The Book of Estimates will designate the items or things contained in the $95,000, and those contained in the $100,000 total when properly made up. I take it for granted that it is in proper form in this instance. Whenever there is any modification in that particular there should be a specific elimination of one item and the addition of others. If this should not appear, however, then the average can be struck in the process of auditing and the distribution can be made on that basis.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 7. That on and after July 1, 1921, all fees, fines, and other miscellaneous items of revenue theretofore required by law to be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in equal parts shall be paid for each fiscal year into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in the same proportions as appropriations for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for such fiscal year are paid from the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia; and all collections on account of special assessments for public improvements for which assessments are levied according to the law shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and the District of Columbia in the same proportions as that used in paying for the work for which the assessment was levied.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment to the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: On page 95, strike out the remainder of the section after the word "as," in line 1, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The appropriations used in paying for such assessment are charged, respectively, against the revenues of the District of Columbia and the Treasury of the United States."

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, the auditor of the District of Columbia suggested the amendment in order to make the language more definite, plain, and clear. I can not imagine that there will be any objection to it. The language stricken out left it a little indefinite. This simply clarifies the language. I do not think it is subject to a point of order, and I think it is very essential that it should be put in.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman explain what the change is?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The change is in order to make it conform to the change of law on the 60-40 proposition. The language in the bill hardly applies, and this makes it plain that it is only a 60-40 proposition.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, this is to make it definite and certain that the expenditures shall be on the 60-40 basis?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; and the amount to go into the Treasury shall be in the same proportion.

Mr. WINGO. Oh, the receipts back into the Treasury shall be in the same proportion?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. It is more definite, and the auditor suggested it himself.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. How is this money being paid back now?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. On matters that were appropriated for on the 50-50 basis they go back on the 50-50 basis, and under the 60-40 basis they go back under the 60-40 basis.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This says on and after July 1, 1921.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes; in the appropriation law we are now acting under.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand that, but it does not take in current appropriations.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I asked how they go back in.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will permit, in the current appropriation law in some places provision was made that these receipts should go back in on the 60-40 basis. In some cases that provision was not made, and in that case they go back under the 50-50 basis, although the District may have provided 60.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A few years ago I called the attention of the House to a very anomalous situation which then existed, and which has since been corrected, where we made appropriations to carry on certain functions of the District government, half of which were paid out of the National Treasury. They received various reimbursements, all of which went into the District treasury. That has been corrected. But now as to the current business of which 60 per cent comes out of the District treasury and 40 out of the Federal Treasury, it will go back in, I suppose, on the 50-50 basis, because this provision is not applicable to the current law. I am not caring which is done, but I could not see why they should not take effect after the passage of this bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. Some of those were taken care of in the current law. I can not state just which ones they are now, but they were not all provided for.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think not any of them were taken care of in the current appropriation law, because I have no notation to that effect, and I have compared the current law with the present bill.

Mr. CRAMTON. I shall take pleasure in calling the attention of the gentleman to one or two cases that were provided for in the current law.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I shall take pleasure if the gentleman will show me anything in the current law on that subject that is not repeated word for word in the present bill.

Mr. WINGO. Was it finally decided that under the present current law payments into the Treasury would be on a 60-40 basis? That is the question that the gentleman from Illinois raised—that the pending proposition covers the next fiscal year. The proposition raised by the gentleman from Illinois is, What is the present practice with reference to the same thing during the current year?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where the 60-40 basis is in force?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. In the current appropriation law for the current year occurs this language:

> Hereafter the commissioners are authorized, under such regulations as they may prescribe, to sell the surplus products of the workhouse and reformatory. All moneys derived from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States to the credit of the United States and to the credit of the District of Columbia in the same proportions as the appropriations for such institutions are paid from the Treasury of the United States and the revenues of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. What section of the law is that?

Mr. CRAMTON. That is under the reformatory appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is not the same language used in this bill?

Mr. CRAMTON. It is not, both because it was made permanent law and because of the general provision which is now before us.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes; I see.

Mr. CRAMTON. Similar language was used, I think, in at least one other case.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. This is to put them all on the same basis, to clarify it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No one is objecting to this provision; but what we were making inquiries about is the existing condition, as to whether it ought to be made applicable only after the 1st of July next or whether it ought to be made applicable as soon as it can be made applicable.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. It ought to be made applicable at once.

Mr. WINGO. It will be more important during the next three months than it has been in the past.

Mr. CRAMTON. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois. That provision was not made in all cases during the current year and there will be some injustice in some respects.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not want to lay unction to my soul, but I have always been in favor of the 60–40, although I think it is a good thing to follow whatever practice has been established.

Mr. CRAMTON. There is another provision in the current law for the Industrial Home School for Colored Children, where it is provided that all moneys shall be paid into the Treasury to the credit of the United States and the District in the same proportions as the appropriation.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Under the plan of bookkeeping of the District of Columbia, are overflows from the items of expenditures covered into a general fund and then in turn covered from that into the Treasury, or do they go directly from each separate fund into the Treasury?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Each separate item goes into the Treasury as a distinct item.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Now, in reference to the items you purpose to cover back into the Treasury, are there any funds in those items which were collected before the relative basis of taxation and contribution was different from that which it is now in the bill and that which you propose?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I could not tell the gentleman absolutely except by reference to the auditor. I could not tell the gentleman. This only applies to collections after July 1 of next year. This is a new item put in here to make it definite, but as to whether there was any surplus on items previous I could not tell the gentleman.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I will.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would there be any funds paid out of improvements or something that were acquired during the period of the 50–50 basis which would be disposed of and collections made after the 60–40 basis goes into effect?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. All receipts on the 50–50 basis will go into the Treasury under the 50–50 basis.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Even though collected after——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Yes. I undertsand that is a provision of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I was detained and was not here when the committee had up the school item, and I will appreciate it if the gentleman will give me a little information. What provision is there now for meeting the necessary replacements of desks in schools?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Well, I think, generally speaking, that I am correct that all necessary provisions have been provided in this bill for taking care of all matters of that kind in all the schools, every single one of them, even the two new schools we are going to furnish now, the junior high, both colored and white, and I believe that every single one of them have been taken care of and will have sufficient furniture to replace the old worn-out furniture. Every estimate they made we granted.

Mr. WINGO. Take the Adams School. Is there any item for replacing the ancient furniture in that school?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. There is a general supply fund that will take care of that.

Mr. WINGO. Now I will state to the gentleman the reason I ask. For a couple of years I have been questioned about the matter by patrons of that school. One of the complaints, for instance, is in the item of seats. There is not any particular anxiety in reference to the anatomy of the boys, but the mothers are very much exasperated by the necessity of repairing the seats of the trousers of those boys occasioned by splintered seats that have been there from time immemorial, and they have wanted to know if they can not be replaced, and the inference each time is that we Congressmen are derelict in our duty and we are to blame because the seats of their trousers naturally wear out from these splintered seats.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have given an item here of $45,000 to cover just such cases.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman know whether they have made an estimate to include such repairs for that school?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. They have made an estimate for all, and they can allow repairs up to the $45,000 which we have given to them.

Mr. WINGO. We have the promise of Col. Kutz that a new furnace will be put in there. It has been needed for four years, and a good many pupils are going to have to leave that school if they can not get that during the holidays.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think we have given sufficient funds for the commissioners to afford just such service.

Mr. WINGO. So if these necessary repairs are not made it is not the fault of the Congress?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. No; it is not the fault of the Congress.

Mr. WINGO. We have not denied what they said was necessary for necessary repairs?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have not.

Mr. WINGO. And if there is any blame attaching it is either to the school management or——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Unless they come back and say the price of material has gone up and they could not build, which is just the excuse——

Mr. WINGO. I appreciate that fact, but so far as the gentleman can anticipate the gentleman's committee has taken care of that situation?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. We have endeavored to do that to the best of our ability and we understand we have.

Mr. WINGO. I want the record to show that if they do not get relief in such matters we are not to blame.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Perhaps the gentleman from Minnesota should also tell us at the same time that the appropriation this year for furniture, etc., is $65,000, and this bill carries an item of only $45,000 and provides for furnishing furniture for four or five new 8-room additions to school buildings.

Mr. WINGO. Well, now, that might raise a fear in my mind that there is not anything at all for meeting such repairs——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Let me state to the gentleman there is one item of $45,000 and there is another item of $45,000. One is for the old buildings and there is another item of $45,000 for the new buildings, making in all $90,000.

UMI

Mr. WINGO. So there is $90,000——

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. For new and old buildings.

Mr. WINGO. The point is, the gentleman feels sure he has met every reasonable demand and there is no complaint that his committee has not appropriated sufficient funds to make the necessary repairs to the furnace and seats in this school?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think your committee has done that to the limit. It is our intention, and I think we have done it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That officers and members of the Metropolitan police and fire department of the District of Columbia and the United States park police shall be allowed increased compensation for the fiscal year 1922 in accordance with the provisions of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1922 at one-half the rate allowed the other employees of the District of Columbia in said act.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the section.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Will the gentleman state the ground of his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. It is legislation.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. If the gentleman insists on his point of order, I will simply say that we will take care of this in the legislative bill, where it is proper for it to come in. I admit possibly it may be subject to a point of order, but your committee wanted to deal fairly and squarely with these officers, and we put it in there.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts insist on his point of order?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, with regard to the last paragraph that was just stricken out of this bill, I desire to say that I believe we ought to do justice to these policemen and these firemen, and not in the way that was attempted to be done in this bill, by giving them half a loaf, but to treat them like we have all other employees; in other words, by giving them only half as much bonus as we give all the other employees of this District would be an injustice, as we ought to give them just as much in the way of a bonus or extra compensation as others receive. We pay almost every other employee in the District, except our policemen and our firemen, a bonus, and we attempted to pay them in this bill half of a bonus. Rather than to take them out of the bill, as was just done on a point of order—and I am put down as one of the economists of the House—rather than to take them out and not pay them any I would rather give them the whole bonus, and I hope the legislative committee that has authority to bring in such legislation will come in and make good this point of order by giving the policemen and firemen the same full measure of compensation in the way of a bonus that we give the others.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order upon the paragraph on page 17. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if he has satisfied himself in regard to it.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I think the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] has looked that matter up, and he will explain it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, the rule provides the exception that an expenditure in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress shall be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman will permit a moment, does the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] make a point of order?

Mr. WALSH. No; I am reserving it, trying to find out something about this item.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] is now discussing the parliamentary procedure.

Mr. WALSH. He is anticipating that a point of order will be made as the result of his explanation, I suppose.

Mr. CRAMTON. I dislike to have the gentleman put it in that form.

The Court of Appeals Building was authorized several years ago, and an appropriation was made. The building has been largely completed, but there is a large space on the third floor and some room in the basement that has not been finished up and completed. We have heretofore made an appropriation of $6,000 a year for rental for offices for the register of deeds, and it seemed wise to the committee, since we had this space available in the Court of Appeals Building, to make use of that space rather than to pay $6,000 a year for space in a private building; and hence we recommended an appropriation of $22,000, which we were advised would be sufficient to complete the building, and if it is made immediately available we are advised the building can be completed and made suitable for the purposes desired by the 1st of July, and the appropriation of $6,000 for office rental would be unnecessary. I hope, in view of the very pronounced economy which the gentleman favors generally, that he will not make the point of order.

Mr. WALSH. Well, is it not a fact that the repairs to and the rebuilding of the Court of Appeals Building had been completed, the building occupied, and the money expended within the limit of cost?

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not sure as to whether the former appropriation was entirely exhausted or not. I am positive, however, that the interior of the building was not completed. Our own hearings developed the fact that much space on the third floor, as well as a portion of the basement, had not been completed.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman inspected that building in order to satisfy himself that they can fit up rooms in the top there that will be suitable for the recorder of deeds?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will say to the gentleman that I have not done so personally. We questioned, I think it was, the clerk of the court of appeals when he was before the committee as to what space was available in the building, and then I have here a letter from Mr. Woods, Superintendent of the United States Capitol Building and Grounds, and it is my recollection that the building was constructed under his direction. In the letter he states, addressing the chairman of the subcommittee:

In response to inquiry from the Appropriation Committee I beg to inform you that it is feasible to construct quarters in the Court of Appeals Building for the accommodation of the recorder of deeds. That would mean the construction of offices in the attic story of the building and afford approximately 6,000 square feet of office space. In addition to this there is considerable accommodation for the storage of records in the cellar story of this building, as the latter space was originally constructed for that purpose. I think that the recorder could be fully accommodated by this method.

Perhaps the gentleman would like the full statement of Mr. Woods, and I will read the balance of the letter, although the part I have read immediately refers to his inquiry. He says:

In this connection I desire to tell you that this matter has been before the committee two or three times prior to this date. The last estimate for the purpose was made on January 20, 1919, in a letter addressed to the late Hon. Thomas S. Martin, chairman of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. The cost then stated was $18,000. A copy of this letter I hereto attach. I have revised this estimate necessarily on account of the advanced price of labor and material, and must tell you that the present figure would reach $22,000, and that would mean the most economical construction possible.

I would like to call your attention to the fact that the lease of the building now occupied by the recorder of deeds expires on June 30 next, if my understanding is correct. Therefore, if it is the intention of your committee to make this appropriation and provide for the recorder of deeds in the Court of Appeals Building by that date, I would suggest that it be so made as early as possible and that a provision be placed thereon making it immediately available.

Mr. WALSH. I can not understand just how they can economically and efficiently carry on the duties of the recorder of deeds by having part of the office in the top story of a building and the other part of it down in the basement.

Mr. CRAMTON. The basement part would be simply storage rooms. Of course the gentleman understands that there is elevator service now in the building in operation from the basement to the third floor.

Mr. WALSH. I did not know that they stored the records there.

Mr. CRAMTON. This Court of Appeals is a court that takes a four-months' vacation every year, so that there would be four months in which they would not disturb the recorder of deeds at all by their activities. Their docket is nearly two years in arrears.

Mr. WALSH. What has that got to do with it?

Mr. CRAMTON. Simply if you are considering the fitness and desirability of surroundings for the recorder of deeds.

Mr. WALSH. I do not see it.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly, I yield.

Mr. MONDELL. Several years ago, when I was a member of the Committee on Appropriations, this matter came before the committee. There seemed to be a good deal of difference of opinion in regard to the matter, and while I do not claim to be an expert on building construction, the difference of opinion was so very great that I felt it my duty as a member of the subcommittee before whom the matter came to take the trouble to make a personal investigation. I found that on the top floor of the building in question there was a space of very considerable size, irregular in shape, sloping toward the outer wall and rising to the rear. I have forgotten just what the space is. It is not a very large space; not large enough to accommodate a very considerable office. But I recall that at the time the sum asked to make the improvements that were said to be necessary seemed to me excessive for the space that would be made available, and the sum has been increased.

I would not want to put my judgment against that of the Superintendent of the Capitol as to the possibility of rendering available a considerable amount of satisfactory space by the expenditure of this money, but as a layman not claiming to be overfamiliar with these matters I was very doubtful, indeed, whether the space would be satisfactory for office purposes. The outer wall is comparatively low. The space is quite deep. The rear of it would always be dark. I question whether it could ever be well ventilated. I doubt if the space, after it was provided, would be satisfactory for office use, with long, narrow rooms, lighted only from one end, and with low windows at that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is it not in fact an attic?

Mr. MONDELL. It is in fact an attic. It is a rather large attic, a sort of glorified attic. I do not quite understand how the architect came to leave so much space. I asked the members of the court what use the court would have for the space. I saw quite a quantity of papers filed there. They said they were using it in a limited way to store their papers; that in course of time the court would utilize all of the space for storage purposes; and that if it were used for office purposes, eventually the court would have to have some additional storage space for its documents.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on the paragraph, on the ground that it is not authorized by law, and particularly that it can not be made available immediately. That is subject to a point of order; and that being subject to a point of order, I contend that the paragraph is subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes a point of order on the paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman makes his point of order on the phrase, "to be immediately available," I will withdraw that portion of it.

Mr. WALSH. I make the point of order on the entire paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Does the gentleman make the point of order on the words "to be immediately available"?

Mr. WALSH. No. I say I make it on the entire paragraph.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I want to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the original appropriation:

For the erection of a fireproof addition to the courthouse of the District of Columbia, for the use of the Court of Appeals of said District, including such fireproof vaults that may be necessary to protect from destruction the papers and records of said court, and proper heating and ventilating apparatus, to be constructed under the supervision of and on plans to be furnished by the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds, and approved by the Attorney General, $200,000 is authorized.

I urge that the appropriation here is simply for continuing the project.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask him a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. He is reading from the statute, I presume?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; of 1908; section 29 of the public building act approved May 30, 1908. That was in the Sixty-third Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there any mention in that act of the office of recorder of deeds?

Mr. CRAMTON. There is not.

The CHAIRMAN. It simply refers to the Court of Appeals?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; but we are incidentally proposing to save the Government money by housing another official there.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman completed his argument?

Mr. CRAMTON. I have completed it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair realizes that there is a good deal of latitude used in the matter of the continuation of work on public buildings, but in view of the fact that the law mentions that this building shall be erected for the Court of Appeals, and no mention is made of the office of the recorder of deeds, the Chair feels that the point of order is well taken, and so rules.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment, to insert the paragraph that I send to the desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CRAMTON, page 17, line 14, after the figures "$1,000," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Court of Appeals Building: For fitting up the top story and basement of the Court of Appeals Building, including material and labor and each and every item incident to such work, $22,000, to be available immediately. This work and the expenditure of this sum shall be under the supervision and direction of the Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment does not indicate that it is for the continuation of a public work already begun, or that it is within the amount authorized heretofore for the completion of any public work of construction or building. It is entirely a new project. It is not authorized.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman allow the Chair to ask the gentleman from Michigan a question? As the Chair followed the reading of the amendment, it was the same as the original paragraph, with the exception of the words—

To provide accommodations for the office of the recorder of deeds.

Mr. CRAMTON. Substantially so; yes. As the paragraph stands which I have offered it is to complete a Government building. In other words, it is strictly within Rule XXI, paragraph 2, in that it is a continuation of a public work in progress. I will state that I recognize that the words "to be immediately available" are subject to a point of order, and if the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] insisted on that I would offer the paragraph without those words; but I take it that if the paragraph is sustained on other grounds the gentleman would not object to those words under the circumstances.

Mr. WALSH. No. But, Mr. Chairman, the language of the rule is—

Unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress.

Now, the language of this amendment does not show that it is in continuation of a work already in progress. The language of the amendment is for fitting up something that has already been completed.

Under the construction of the gentleman from Michigan you could build on an annex to any one of these buildings. It is for fitting up the top story and basement of the building. That is not in continuation of a public work already in progress.

Mr. CRAMTON. Two or three years ago we completed the House Office Building by fitting up further offices in the attic. In the hearings before the committee on this item in the bill, in response to a question, Mr. Hodges, the clerk of the court, used this language:

On the north is a large lobby or foyer. The other portion or attic of the building has not been completed.

And the amendment before us simply provides for completing the building.

Mr. WALSH. Oh, well, I know; but the language of the rule means for completing work within a limit of cost previously authorized. Now, this calls for an additional expenditure.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, the question raised is so old that the Chair will pardon me if I express an opinion on the subject. As I understand, there is no limit of cost on this building?

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. I do not know of any.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think the authorization was in an appropriation bill, a mere appropriation, and no separate limit of cost.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is correct.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, the holdings have always been that where the Government owned a piece of ground it could buy a piece adjoining it, on the ground that that was a continuation of a work in progress. If we own a school building in the District of Columbia, we can make an appropriation for an addition to the school building. You could make an appropriation for an addition to the courthouse. That is what this was when it was made. It is in order under the rulings, because it is in continuation of a work in progress.

When we purchased additional land at St. Elizabeths Asylum it was held to be in order because it adjoined the land that formed the grounds of the asylum. If we own a building, we can provide the furniture for it. We can complete it. We can build an addition to it.

I remember one case where a building had been destroyed by fire and an item to provide a new building was held out of order, but an item to improve the old building was held in order, although it involved the construction of a new building.

I do not think there is any doubt whatever that we have the authority to make an appropriation here. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] admitted that the language, "to be immediately available," was subject to a point of order, but I think the gentleman is in error.

Mr. CRAMTON. I hope so.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Committee on Appropriations has authority to bring in appropriation bills and to make an item in an appropriation bill immediately available which is an appropriation for a deficiency. The Naval Committee can not do it, because it has no jurisdiction over deficiencies. The other appropriating committees can not provide an appropriation to be immediately available, because that is a deficiency and they have no jurisdiction over deficiencies. The Committee on Appropriations has jurisdiction over deficiencies. It has jurisdiction to report a bill which makes an item immediately available. But it seems to me that the last sentence in this amendment is subject to a point of order. This legislation provides under whose jurisdiction and direction the money shall be expended. That is clearly legislation. That is not an appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. In sustaining the point of order a few moments ago made against the paragraph by the gentleman from Massachusetts, the Chair based his decision on the fact that the law authorizing the construction of the building did not contemplate or include the office of recorder of deeds. While this objection was sufficient in the opinion of the Chair to sustain the objection, the last part of the paragraph, which is evidently legislation, would have been sufficient grounds to render a similar decision had the objection been made. In the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] the objection on which the Chair's previous ruling was based has been removed. It seems clear to the Chair that if the completion of the building by fitting up certain portions of it, or even if an addition was contemplated, no objection could lie against the amendment, and to fortify this opinion the Chair cites paragraph 3774, Volume IV, of Hines, where "the purchase of additional ground and the erection of an addition to an existing building was held to be in continuation of a public work." Clearly, if an addition is in order, the fitting up of offices is in order, and the Chair could cite other rulings, for, as the gentleman from Illinois has said, it has been held a number of times that an addition to an authorized building is in order on an appropriation bill. The Chair feels that the objection raised because of the words "to be immediately available" is not well founded, for it would appear that the immediate rendering available of funds is within the province of the Appropriations Committee.

The last clause, however, which states "it shall be under the direction of the Superintendent of Capitol Buildings and Grounds," in the opinion of the Chair taints the entire amendment, for it is legislation on an appropriation bill, and on this count the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new paragraph, on page 17, line 15, the following:
"Court of Appeals Building: For fitting up the top story and basement of the Court of Appeals Building, including material and labor and each and every item incident to such work, $22,000, to be available immediately."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question of the chairman. Are there any other offices than the Court of Appeals in the Court of Appeals Building?

Mr. CRAMTON. There are not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Do the hearings show that the Court of Appeals requires more space?

Mr. CRAMTON. They do not.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Then, Mr. Chairman, this seems to be a way of accomplishing the same result intended by the paragraph that was held out of order. It is to provide space for the recorder of deeds. Those who are familiar with the activities of the recorder of deeds know that it is very unwise to place the office of the register of deeds or the recorder in an attic or in any place that is not easily accessible for the people who have to do business with the office.

In the large cities and in the courthouses generally I think you will find it the uniform practice to put the recorder or register of deeds' office on the first floor and as near the entrance to the building as possible. The citizens of the community who have business with the recorder should not be put to the inconvenience of traveling to the attic of this building through the corridors of the Court of Appeals. In addition, the business of the recorder or the register is something entirely separate from that of the Court of Appeals. I submit that this amendment should be defeated.

Mr. CRAMTON. It is my best information at present that the recorder of deeds is paying a rent of $6,000 a year on the fourth floor of a building, and we are bringing him down to the third floor. The Government of the United States has furnished an elevator with elevator service that will enable anyone having business with the recorder to go to that office with ease and without inconvenience.

The issue is: Shall we save $6,000 to the people of the United States. This year we want to practice the economy that we have preached and we must deny appropriations for purposes, deny the carrying on of activities that are of great benefit, simply because we have to cut down appropriations. Here is a case where we can save $6,000 without interfering with any branch of the Government. It is an opportunity for economy without any injury to the service.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Chairman, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Wyoming a moment ago that a member of the Court of Appeals told him that they might need this space for the use of the Court of Appeals, may we not run the risk in a short time of preventing the court from getting this space when they come in and ask for it?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes; they might come in and ask for an additional member to the bench in order to keep up with their docket, which is one or two years behind, but as a matter of fact they take a vacation of four months annually, and I do not think in the near future Congress will listen to that appeal.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am glad that the gentleman has called attention to the activities of the members of the Court of Appeals, but that does not affect the availability of this space for the recorder of deeds, does it?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is going to spend $22,000 to save $6,000 this next year?

Mr. CRAMTON. Annually.

Mr. WALSH. But the gentleman knows that if you get a recorder of deeds in there, in a poorly lighted and ill-ventilated place, it will not be long before they are clamoring for a separate building, and the saving in the end will disappear.

Mr. CRAMTON. The Superintendent of the Capitol Building and Grounds says that it is feasible and the $6,000 a year will soon pay up the $22,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 15130, the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

SENATE BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 4572. An act granting to the city and county of Honolulu, of Hawaii, a right of way over and across the Fort De Russy Military Reservation for the purpose of extending its sewer system; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. J. Res. 172. Joint resolution authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to sell a certain parcel of land known as Fort Jackson, at New Deptford, on the Savannah River, Ga.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a separate vote on the court of appeals amendment on page 17.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any other of the amendments? If not, the Chair will put them en grosse. The question is on agreeing to the other amendments.

The other amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment on which a separate vote is demanded, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. CRAMTON: Page 17, after line 14, after the figures "$1,000," insert a new paragraph, as follows:

"Court of Appeals Building: For fitting up the top story and the basement of the Court of Appeals Building, including material and labor and each and every item incident to such work, $22,000, to be available immediately."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota) there were—ayes 26, noes 13.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 18, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

236. A letter from the Acting Secretary of State, transmitting a copy of a circular issued by the Nobel committee of the Norwegian Parliament respecting the proposal of candidates for the Nobel peace prize; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

237. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting, with a letter from the Chief of Engineers, reports on preliminary examination and survey of Calcasieu River from the Gulf of Mexico to the city of Lake Charles, La.; to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. DIAL].

Mr. NELSON. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. KELLOGG] is detained by important business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-seven Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting, pursuant to law, a schedule of useless papers devoid of historic value, accumulated in the files of the department, and asking for action toward their disposition, which was referred to a Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, to be appointed by the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. WALSH of Montana and Mr. FRANCE members of the committee on the part of the Senate, and ordered that the Secretary notify the House of Representatives thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4526) to amend section 501 of the transportation act, 1920.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 1865. An act for the relief of the Baltimore Dry Docks & Shipbuilding Co., owner of a dry dock at Baltimore, Md.;

H. R. 7900. An act for the relief of Rudolph L. Desdunes;

H. R. 12887. An act establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia; and

H. R. 13264. An act to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 4670) authorizing the President to appoint Thomas F. Long a lieutenant (senior grade) in the United States Navy (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 4671) to prohibit immigration for a period of five years; to the Committee on Immigration.

A bill (S. 4672) to provide that the United States shall continue its aid to the States in the construction of rural post roads, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 4673) to reclassify laborers in the Post Office Department as post-office service clerks; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

A bill (S. 4674) for the relief of the owner of the schooner Mary Bradford Peirce; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (by request):

A bill (S. 4675) to fix the metric system of weights and measures as the single standard for weights and measures; to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. PHIPPS:

A bill (S. 4676) to maintain the forest experiment station in the State of Colorado; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4677) granting an increase of pension to Adolph Lochwitz (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

MILITARY STATUS OF DESERTERS.

Mr. MOSES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 382) declaring that certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations shall be construed as if the war had ended and the present or existing emergency expired, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and ordered to be printed, as follows:

Provided, however, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as effective to terminate the military status of any person now in desertion from the military or naval service of the United States, nor to terminate the liability to prosecution and punishment under the selective-service law (act of Mar. 18, 1917) of any person who failed to comply with the provisions of said act.

CONVENTION OF AMERICAN INSTRUCTORS OF THE DEAF.

Mr. POMERENE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 407), which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That the manuscript entitled "Proceedings of the twenty-second meeting of the convention of American Instructors of the Deaf, held at Mount Airy, Philadelphia, Pa., June 28 to July 3, 1920," transmitted to the Senate as provided for in an act approved January 26, 1897, be printed as a Senate document, with illustrations, and that 600 additional copies be printed and bound for the use of said convention.

DISCHARGE OF DISABLED EMERGENCY OFFICERS.

Mr. FLETCHER. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a very important letter from the War Department bearing on a subject in which a great many people are interested, the discharge of the emergency officers who are undergoing physical reconstruction in the Army hospitals. It is not a very long letter. I think it is a matter of very great importance, and I should like to have it printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SURGEON GENERAL,
Washington, December 14, 1920.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The Surgeon General has requested me to acknowledge your letter of December 13, with inclosure from Capt. William H. Maxwell with reference to the discharge of emergency officers who are undergoing physical reconstruction in the Army hospitals. This question has constantly been one of the deepest concern to the medical officers of the Army, and the policy of this office has been to interpret most liberally any legislation or instructions regarding this matter.

The legislation under which the discharge of these officers from the military service is effected at present provides as follows:

"The President is authorized and directed to retain in service disabled emergency officers until their treatment for physical reconstruction has reached a point where they will not be further benefited by retention in a military hospital or in the military service."

It is the opinion of this office, which opinion is concurred in by the Secretary of War, that the proper interpretation of this clause, and the one which was contemplated by the Congress, is that disabled officers should be retained in military hospital so long as they are showing any improvement in their physical condition and also so long as their past medical record warrants the belief that improvement may be expected. When it becomes clear that the condition of any officer patient is growing worse month by month, or when it is apparent for a period of several months that no improvement is being made, and when in either instance the patient's condition fails to furnish any grounds for expecting improvement in the future, then it is believed that his treatment for physical reconstruction has reached a point where further benefit can not be expected by his retention in a military hospital or in the military service. Consequently, his discharge is indicated under the provisions of the law.

It is believed that the question of whether the patient needs further hospital treatment after discharge from the service has no bearing on the situation, since it may readily happen that hospital care for the remainder of the patient's life will be necessary, and yet his "treatment for physical reconstruction" has reached the point as indicated by the law. The decision as to whether this point has been reached is a matter of professional judgment, in which reliance must be placed mainly upon the views of the local medical officers who are in charge of the patients and have made a thorough study of their cases.

In rare instances when the condition has long been stationary, improvement may suddenly appear, but to retain all patients indefinitely, with only a vague hope of such a consummation in an occasional case, appears to be contrary to the intent of the existing law. The Congress has provided abundant facilities for the care and compensation of discharged officers and soldiers through the agency of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and it is the belief of this office that when the Medical Department of the Army has accomplished all that can be expected in the way of the physical reconstruction of our disabled military personnel, as indicated in the preceding paragraph, the individuals should be discharged from the military service and should pass into the care of that bureau.

Many officer patients have already been discharged from the military service under the conditions noted above and are now receiving compensation and hospital treatment from the Bureau of War Risk Insurance. To make any change at this time in the policy of discharging disabled officers when they have reached the condition noted, and to retain in military service for further treatment certain of those who are now patients in Army hospitals, would seem to discriminate in their favor as compared with officers already discharged whose cases presented equal claims for retention in the service, and this question has been gone into at this length, as importance is fully appreciated by this office.

It is believed that the interpretation of this act, as explained above, is the only one which can be reached, giving due weight to the interests of all concerned.

Very truly, yours, S. J. MORRIS,
Lieutenant Colonel, Medical Corps.

PROTECTION OF MATERNITY AND INFANCY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 3259) for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is a pending amendment.

Mr. FRANCE. I was under the impression that the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] had been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not yet been agreed to. The pending amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 1 strike out line 10, and on page 2 strike out lines 1, 2, and 3, in the following words:

For the use of the Federal board of maternal and infant hygiene, for the administration of this act, and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act.

And insert:

For the use of the Children's Bureau, for the promotion of maternal and infant hygiene, for the administration of this act, and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act.

So as to make section 1 of the bill read:

That there is hereby annually authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sums authorized in section 2 of this act, to be paid to the several States for the purpose of cooperating with the States in promoting the care of maternity and infancy in the several States; to provide instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy, and the sum authorized in section 5 for the use of the Children's Bureau, for the promotion of maternal and infant hygiene, for the administration of this act, and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I would like to know just what the amendment is. I was engaged at the moment and would like to have it stated again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read again the pending amendment.

The Assistant Secretary again read Mr. SMOOT's amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we have all received many letters about the bill and probably a number of us have written answers to them stating we would support it. I have done so. But the letters I have received describe the measure as one only intended to carry information to the country, and advice and instruction about maternity and the care of infants.

The bill goes much further and I can not vote for it unless it is amended. There is one-half of the bill that is pure socialism and can be made the basis justly of extension of governmental care to every individual case of sickness. If this bill passes in its present shape, we may, with equal propriety, extend Government care to every case of individual sickness that arises in the United States. If the Government is to take care of the individual in each case of sickness, then if the individual needs something to eat, the individual ought to be provided by the Government with what he needs to eat, and if the individual should be provided with what he needs to eat, then he should be provided with what he needs to wear.

Now, let us see if my criticism is just. I am cordially in favor of that part of the bill which would carry information and education on subjects embraced in the bill to the people of the States, in order that they may, as individuals, be better informed as to how to carry their individual responsibilities, but this bill goes far beyond that. It carries that provision, but it also has an additional provision which I did not suppose it contained at the time I wrote stating I would support the bill, the letters I had received asking me to support it having dwelt simply upon the feature of the bill providing for the dissemination of information on these subjects throughout the land, to better enable the individual to perform an individual responsibility. Section 8 contains this provision:

And the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The chairman of the committee, the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], has indicated his willingness to accept an amendment eliminating that provision.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand the Senator from Texas to say that the chairman of the committee has accepted the proposition eliminating that whole section?

Mr. SHEPPARD. No; but eliminating the provision to which the Senator from Georgia makes objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that the chairman of the committee has virtually accepted an amendment eliminating that provision wherever it may occur in amendments or otherwise?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Wherever that language appears in the bill as it is finally accepted by the Senate the Senator from Maryland will accept an amendment eliminating that clause.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I call attention to the clause in the amendment covering this subject, which also should be eliminated.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly. We desire, however, to leave in the words "especially in remote areas," so that the instruction furnished will be available especially for remote areas.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To that I should not object.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think if the Senator from Georgia would ask unanimous consent that that amendment be made the Senator from Maryland would accept it. If I remember correctly, he so advised me a few moments ago.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am very much gratified to hear that.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If the Senator from Georgia will pardon me, I rise to say that I understood the amendment tendered by the committee had been withdrawn, or at least that the chairman of the committee had signified his purpose to withdraw the amendment, allowing the matter to stand as the bill was originally drawn.

Mr. SHEPPARD. But the expression to which the Senator from Georgia is now referring is contained in the original section of the bill and also in the amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I appreciate that. The Senator should direct his attention, then, to the language as it is found in the original bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was doing so. It was that language which I read.

Mr. SMOOT. In order that I may know what the agreement is, I desire to make an inquiry. As I understand, then, the Senator from Maryland, having the bill in charge, has consented to eliminate the words found on page 7, beginning in line 7, down to and including the word "areas," on line 10.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand the Senator from Maryland proposes to withdraw his amendment and go back to the original language of the bill and from the original language to strike out the words "and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary."

Mr. SMOOT. And also to strike out the words "especially in remote areas."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No; leaving in the language "especially in remote areas."

Mr. SHEPPARD. Yes; we wish to leave in the language "especially in remote areas."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Thereby providing for the scattering of information and furnishing knowledge in remote areas, but eliminating entirely the responsibility of caring for the individual case and limiting the bill to diffusing knowledge and education.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, if that is to be done, then the bill should not carry the amount of appropriation which is provided for.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let us get the language to which I have referred stricken out and take up the other matter afterwards.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Let the Chair get a little information about what the rules of the Senate are. Is it the rule of the Senate that the chairman of a committee and a Senator may agree as to the form a bill shall take?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all; but if the chairman agrees, and the Senate is willing, I shall ask unanimous consent to amend the bill in the manner suggested. I was coming to that, and, if in order, I will make a request to that effect.

Mr. FRANCE entered the Chamber.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Maryland is now here, and he can verify what I said a few moments ago.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I desire to say to the Senator from Maryland that it has been stated in his absence it was the purpose of those in charge of the pending bill to ask to withdraw the proposed substitute for the original language of section 8 and to amend the original language by striking out, in line 23, page 6, the words "and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary."

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I do not consider that that amendment would materially injure the bill or defeat its purpose, and I myself do not feel like opposing it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to amend section 8 as originally introduced by striking out the language "and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary," the language being found in lines 23, 24, and 25.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senate desire to get rid of the pending amendment or not?

Mr. FRANCE. I hope that we may dispose of the pending amendment, and then, if that will be agreeable to the Senate, I should very much like to offer a few amendments to perfect the bill before we leave the committee amendments.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If unanimous consent is given to consider the amendment proposed by me, it will help us to act on the other amendments.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to passing over the pending amendment and proceeding to the consideration of the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia to section 8 of the bill, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 6, in the original text of the bill, beginning in line 23, after the word "methods," it is proposed to strike out "and the provision of medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Has the Senate voted formally on restoring the original language of section 8 of the bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Unanimous consent was given to withdraw the committee amendment to that section. The pending amendment now is the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. The question is on agreeing to that amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. I inquire what is that amendment? I have an amendment to propose, and I do not wish to be foreclosed on that proposition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Mississippi ask that the amendment be restated?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be restated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The pending amendment is the first amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which has been printed, namely, on page 1, to strike out all of line 10, and, on page 2, to strike out lines 1, 2, and 3 and substitute therefor the following:

For the use of the Children's Bureau, for the promotion of maternal and infant hygiene, for the administration of this act, and for the purpose of making such studies, investigations, and reports as will further the efficient administration of this act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before that amendment is voted upon I wish to call attention to some other provisions of the bill. Section 2 carries an appropriation of $480,000, $10,000 of which shall be paid annually to each State. Then the section proceeds:

Provided, That there is also authorized to be appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, an additional sum of $2,000,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, the sum of $2,400,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, the sum of $2,800,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1924, the sum of $3,200,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1925, the sum of $3,600,000; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1926, the sum of $4,000,000.

Mr. President, we have agreed that this work shall simply be educational work; that it shall be for the purpose of disseminating knowledge. When these large sums were put into this bill it was with the idea of treating individual cases.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, that was not the idea. The treatment of individual cases was never intended to amount to more than a very secondary and exceptional consideration. The additional amounts are dependent on the appropriation of an equal amount by the States. The question was carefully gone into as to what might be needed to provide sufficient information to the various consultation and health centers in the various States.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Does the Senator think it would take $8,000,000 annually simply to carry information and instruction on the subject?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That was the conclusion of those who looked into the matter very carefully.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It had occurred to me that, limiting the scope of the bill to the furnishing of information, we could afford to make the first appropriation $500,000 instead of $2,000,000, which would really make $480,000 from the National Treasury, $10,000 to go to each State without regard to an appropriation by the State, and $500,000 conditioned upon appropriations from the State, giving a total of $1,480,000. I should think instruction upon this subject could be given pretty generally with such an appropriation. I was above all things interested in removing that part of the provision of section 8 which has been eliminated. I am cordially in favor of carrying the educational work on this subject to the people. We can not do too much, with the States duplicating our contribution, to carry information and to carry instruction, leaving finally the individual responsibility of the citizen remaining on him, according to the plan of our Government from the time our Constitution was adopted.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Maryland?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FRANCE. Does not the Senator think that that is a very drastic reduction?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not pressing it. I just threw out the suggestion. I will not offer an amendment myself. I was just asking, for information, whether $1,480,000 spent each year would not carry the information; but, if it would not, I do not want the amount reduced so much. I regard it as most valuable that the information should be given.

Mr. FRANCE. I feel, personally, that that reduction would be altogether too drastic. If the Senate should feel that there ought to be some reduction, we might consider the advisability of making some reduction in the appropriation; but I do feel that to make a reduction of 75 per cent would be really going too far, because the cost of printing and the cost of stationery and clerical salaries runs into money very rapidly when the whole country is to be covered. I hope the Senator will consider that phase of the matter.

Possibly a 25 per cent reduction would be wise at this time; I mean to say, the Senate might feel that it would be. Personally, I should prefer to see the figures as they are. We have considered the amounts very carefully, and we feel that these amounts are the proper ones.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him a question there? Inasmuch as the Senate rules provide with regard to the consideration of regular appropriation bills that no appropriation shall be made except what has been estimated for by some responsible department, may I ask who made the estimates from which these figures of $2,000,000 and $4,000,000 resulted? The Senator from Texas says he understands the matter has been very carefully considered and looked into. By whom?

Mr. SHEPPARD. By the Children's Bureau.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And is it the opinion of the Senator that the Children's Bureau thought these amounts to be appropriated annually—such amounts as $2,000,000 and $4,000,000—were required simply for sending out circulars and literature on these questions?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That was the idea, because the work is to be in cooperation with all the States of the Union.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. They allowed nothing, then, for doctors' bills for women and children, which was contained in the language which has been stricken from the bill?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That was considered to be a very small part of the matter, and was not principally in contemplation at all.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Whether it would be small or very large would depend upon the extent to which it was applied, of course, would it not—the number of doctors employed?

Mr. SHEPPARD. It was not intended to apply that phase of the bill extensively at all, but only to apply it in exceptional cases, in remote districts.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The bill says "especially in remote areas," but it is not limited to that. But the Senator is perfectly satisfied, as I understand, to have that go out?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Exactly; and we will not object to a reduction in the appropriation, only we do not want too great a reduction made.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the amendment that has been adopted, in my opinion, takes out at least three-fourths of the expense that would be incurred under this bill.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all, I will say to the Senator. Only a small part of the moneys available was intended to be used for medical and nursing care.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator really think, then, that $8,000,000 can be spent annually for the dissemination of information and education?

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my idea; but, as I say, if the Senator will submit a reasonable amendment, I think there will be no objection.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the amendment that was offered and agreed to here seems to me about the only thing we are going to get out of the bill. The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service was in my office not two hours ago, and he said that the Public Health Service was giving information along this line in connection with the Public Health Department of the Government, but I said that the bill went further than that, and, of course, it did originally; but now it is confined to the educational features of the health of the people and the maternity activities. Now, it does seem to me that it would be impossible to spend $8,000,000 a year for that purpose. I can not see how it is possible to do it. Why, we think we turn out a great deal of stuff down here at the Government Printing Office, but the entire appropriations for the Printing Office are not $8,000,000, for everything; so I think the Senator, now that that amendment has been made, has placed the bill in such a position that the appropriation needed will be very small, indeed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I will say to the Senator that only the smallest part of this fund was to be expended for actual medical and nursing care. It was the object of those who prepared the bill to make the measure principally a matter of information and instruction, and it was their opinion that it would require something like this sum to cooperate effectively with the various States in distributing this information. If the Public Health Service has been engaged in this work, it has been duplicating work unnecessarily.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, this bill seems to be entirely misunderstood by the Senate. It would be very gratifying, indeed, if Senators would consider carefully the language of the bill, and then its purpose, I think, would be quite apparent, and the necessity for the appropriation would be as evident.

This is not a bill to provide printing and stationery, nor is it a bill to provide hospitals. It must be apparent to all of the Senators that this appropriation would be necessary to provide for hospitals if we were planning to take care of these patients in hospitals. On the other hand, it is apparent that the appropriations are too large for the mere carrying of printed information. It is not, however, a bill to provide hospitals. It never was a bill for that purpose. It was thought wise by those who know of the situation which exists in remote areas to grant permission under the bill for giving to the exceptional case hospital care. I anticipated that perhaps there might be four or five cases in a State where it would be necessary to take a poor woman from a remote region and bring her in to some center where she could have treatment which otherwise she would not be permitted to have. I did not anticipate that there would be more than four or five cases in a State where hospital care would be actually given; but attention to the language of section 8 will show that the chief purpose of the bill, which is stated first, is the provision of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public-health nurses.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. I ask the Senator's pardon. I thought the Senator had finished.

I might go into the methods which are employed in carrying on instruction through public-health nurses, but I hardly feel that it is necessary to do so. I think most of the Senators are familiar with the methods employed by the community nurse who goes from house to house giving instruction, giving a little care to one patient and a little care to another patient, and giving instruction both to patients and to their friends. It is the ideal method of instructing, but it is a very expensive method. It is, however, the only method which will meet the situation. Many of the patients who are in need of the information are unable to read and write, to the disgrace of our country. There ought not to be any adult person in the United States unable to read and write, and it is chargeable to a false economy that we have thousands and hundreds of thousands of white men and white women in this country unable to read the very pamphlets which are printed here, and the knowledge of which would often save lives. Many of these patients are unable to read and write because of the negligence of the legislative bodies of the United States, and it is only through the human agency of nurses that we can convey this information, and that is a very expensive method of conveying information. I could very quickly figure up the number of nurses that would be required to carry on this work, and you would see how really inadequate the fund is for carrying on instruction in this way.

Of course, we anticipate that there will be the use of the other method, the sending out of information through circulars and other suitable methods, perhaps by the moving picture, which is a wonderful agency, an agency which we have hardly come to appreciate as an influence for education. All of these methods will be used, but the chief expense will be for the dissemination of information through the community nurses.

I hope that explanation will make it clear to the Senators why this appropriation is not, after all, so large a one as it would at first seem. Certainly it would be far too much if we were planning to use only the printed page. We are planning to use the nurse, the most satisfactory agency through which knowledge of hygienic questions can be disseminated.

I beg the pardon of the Senator from Georgia. I was under the impression that he had yielded the floor, and that the Senator from Utah had taken the floor from him. I shall be very glad, indeed, to hear the Senator continue, if he wishes to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. I would like very much to have the attention of the Senator from Maryland for a moment. I wish to ask the Senator from Maryland why it is necessary to provide appropriations in this bill for more than the first year. I doubt very much whether there has been any very accurate estimate made in this particular case. I do not see how any accurate estimate could be made in advance of putting the act into operation. I think the purposes the Senator and the other advocates of the bill have in view would be subserved by an initial appropriation. Then opportunity would be given, after the system is put into operation, for an accurate estimate as to what would probably be the reasonable cost of the continuance and proper expansion of the system.

I think we ought to be very liberal in the first appropriation. It is possible it might be disclosed that the appropriation is more than is necessary. It might be disclosed that it was very much less than was necessary. Future Congresses having correct information before them would undoubtedly deal liberally and generously in appropriating for this very laudable purpose.

Mr. FRANCE. I appreciate the feeling of the Senator from North Carolina, and, personally, I would not have opposed an amendment confining the appropriations to the first year or two. But when I talked over such an amendment with Senators, some of them expressed the view that if the appropriations were not named for the future years the expense for carrying on the work would be greater than even the amounts named in the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Possibly.

Mr. FRANCE. Some of the Senators said they would be unwilling to accept such an amendment, because they feared that in a few years the work would grow so large that even $4,000,000 would be inadequate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the Senator know that if it should develop that the cost would be very much greater than the amount prescribed in the bill applications would be made to Congress to increase the appropriations? We will have it in our power to regulate the amount we finally appropriate so as to fit the situation as it develops.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, in reply to the question of the Senator from North Carolina I would say that, personally, I always hesitate to attempt to bind a future Congress. It seems to me, generally speaking, that it is unwise for one Congress to attempt to bind a future Congress.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what you are doing in this bill.

Mr. FRANCE. I myself would be inclined to favor the suggestion of the Senator, but it is true that when the friends of the bill considered accepting such an amendment, some Senators stated that they were unwilling to agree to such an amendment, fearing that the appropriations would grow even beyond the amounts mentioned in the bill for the future years.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to say to the Senator from Maryland that if the need for increased appropriations develops, I want to have them increased; they ought to be increased, and they will undoubtedly be increased.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from Maryland that I suppose I was the one he had reference to as not approving the plan of cutting these appropriations down in future years. If we were going to provide for medical and nursing care for mothers and infants at home and at hospitals when necessary, I knew that the $3,000,000 would not be enough, and I wanted it specifically stated in the law. But now that that is cut out I think the proposition as originally submitted by the chairman of the committee, to make the appropriation not to exceed $1,000,000 for the beginning of the work, would be perfectly satisfactory, and then each year it would be appropriated for on estimates the same as any other estimate which comes to Congress for an appropriation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, permit me to suggest that there is an amendment pending, and if the Senate will proceed with that amendment perhaps we may reach some arrangement in the meantime with regard to this section.

Mr. FRANCE. May we not have a vote now upon the pending amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] tell us how much we appropriate for the entire Public Health Service?

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator mean for the whole Public Health Service?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For the Public Health Service.

Mr. KING. Administrative work.

Mr. SMOOT. As I remember, less than $20,000,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. For the Public Health Service?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I think the chairman of the committee yesterday stated that last year it was $13,000,000, and they now ask for $18,000,000.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, that is outside of the War Risk Bureau.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I would like to ask the Senator from Utah if this modification of his amendment might not appeal to him. In the bill as it was drawn we provided for a board, composed of the Secretary of Labor, the Chief of the Children's Bureau, who should be the executive officer, the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service, and the United States Commissioner of Education. The work as we finally are planning it is to be educational work. To some extent it is entirely possible that the Commissioner of Education touches it. Undoubtedly to a great extent the Surgeon General of the United States Public Health Service handles it. You make the Chief of the Children's Bureau the executive officer. The object of the Senator from Utah was to prevent the creation of a new bureau. Would it not be well to leave this board and add at the end of the clause of section 3 "the work of said Federal board shall be conducted through and by the Children's Bureau"? That would prevent the establishment of another bureau, and yet it leaves in the board the men who are touching the same line of work elsewhere; and would it not help avoid duplication?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not see that it would, and not only that, whoever administers this law we want to hold responsible for it. When the appropriations are asked for we want to call somebody before the Appropriations Committee who knows the detail of the expenditure of the money and what they are going to do with the appropriations asked for. I know that the Secretary of Labor can not give attention to this matter. I know that the Commissioner of Education can not do so. It does seem to me that if we are going to have it administered it ought to be administered by some authority which has the direction of all the activities under the bill, and I am fearful that if that plan is adopted there will be created another bureau within a bureau, directed by the board spoken of by the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I am really seeking is to provide that the Surgeon General shall have something to do with it.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that, and I want to say to the Senator that since this amendment has been agreed to there is more real reason why the Surgeon General should have direct control of it than there was before. But even now I think the best thing to do, Mr. President, under the reorganization is that it should go to the Children's Bureau.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I do think, with the Public Health Service organized with great physicians, great doctors, at its head, with an expenditure of approximately $20,000,000 a year on the Public Health Service, with no information to us that they are not already engaged in the study and distribution of information on this subject, clearly what we do ought to be supplementing what they are now doing if we wish to derive the greatest possible benefits from the appropriations we make. To take this scientific question, this problem that is a part of all medical research, and turn it over to the Children's Bureau instead of the Public Health Service is hardly defensible. I can not help thinking it would be better to retain the Surgeon General connected with this work, and to have the benefit in this work of the great organization we have all over the country of able physicians, now a part of the Public Health Service. I think it is a mistake to put it simply under the Children's Bureau; that we at least ought to leave the Secretary of Labor out, and have a board with the Surgeon General on it, even though it is administered finally under the Children's Bureau.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I would like to ask my colleague, in view of this suggestion, what objection there could be to giving the work of this organization to the Surgeon General, and authorize him to utilize the Children's Bureau as the chief executive authority? That would then fix the responsibility. I may say to my colleague that I do not quite agree with his position and with the suggestion made by the Senator from Georgia, that a new bureau would be created. It seems to me that the responsibility would rest upon those three. It would not be a new bureau, and they could enforce the provisions of the bill through the Children's Bureau.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, Mr. President, I look at the bill entirely differently. I think there is not a question but that there would be a new bureau established.

In answer to the first question of my colleague, I will frankly say, as I did yesterday, that I think the administration of the bill under the Public Health Service would be more costly than under any service that might be asked to administer it. The Public Health Service, I think, is very liberal in the expenditure of public funds. I think there is more duplication of work in the Public Health Service than there is in any other bureau of the Government. When an investigation is made into all the details and activities of the Public Health Service I think it will be demonstrated beyond a doubt that there is a greater duplication of work there than in any other of the activities of the Government, and I do not feel that it is proper to place the administration of this law under the Public Health Service for that reason. I want to be frank and say that if we have a reorganization of the departments of our Government, this, with all the other great questions, must be considered. There has to be a skeleton of our form of government made, and then to that will have to be added the activities where they properly belong, and all duplication of work now so prevalent in all the departments of our Government must be eliminated.

Mr. OVERMAN. Rather than a duplication on the part of the Public Health Service of what other departments are doing, is it not true that other departments are duplicating work that the Public Health Service is doing?

Mr. SMOOT. There is no doubt about it. The Senator from North Carolina is a member of the Committee on Appropriations and we have had before that committee representatives from different departments, who have admitted and stated without a moment of hesitation that the duplication is beyond all reason. If there is any one thing that is needed now in the Government business, it is to begin a complete reorganization of all the departments of our Government and, if possible, to eliminate this duplication of work.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I thought if this were placed in the Public Health Service it would be an excuse for extending the activities of that service from one end of the land to the other, and perhaps salaries paid greater than are paid in any other of the departments or bureaus of our Government, and it would cost so much that I thought this was the most economical way of meeting the situation.

Mr. KING. If my colleague will allow me, I do not quite understand his logic. He has been contending here, as have other Senators, for a consolidation of activities of the Government and the bringing under one head of all the work of a given character. It has been shown in the Senate that there are large numbers of agencies in various departments of the Government that have more or less to do with the question of hygiene and sanitation and public health. If this consolidation shall be effected to which the Senator refers, then obviously all of these agencies ought to be consolidated under one head. You may call it public health or give it any other name, but I doubt not if this consolidation shall be effectuated that the work under this bill will be placed with the bureau or department or agency that has to do with public health in all parts of the United States.

Now, by the bill we are creating an agency which we will be bound, under the consolidation, to destroy and transfer from it to this consolidation the activities which are provided for under the bill. Why create another agency which we will have to destroy?

Mr. SMOOT. We have an agency now that is studying these very things, in fact two of them, outside of the Public Health Service. There is the Woman's Bureau that is studying these questions in detail. The Children's Bureau is also studying these questions in detail and is issuing pamphlets in education along the lines here contemplated. It does seem to me that rather than place this work now with a direct instruction to the Public Health Service to do the same thing, we had better utilize at least the agencies that we have in the Government to-day as far as education is concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. How would it do to put it in charge of a board or committee consisting of the heads of the Woman's Bureau and Children's Bureau and the Surgeon General and execute it through the Children's Bureau?

Mr. SMOOT. The only thing is that if we do that and have the board created they will want a building in the District of Columbia. I am positive of that, I will say to the Senator. I feel sure that that would happen and other——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I withdraw the shaking of my head. I think they will take anything we give them.

Mr. SMOOT. By way of rent, does the Senator mean?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not mean that. I mean the bureau will take any lodgment we give them and any space we give them and any building we may give them.

Mr. SMOOT. We have not any space to give it at the present time, unless we rent it. I know they would have to have space to begin with, and then there would be a complete organization, of course, and chief clerks and heads of divisions, and divisions created in that board, and there is no telling what the expense would be.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator any doubt that the Children's Bureau will enlarge and spend every dollar which we give it, just as completely as any other agency?

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any doubt they will spend every dollar we may give them; but, at least, we will not have to have a chief of the Children's Bureau again, and we will not have to have her secretary, and we will not have to have a great many of the chief clerks that are already there. I am trying to cut out some of the expense, because every dollar we appropriate ought to go for the very purposes of the bill and not for the employment of extra help, whether it be in the Children's Bureau or whether it be a new board created or otherwise. If we are going to appropriate money, it ought to go for the purpose for which it is appropriated and not for the purpose of hiring extra help.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I have been much interested in listening to the discussion with respect to the duplication of effort in the various departments of the Government and in examining the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]. As the discussion has been along this line, I wish to make a similar suggestion, and offer an amendment later on, as to what the effect of the bill will be in certain State governments.

Section 4 of the bill provides—

> That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations authorized in section 2 of this act, any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State board of maternal and infant hygiene, consisting of not less than three members.

As I understand it, no State could have the benefit of the provisions of the bill unless it did that very thing. Now, the government of the State of New York has been tending toward the single-headed department in an endeavor to get rid of the inefficiency of commissions. As a result of that tendency some years ago the State department of health was established, headed by a State commissioner. I think I am well within the truth to say that there is not a finer State department of health in the United States. I wish to read to the Senate a very brief extract from the New York Legislative Manual, which describes the duties of the commissioner of health.

In the first place he receives an annual salary of $8,000 and his expenses. He shall take cognizance of the interests of health and life of the people of the State and of all matters pertaining thereto. He shall exercise general supervision over the work of all local health authorities except in the city of New York. He is charged with the enforcement of the public-health law and the sanitary code. He shall make inquiries in respect to the cause of disease, especially epidemics, and investigate the source of mortality and the effect of localities, employments, and other conditions upon the public health. He shall obtain, collect, and preserve such information relating to mortality, disease, and health as may be useful in the discharge of his duties or may contribute to the promotion of health or the security of life in the State. He shall have general supervision of the State system of registration of births, marriages, and deaths, and prevalent diseases, and other functions which are not of interest on this occasion.

There is an agency up in the State of New York, and other States may have similar agencies, which is entirely competent to do any work contemplated in the pending bill. The budget of the State of New York has risen to a figure in excess of $200,000,000.

The State government is in a very desperate situation with respect to its financial condition. The governor elect will endeavor, as soon as he takes office, to cut down that budget by seventy or eighty or one hundred million dollars, in an effort to save money to the taxpayers and relieve the people of the burden of taxation.

Now, the pending bill, if the State of New York is to take advantage of it, would impose a new commission upon the State, which is utterly unnecessary. There is no need of it. The public-health commissioner of the State and his highly organized office could administer the provisions of the bill within the State of New York with the utmost ease, without incurring any additional expense worthy of consideration.

At the proper time, therefore, I am going to move an amendment to strike out the provision of section 4, which compels a State "to establish a board of maternal and infant hygiene, to consist of not less than three members," and merely state that the State shall designate or authorize a State agency, and let the State select one of its existing agencies, if it is competent to do the work or create a new one, if it has not one in existence.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Has the Senator observed the proviso in section 4, that "in any State having a child-welfare or child-hygiene division in its State board of health," and so forth? Would not that meet the condition in the Senator's State?

Mr. WADSWORTH. But it says "in its State board of health," and the State of New York has no board of health. There may be other States that have not; I am not sure.

I merely brought the matter up at this time because it was in line with the discussion indulged in by the two Senators from Utah.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I inquire whether the whole thought could not be served by inserting the words "commissioner of health," so that it would read "in any State having a child-welfare or child-hygiene division in its State board of health or a commissioner of health."

Mr. WADSWORTH. The language will have to be changed in line 11, because that is mandatory. There it says they "shall designate or authorize the creation of a State board of maternal and infant hygiene." There it says the State shall "designate or authorize the creation of a State board of maternal and infant hygiene."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But that is subject to the provision to which I have called the Senator's attention, namely, "Provided"—which is a qualification of what goes before—"That in any State having a child-welfare or child-hygiene division in its State board of health." If there is no State board of health in the State of New York, but the ordinary duties and functions of a State board of health are performed by the commission of health, why not just merely change it as I have suggested?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I was going to offer an amendment to that proviso also making it read as follows:

> Provided, That any State having an agency in charge of child welfare or child hygiene, said State agency may be directed to administer the provisions of this act.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should think there would be no objection to that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The Senator and I arrive at the same goal.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] were here, I was going to ask unanimous consent to offer another amendment at this time and have it voted upon before the pending amendment is voted upon. I think I shall do it, anyhow.

I ask unanimous consent to offer the following amendment. I will state that I do it at the request of those who are interested in the bill. I ask that it be read and agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2, it is proposed to strike out the proviso in line 12 to line 21, inclusive, and to insert the following:

> Provided, That there is hereby appropriated for the use of the States, subject to the provisions of this act, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, an additional sum of $1,000,000, and annually thereafter a sum not to exceed $1,480,000.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question now is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah previously offered.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, section 8, as I understand, has not yet been adopted, has it?

Mr. SHEPPARD. I think it has.

Mr. HARRISON. The committee reported to strike out section 8 and to insert a substitute for it, which, as I understand, is still pending.

Mr. SMOOT. It is open to amendment.

Mr. HARRISON. It was amended in one particular, but is still open to amendment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Yes; the original text of section 8 remains in the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask the Senator from Maryland, who is in charge of the bill, a question. Beginning on line 21, page 6, the bill now provides—> the provision of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public-health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods, especially in remote areas.

That is the way it reads after the amendment has been adopted; in other words, that "the provision of instruction in the hygiene of maternity and infancy through public-health nurses, consultation centers, and other suitable methods," is intended to be in remote areas or that the course of instruction shall be given in the rural sections of the country. That is what the bill purports to provide, is it not? I am asking the question because I think the language is a little ambiguous, especially the words "in remote areas." I do not understand what that means; whether it is a direction that that class of work is to be carried on out in the remote or rural sections of the country. As the Senator will understand, when we say "especially in remote areas," it might mean a direction and it might not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, evidently, I think, that was intended to be coupled with the medical provision. If the provision regarding medical care has been stricken out, the words which the Senator from Mississippi is speaking of should also go out, because the education will be furnished to the remote sections as well as to the near sections.

Mr. HARRISON. I thought, perhaps, that it was desired to take care of cases out in the rural sections, and I was going to offer an amendment to strike out the words "especially in remote areas" and insert in lieu the words "in rural sections." Chicago might be remote from New York and New York might be remote from San Francisco; but if we desire to carry on this work in the rural sections, we ought to leave out the language "especially in remote areas"; we ought to leave no doubt about the intention and should merely say "in rural sections."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. But if the activities of the bill are confined to education, to the sending out of literature, there would be no further necessity for the inclusion of the words "in remote areas"; they should be stricken out.

Mr. SMOOT. They should be stricken out, as I suggested a while ago.

Mr. HARRISON. It is the intention, then, to strike out the words "especially in remote areas"?

Mr. FRANCE. If the Senator will make that motion——

Mr. HARRISON. I am opposed to striking out that language, because I think this work can be very serviceable in the rural sections, and I had thought that was what the committee had in mind.

Mr. FRANCE. It applies to all sections.

Mr. SMOOT. To the cities as well as to the rural sections.

Mr. HARRISON. It was not the intention, then, merely to leave it apply to rural sections or remote areas?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will read all of the provision, beginning where the amendment was added, he will see that the punctuation shows that the words to which he refers specifically had reference to caring "for mothers and infants at home or at a hospital when necessary, especially in remote areas." In other words, in the cities there are generally hospitals, but in rural communities there are none. If, however, this work were to be extended, it was to be extended especially in remote areas. I have suggested to the Senator from Maryland that the language go out.

Mr. HARRISON. Then the Senator is going to make a motion to strike out the language "especially in remote areas"?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. I wish to make a motion to strike out, on lines 1, 2, and 3, page 7, that part of section 8 which reads:

> If the Federal board finds these plans to be in conformity with provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

That will remove the idea which was generally expressed yesterday in the debate, that the Federal Government would hold such a hand on the administration of this proposed legislation that it might dictate the manner of providing instruction or of disseminating information in the various States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. There must be some method of approval by the Federal agency before it can be determined whether or not the appropriation is available in accordance with the purposes of the act.

Mr. HARRISON. Then, does the Senator from Texas agree with the speech of the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] yesterday, that we are going to lodge the power here, that we are going to standardize this work and make it a federalization scheme instead of being really a State work?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all. This measure follows the plan that was adopted in the good-roads legislation and in the vocational-education legislation.

Mr. SMOOT. And wherever the Government has appropriated money to be expended in connection with money appropriated by the States. This is the exact provision found in other such cases.

Mr. HARRISON. If this provision is left in the bill now, there could be no doubt that the Federal board would have the right to say just how the money would be used in the various States.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. And the manner of instruction.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. And where the instructors shall go; what character of instructors shall be employed; what may be the color of instructors, and the class of institutions that may be included.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Not at all.

Mr. HARRISON. It seems to me that it is going pretty far to lodge such power here in Washington. It is provided in the beginning of section 8——

Mr. SHEPPARD. The function must be lodged in some Federal agency; there must be provided in the bill some method of determining whether a State is entitled to the Federal appropriation under the provisions of the proposed act.

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the States submit a plan which comes within the provisions of the act, the Federal board has no discretion in the matter but must certify that it has complied with the terms of the act. The bill does not say that the Federal board must necessarily approve the plan. It is for them merely to find whether the plan devised by the local agency comes within the provisions of the proposed law. Some Federal agency must perform that function.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator from Mississippi that the language he is reading is not in the amendment which has been agreed to?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes; it was left in the bill; that part of it still remains.

Mr. FLETCHER. That part is still in the amendment?

Mr. HARRISON. Oh, yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. Is not that qualified by the last clause, beginning in line 10, which has been agreed to, as I understand, that "this work shall be carried on in such manner as may be mutually agreed upon by the Federal board and any State receiving the benefits of this act?

Mr. SMOOT. That has been stricken out.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The original section 8 has been substituted for the amendment, I will say to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. HARRISON. The idea which we had yesterday, as I understood, in rejecting the substitute offered by the committee and going back to the original provision of section 8 was to get away from that thought, that the Federal Government should have too much of a hand in this proposition and might veto the work of the States. So, carrying out that idea, it seems to me that it would not affect the bill to strike out the three lines which read:

> If the Federal board finds these plans to be in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

Mr. FRANCE and Mr. WALSH of Montana addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NUGENT in the chair). Does the Senator from Mississippi yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. HARRISON. I yield first to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, the junior Senator from Utah spoke to me a moment ago with reference to this particular portion of the bill and called my attention to an amendment which he thought of offering, and which I think will improve the language and will meet the objection of the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. HARRISON. What is the amendment?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I confess to not being attentive to the suggestions of the Senator from Mississippi, but I was about to suggest, if I may be permitted to do so, the following amendment: In lines 1, 2, and 3, page 7, strike out the words "if the Federal board finds these plans to be" and substitute the words "If these plans are in conformity with the provisions and purposes of the act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board."

Mr. SMOOT. But who will send them?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The words "by the Children's Bureau" should be added.

Mr. SMOOT. That will cover the point.

Mr. KING. I have no objection to those words being added.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Utah makes no essential change, so far as I can see. It means about the same thing. What I should like to get away from is the proposition that the Federal board here in Washington can determine the manner of carrying out the provisions of this bill by the State organizations.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the Senator in favor of the Federal Government appropriating millions of dollars without having any assurance that the real object of the bill is to be accomplished?

Mr. HARRISON. The bill at the beginning of section 8 provides:

That any State desiring to avail itself of the benefits of this act shall, by its board described in section 4, submit to the Federal board detailed plans for carrying out the provisions of this act.

Mr. LENROOT. Suppose the plans do not carry out the purposes of this act, must there not be somebody to determine that question?

Mr. HARRISON. Suppose my State, for instance, availing itself of the provisions of this bill and putting up its pro rata share of the money, should make certain plans which it thought carried out the provisions of the bill, indicating what character of instructors they would send out to inform the people, and the plan should come here, the State board in my State, thinking that they had complied with the provisions of this bill, the board here in Washington might think that the character of instructors in many instances was not just what the board thought it ought to be. There might be a difference in various ways. The Federal board might think that the instructors ought to be men, while the State board might think they ought to be women; the State board might think the instructors should be white, while the board here might think that it made no difference and that the instructors might be of different race. Under those circumstances the board here could say, "You have got to comply with our idea about this matter," and it could refuse to O. K. the plans until they had been changed accordingly. Does not the Senator think that is true?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to ask the Senator from Mississippi a question. While I appreciate fully the force of the criticism he has made, is not the matter he is criticizing the inevitable result of vesting the Federal Government with jurisdiction over such subjects as that covered by the pending bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Federal Government assumes jurisdiction over such matters it seems to me that the argument which the Senator from Mississippi is making is more of an argument against the policy than one which should be made against the measure after the policy has been adopted.

Mr. HARRISON. I agree with the Senator from Washington that the criticism very largely grows out of the policy now being pursued, but we wish to frame the bill so that there will be no dangers lurking in it, and I think I can see some dangers in the proposition to which I have called attention. The purposes of the bill are written in the bill itself and if we are going to so say that the States shall appropriate sums of money equal to those appropriated by the Federal Government to carry out these purposes we ought to leave it to the States to carry them out.

Mr. LENROOT. Why?

Mr. HARRISON. For the simple reason that I think the State knows how to do the work in the best manner and in a manner more agreeable to its particular people than would a board here in Washington.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that the Federal Government should pay out the millions of dollars which are to be appropriated under this bill without any assurance or guaranty to the Federal Government that the object of the bill is to be accomplished, and that that question should be left to the States themselves?

Mr. HARRISON. The Congress is going to appropriate this money. I will not express any opinion as to whether they should do so, but they are going to do it. We ought to carry on the work, in my opinion, through the States. The Senator thinks that it should be carried on through the board here. There is a difference of opinion as to that.

Mr. LENROOT. I should have to oppose the bill unless the Federal Government were given some control, for instance, by the approval of the plans, over the matter of the expenditure of the money. Otherwise, it would simply be a gift of so much money to the States.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I want to say, before the Senator from Wisconsin quits the discussion of this subject, that I see no reason for the position that the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah would destroy the supervision of the General Government over this matter. That is not the purpose of the amendment suggested by the Senator from Utah at all.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, I do not think the Senator from Wisconsin was combating the amendment which I had offered.

Mr. LENROOT. Not by anything I have said. In that connection, however, it seems to me that with the Senator's amendment the fact must exist, but if the Senator's amendment is adopted there is no one to ascertain the fact.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is not sound, it seems to me, and that is what I wanted to say in answer to the suggestion made by the Senator from Wisconsin. The plans must conform to the requirements of the act. Now, it is simply a question as to who shall determine whether they do conform or do not conform. Whether they do conform or do not conform is certainly a judicial question, and would be determined not by the Federal official who looks at it from the Federal aspect but by the court that looks at it from the standpoint of the meaning of the act. If the notice was not sent under plans which did as a matter of fact conform to the act, I apprehend that the Federal officer would be subject to mandamus compelling him to send the notice, and thereupon the court would determine whether the plans proposed were in conformity with the requirements of the act or not. So that it would not, as it seems to me, as implied by the remarks made by the Senator from Wisconsin, give carte blanche to the State to spend this money in any way it saw fit.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, I make no such contention with reference to the amendment of the Senator from Utah. I was merely replying to the suggestion of the Senator from Mississippi; but as to the amendment of the Senator from Utah, it seems to me that does clearly make it a judicial question, while under the bill as it now stands it is not a judicial question.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That is correct. That is, it is made an administrative matter instead of a judicial matter.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes, sir.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, may we have the amendment suggested by the Senator from Utah stated from the desk?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is so hastily written that it is almost undecipherable, so I will read it:

If these plans are in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board by the Chief of the Children's Bureau.

Mr. HARRISON. I think that is somewhat better than the other one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. Beginning with the word "especially," on line 25, page 6, it is proposed to strike out the comma before the word "especially" and the following words:

Especially in remote areas. If the Federal board finds these plans to be in conformity with provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

And to insert:

If these plans are in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board by the Chief of the Children's Bureau.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, before that is voted upon I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland whether the policy of this bill was not to invest in the Federal board a wide discretion as to the approval of the details, and whether it was ever intended that the law itself should cover all of the things, or rather merely an outline?

Mr. FRANCE. The facts are as intimated in the question of the Senator from Wisconsin. It was the purpose to have the bill in a general way outline the work which was to be carried on, and discretion was to be left in the Children's Bureau as to the character of this work and as to the methods.

Mr. LENROOT. If this amendment is adopted, a plan might comply with the act itself in its general outlines and yet fall very far short of accomplishing any real good; might it not?

Mr. FRANCE. That is very true, as the Senator has said. On the other hand, it seems to me that the amendment of the Senator from Utah still leaves discretion in the Children's Bureau, and yet it does not confer upon that bureau the arbitrary power, without any redress, to make a decision. I think the discretion still rests with the bureau, and I think the amendment of the Senator opens the way for an appeal to a court in the case of a controversy. In other words, it removes from the Children's Bureau any power to make a legal judicial decision; and I personally am opposed to lodging judicial power in any official or bureau if it can be avoided.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. The language of the original bill is—finds these plans to be in conformity with provisions and purposes of this act.

The amendment would read:

If these plans are in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act.

Now, the plans that might be submitted might be perfectly valueless, and yet in their general outline they might be in conformity with the provisions and purposes of this act, certainly not in conflict with them, and yet incapable of carrying out the purposes of the act.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I think the point made by the Senator from Wisconsin is a very good one, and it illustrates how the procedure would go on. Under those circumstances the Chief of the Children's Bureau would say: "These plans may conform to the provisions of the act, but I do not think so; I think they are not adequate. They are not effective. Your method of procedure would not secure the results"; and the State officials, if they felt otherwise, would have an opportunity to appeal to a court. In the last analysis we would have a judicial decision as to whether or not the plans were suitable and as to whether they were adequate, as well as in conformity with the purposes of the bill.

Mr. LENROOT. I think that might be true; and if this language were amended so as to read "in conformity with the provisions and adequate to carry out the purposes of this act," then you might have it; but as it now stands I think it would not go as far as it ought to go.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin is indulging in hairsplitting, and yet I have no desire to offer any amendment that would permit any evasion. I think that if this bill is to be enacted into law its provisions and the purposes for which it is to be enacted should be observed. I would not tolerate any evasion by State officials in executing the provisions of this act in perfect good faith. I should be the last one to justify any improper construction of the act. If it is a good act it ought to be carried out, and the State officials ought, in a whole-hearted way, to cooperate with the Federal Government in the execution of the terms of the act; but the point I have in mind is this, and the Senator from Wisconsin doubtless has cognizance of that matter:

In many of these bills which have been passed where authority has been given to Federal boards sometimes incompetent and hypercritical and hypertechnical employees have refused to approve of the course of the States. I have in mind now two illustrations where the Federal officials have refused to approve of activities carried on by one State, which, in the judgment of competent men, measured up to the requirements of the statute, both in letter and in spirit. There is no appeal. The belief is that the Federal officials have acted in a capricious and in an arbitrary manner; and certainly the States ought to be protected against capricious conduct upon the part of Federal officials, because the Senator knows that the administration of these bills too often is placed in the hands of subordinates. Many of the subordinates are incompetent. If the chief had charge of the matter, there would be no controversy; but the responsible officer has not the power, it is not humanly possible, to give attention to all of the details of the plans and the organization. Therefore, subordinate officers are intrusted with the execution of the act; and, as I have stated, too often they are incompetent, and do act capriciously.

The amendment which I have offered is merely for the purpose of protecting the States against capricious action upon the part of the Federal Government. I can see no objection to my amendment, and yet I should not object to the amendment which has just been indicated by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator from Utah a question before the Senator from North Carolina proceeds——

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Would the Senator be willing to accept this as a substitute:

If these plans shall be in conformity with the provisions of this act, and adequate to carry out its purposes, due notice of approval shall be sent by the State board.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator that that was my only purpose in rising, to suggest qualifying the word "adequate" there with the word "reasonably," so as to read "reasonably adequate" or "reasonably appropriate and adequate," which, I think, would be better.

I think the amendment quite important. I can see that under the amendment of the Senator from Utah a mere technical compliance on the part of the State in the appointment of this board, and the ordinary agencies which would accompany the execution of the functions of the board, might be held to be conformity on the part of the State, when as a matter of fact it would not provide any efficient scheme for carrying out the purposes of the bill. I think the Federal Government, when it appropriates these large sums of money in cooperation with the State, has the same right as the State to participate in determining the question of whether the State has adequately provided for the accomplishment, through its agencies, of the purposes of the legislation.

If the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah should be further amended by the language of the Senator from Wisconsin, I think it would perfectly safeguard the interests of the Federal Government; but I think if the language is not modified it would leave rather too broad a discretion in the board here in the matter of rejecting or approving the plan adopted by the State. Therefore, instead of the broad language, "plans adequate for the accomplishment of the purposes," I think it ought to be further modified by the use of the term "reasonably" or "appropriately adequate for the accomplishment of the purposes." That would to some extent limit and circumscribe the powers of the board at Washington and would indicate that it was our purpose and intent that they should approve the plan if it was reasonably adequate—not wholly adequate, but reasonably adequate—to accomplish the purposes of the act.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I offer as a substitute for the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The READING CLERK. As a substitute for the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] insert:

If these plans shall be in conformity with the provisions of this act and reasonably appropriate and adequate to carry out its purposes, due notice of approval shall be sent to the State board.

Mr. SHEPPARD. By whom?

Mr. LENROOT. By the Children's Bureau.

Mr. KING. By the Chief of the Children's Bureau.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the substitute offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment proposed by the junior Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he thinks, under the language of his substitute, there can be any doubt as to the power of the court to review the decision of the Chief of the Children's Bureau?

Mr. LENROOT. None whatever—by mandamus, if they refuse to approve.

Mr. KING. I so construe it, but if there is any doubt, it should be made clear.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRANCE. I send to the desk an amendment, which will take only a moment, as it is only a change of language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 1, line 3, after the word "hereby," strike out the word "annually," and after the word "appropriated," in the same line, insert the word "annually."

Mr. KING. How will it read then, Mr. President?

Mr. FRANCE. That amendment is merely to correct a grammatical error.

The READING CLERK. So that it will read:

That there is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated—

And so forth.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I understood that the amendment offered by the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], and which I understood had been formulated in cooperation with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE], limited the appropriation to one year.

Mr. FRANCE. No; the Senator is in error about that. It did not do so. If the Senator would like to have it read, I should be very glad to have it read.

Mr. KING. No; if the Senator will just state what the substance of it was.

Mr. FRANCE. It provides $1,480,000 for the first year, and $1,480,000 for every year annually thereafter.

UMI

Mr. SIMMONS. Has not the Senator rather misstated that? I think it was $1,000,000 for the first year and $1,480,000 for each succeeding year.

Mr. FRANCE. Yes; it was an additional appropriation of $1,000,000 for the first year.

Mr. KING. It is $1,480,000 for the first year.

Mr. SIMMONS. No; $1,000,000 and $1,480,000 for every succeeding year.

Mr. FRANCE. I will call attention to the fact that $1,000,000 is appropriated for the organization in the first year, and then, in addition to that, there was an appropriation of $480,000.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator is correct. I was not including in my statement the $480,000 appropriated in $10,000 sums for each State for the first year.

Mr. KING. Then it is $1,480,000 for a period of years.

Mr. FRANCE. Yes. We found, after consultation, that it would be better to continue the appropriation, for the reason that the States could not otherwise look forward to the organization of their cooperative work, and it seemed almost necessary to make the annual appropriations in order that the States might look forward to cooperate. I would have been perfectly willing to allow the future appropriations to rest in the hands of future Congresses, but it was impossible to formulate language which would enable the States to look forward in such a way that they could carry on their future cooperative work.

Mr. KING. Did the amendment which was adopted provide that the first appropriation would be available for the fiscal year 1922?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to say that, while the amendment agreed upon with reference to the amount to be appropriated does not exactly conform to the suggestions which I made some time ago, I propose to accept the modification without controversy. Nevertheless, I think the Senators in charge of this measure have made a mistake in not leaving the appropriation for subsequent years open to the free action of subsequent Congresses. My own opinion about this measure is that it is one of great importance, it is work that is going to very rapidly expand, and it is going to develop that the amounts specified in the bill as amended will be wholly inadequate for the accomplishment of the great purpose in view. My hope was that no limitation would be placed upon the appropriations hereafter to be made in the interest of an expansion of this great work, believing, as I do, that in this case, as in other cases, when the system has been put into operation, the necessity of a greater amount of money will be disclosed, and estimates will be made by the department with an absolute assurance that if they are within reason they will be responded to liberally by the representatives of the people.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry there?

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator think that Congress ought to convey the idea that this activity by the Government is going to expire within a reasonably short time, and that the importance of this work must be so apparent to the States that the States themselves will assume the obligation, realizing that under our form of government the duty rests upon the States not only to furnish education to the people, but to carry on work of this character whenever it is necessary? It seems to me the suggestions of the Senator would seem to indicate that the Federal Government is to commit itself for all time to this work, whereas I have been under the impression that it was to stimulate the States to activities, and that in the end they would assume the entire responsibility themselves, because under our form of government that responsibility ought to be assumed by the States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, our experience heretofore has been that when the Federal Government engages in work of this kind it never gets out of it. I doubt very much if we start this method of dealing with this immense subject that the Federal Government will ever free itself from the obligations that it is now taking upon itself of contributing to the expenditures for this purpose.

But, Mr. President, if after we have tried it out it shall be the judgment of Congress at any future time that the Government has carried the scheme to a stage where the States should take it in hand, or if we should conclude that the States can manage it better than the Government, there would be no difficulty in Congress, by legislation, making that fully known by discontinuing the appropriation altogether.

The point I am trying to make is that the fact that we do not make an appropriation for subsequent years ought not to embarrass it at all in formulating the plans and entering upon the work, because I think that nobody will deny that Congress, by making the initial appropriation, assumes the obligation of carrying on the work, if it is found desirable for Congress to carry it on, and to appropriate such sums of money as Congress, when advised by the bureau administering it, may find necessary to carry on the work. I would rather have it unlimited than to have it limited, especially when the limitation provides for as small a sum as this proposed amendment provides for. I do not know of any greater work that the Government could enter upon than this. We have entered upon similar work with reference to animal life, and we have seen the expense of that grow by leaps and bounds. We have found when we have gotten into the work that it requires much more money to carry it on efficiently than we had anticipated. But we have never hesitated to vote the amounts found to be necessary, and will not hesitate to do so in this case. If there is any case one can conceive of in which the Congress should not take a parsimonious attitude it is this case, dealing with child life, and dealing with the dangers of maternity. The only thing that is necessary is to develop in the execution of the work the benefits that are actually accruing as a result of the work. If that is done, Congress will respond liberally, and $1,480,000 per year for this great work, to my mind, is parsimonious. I have not attacked the appropriation at any time upon the ground that it was too great. I want a small initial appropriation, but I want the doors left wide open to Congress, without any restrictions, without any limitations in the law, to meet the situation in the future by as liberal a provision as the exigencies of the case may require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KIRBY in the chair). The question before the Senate now is on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I intend to offer some amendments, but before doing so may I say that I have listened with a great deal of interest to the discussion which has gone on, especially as indulged in by some of the Senators who seem to think that later on, perhaps, Congress will decide that the States can do this work for themselves and will cease making appropriations. One of the most remarkable things in that discussion, Mr. President, is that those suggestions were made with perfectly straight faces. Once the appropriation is made, it will never stop, and we might just as well face that fact. Once the Federal Government adopts the policy of extending Federal aid to States, it will never stop the policy, nor will the States ever ask it to stop the policy. I think I can assure the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that that will be the fact. The only questions we have to determine are what are the proper functions for the Federal Government to undertake in this matter of Federal aid, and to determine how far the Federal Government shall go in each of these functions.

As I recollect it, the Federal Government to-day is extending financial aid to the States through the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, which is endeavoring to eradicate diseases of vice in the States. It is cooperating with the State in a financial way in the matter of rehabilitation of those injured in industry. It is cooperating with the State, of course, in the matter of building highways.

Undoubtedly this legislation will go through, which brings the Federal Government into the extension of Federal aid in maternity and child-welfare cases. I would not be at all surprised if the passage of the bill were followed by a very rapid development or extension of Federal functions along these or similar lines; that in all probability this measure, when it is enacted into law, will be followed by some such measure as one calling for the extension of financial aid to the States in the matter of mothers' pensions and of widows' pensions, and that may very well lead to the extension of Federal aid toward helping in stamping out certain diseases, such as tuberculosis—there is already a movement on foot to bring that about—the elimination of cancer, and other misfortunes that afflict the human race.

I think we can well make up our minds, therefore, that the Federal Government is well embarked upon this policy and that the passage of the pending measure will not terminate the policy by any means.

The efforts that I am directing here toward amending the bill are in the interest of simplicity and saving money to the taxpayers, without in the slightest degree, in my humble judgment, hurting the bill itself. I think something should be left to the judgment of the States as to the character of the administrative machinery they are to set up. My amendments are meant to leave to the States that discretion, for I fear that the bill, if enacted in the form in which it is printed, would lead to the creation of a very large number of new political offices which I think are unnecessary.

In lines 11 and 12, on page 4, I move to strike out the words "board of maternal and infant hygiene, consisting of not less than three members," and insert in lieu thereof the word "agency," so that it will read:

That in order to secure the benefits of the appropriations authorized in section 2 of this act, any State shall, through the legislative authority thereof, accept the provisions of this act and designate or authorize the creation of a State agency with which the Children's Bureau shall have all necessary powers to cooperate as herein provided in the administration of the provisions of this act.

It is my purpose to move to strike out the next proviso, which becomes unnecessary and merely complicates the measure.

Mr. FRANCE. I will accept that amendment. I think it in no way interferes with the efficiency of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I move to strike out the proviso which commences in line 15, page 4, of the bill, and which reads as follows:

Provided, That in any State having a child welfare or child hygiene division in its State board of health, the said State board of health may be directed to administer the provisions of this act through such divisions.

The amendment which has just been agreed to authorizes the State to designate any agency or to create any agency to do the work, and therefore the proviso is quite unnecessary.

Mr. FRANCE. I think if the Senator will consider that language very carefully he will see that it looks rather to economy than to extravagance. It looks to the utilization of the agencies which may be already in existence.

Mr. WADSWORTH. So does the language of the section as just amended.

Mr. FRANCE. I think the proviso might be stricken out in view of the language which has been presented by the Senator from New York and agreed to. At the same time, I think the language of the proviso does direct the attention of the States to the fact that they may utilize agencies already in existence. I will state in this connection that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] provides that the members of the advisory committee shall serve without pay.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not think the Federal Government has any right to say what the States shall do with their own employees in the matter of pay. If the Senator from Maryland will point out any power vested in Congress to forbid a State from paying its employees I should like to know what it is.

Mr. LENROOT. It may be one of the conditions of receiving this aid.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is it intended that the conditions of receiving this aid go to the extent of regulating the salaries? I hope we have not reached that point.

Mr. LENROOT. It would be one of the conditions that these advisory committees shall serve without pay. It is not attempting to impose upon the States any regulation other than that they must do it if they secure Federal aid.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Then I am against the amendment of the Senator from Utah. We may have a right, by this enticement which we hold out to the States in the matter of financial assistance, to make certain rules and regulations, but are we going to clothe this Federal agency with the right to include a maximum and minimum of salaries which shall be paid by the State governments as a part of the regulations? I think we are going pretty far. Why not abolish the State governments?

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator think that the Federal Government, in appropriating this money for the use of the States, may impose limitations upon the manner of its expenditure?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; in the manner of the expenditure of the Federal Government's money.

Mr. THOMAS. I was going to follow up my suggestion by asking whether the addition of the words "from this fund" or "from this appropriation" would not cover the point. I quite agree with the Senator that we have no right to impose any limitations upon the salaries or compensation of State officials, but we can provide that they shall receive no pay from this appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am heartily in favor of such an amendment. I had no idea that it rested in the mind of the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] or the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] that it was a part of the Federal regulations to fix the salaries of State employees. That had not occurred to me until it was just mentioned by them.

Mr. THOMAS. Most of the States are so anxious to get money out of the Federal Treasury that they are willing to concede almost anything.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is perfectly true.

Mr. THOMAS. But I think the difference between us can be adjusted by inserting the words "from this appropriation" or "from Federal money."

Mr. FRANCE. I directed the attention of the Senator from New York to the fact that members of the advisory committees are to serve without pay because of the fear he has expressed that many new lucrative offices would be created as a result of the appropriation.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I ask the Senator from Maryland who is to decide that they shall serve without pay?

Mr. FRANCE. The language of the bill, as amended by the amendment of the Senator from Utah, provides that the members shall give their services voluntarily and shall not be paid out of the proceeds of this fund.

Mr. WADSWORTH. In other words, the Legislature of the State of New York could pass a law creating these advisory committees, but it could not pay them if the Federal board said no. Have we reached that point? Why not make it a part of the provision here that this measure shall not be applicable unless there shall be no governor of the State of New York? Where are we going in this matter? Is there no discretion left to the States?

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator from New York yield?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator objected a moment ago to this provision because it would increase the expenses of the State and create new offices. These advisory committees will not exist except under the provisions of the Federal law. It is not a State law, except to carry out the provisions of the Federal law.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If the Senator will allow me to finish, I will describe what I had in mind. I was going to move to strike out lines 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23, and the first two words in line 24, and leave it to the States themselves to decide whether they want State advisory commissions or local advisory commissions, or both, or to pay them or not, as they may choose.

I do not want it placed in the hands of the Federal Government to compel the appointment of local commissions by an order issued from Washington. I think it is going pretty far. Can we not leave that to the people of the States?

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator's amendment is adopted it will open the door for the States very largely to increase their officials and their expenses through the provisions of this bill.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is their business.

Mr. LENROOT. As it stands, it would prohibit that.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is their business, not the business of the Federal Government. It is their money; they raise it by their taxation, and if they want to pay the members of their advisory committees, they may do so. I hope that they will not. The bill as it is printed opens the door to that thing because it confides to the Federal Government the power, first, to compel the States to have advisory commissions, and then, having provided that they must have them, the Federal Government turns around and says you must not pay them. I think that is pretty drastic treatment of a sovereign State. I do not think they should be compelled, in the first place, to have the commissions, but if they are compelled to have them, in the second place they ought not to be prevented from paying what they want to pay them. I do not see how it could affect the efficiency of the act.

Mr. FRANCE. If the Senator will yield——

Mr. WADSWORTH. Certainly.

Mr. FRANCE. I will say they are not compelled to adopt any of this proceeding, but they are compelled to do so if they accept the appropriations which are here made available to them under these conditions.

Has the Senator from New York considered this phase of the question? And I take the liberty of calling his attention to it if he has not, and that is the desirability of having some moderate degree of uniformity in the machinery which a State shall set up as compared with the machinery which shall be set up by another State, in order that there may be somewhat of a standardization of methods, of method of communication, of method of cooperation, of method of association, in case there should be at any time the need of calling the various States together to consult upon a common problem.

It was the thought, I think, in the minds of those who wrote this provision that it would be highly desirable to have some degree of uniformity throughout the States in the machinery, leaving, however, to each State a large amount of discretion as to the details in carrying out the work.

Mr. WADSWORTH. The bill would leave no such discretion as to details in the administration of the provisions of the measure inside of the State boundaries, but I think what the Senator refers to as uniformity in the operation of the proposed law will be brought about by evolution and experience very shortly. However, I do not think we ought to put the whole thing in a strait-jacket in the beginning. I do not believe it is a necessary regulation, to wit, that the States must, if the board says so, appoint advisory committees, both State and local. There are some pretty big States in the Union.

I do not know exactly what the term "local advisory committee means," but it could mean anything that this Federal board wanted it to mean, and three or four persons sitting here in Washington could send word to all the States that in every township in each State there shall be an advisory committee.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Has the Senator moved to strike that language from the latter part of line 18 and down to line 24?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am going to do that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I shall support that motion.

Mr. FRANCE. I do not think that the amendment proposed vitally changes the bill, in view of the more general language which the Senator from New York has moved to have incorporated. I mean the word "agency" instead of "board." The word "agency," of course, will cover any sort of a board or committee, or even individual local health officer.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Anything the State may want.

Mr. FRANCE. So I do not think the rest of it is material, except that it does provide for a certain degree of uniformity. As has been suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, it also closes the door to the use of this money for the creation of a large number of lucrative offices. I thought that was what the Senator from New York had in mind when he first rose—the prevention of the creation of a large number of lucrative offices.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is why I offered the amendment using the word "agency," so that the State departments could remain single headed instead of being composed of three members. If the States themselves, on their own volition, elaborate the administration of the law within their own borders, I think they are entitled to take such action, so long as it is not done by the Federal money, as the Senator from Colorado suggests.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator from New York will yield at that point, it would be included in the part the State contributed. I think, under the Senator's theory, every dollar of the various State contributions might be used in furnishing political jobs throughout the State.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Here stands the commission clothed with the power to draw the regulations and approve the plans under which the work is to be done.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; but the Senator objects to this Federal board having anything to say about the State committees or officials.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, I objected to the mandatory provisions of the bill to which I have referred so often under which the Federal board may require the State boards or the State agencies to appoint advisory committees, both State and local, to assist in carrying out the purposes of the act. I think that might be left out for the time being. I imagine that a good many States will not want any advisory commissions. I think the State of New York will not want one; it now has too many commissions of all kinds and descriptions; and yet under this act it will be compelled to have another one if the board at Washington says they shall. I do not want the Federal Government clothed with the absolute power to create positions in the States.

Mr. SIMMONS. Does not the adoption of the Senator's amendment, a little while ago, make it absolutely necessary to strike out that part of the bill?

Mr. WADSWORTH. No; I do not think it does.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator's amendment, a little while ago, as I understood it, simply provided for the carrying out of this scheme by the States through any agency they might appoint. Now, the language in the proviso is retained which provides that the State board which the Senator's amendment has just destroyed shall appoint an advisory committee, making the proposed act inconsistent with itself.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think it is inconsistent as a policy.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator first proposes to provide for the elimination of the State board and vest the powers which the bill confers upon it in any agency the State may provide. Then immediately follows the provision that the State board shall appoint an advisory committee. The Senator is, therefore, proposing to strike down the State board in one section and retain it in the next section.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the advisory board.

Mr. SIMMONS. There must be State boards if we are going to have committees appointed by State boards; but the Senator suggested an amendment to provide for eliminating the State boards and vesting these powers in any agency that the State might see fit to establish.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand that the amendment which I first offered, on lines 11 and 12, has been adopted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STANLEY in the chair). The amendment has been adopted.

Mr. WADSWORTH. May I say to the Senator from Maryland, as to the proviso which follows the amendment, that I have no objection to the proviso in lines 15 to 18, inclusive, remaining in the bill, although I think it is surplusage?

Mr. FRANCE. I appreciate that.

Mr. LENROOT. Before the amendment is voted on, I desire to say that I think that is true if the proviso remains as at present framed, but if the word "may" can be changed to "shall," I think it would be very desirable to leave the proviso in, because any State which has a child welfare or child hygiene division in the State board of health will be a proper agency to administer this proposed act. Therefore, before the motion to strike out is voted on, I move, in line 17, page 4, to strike out the word "may" and to insert the word "shall."

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think that is an excellent amendment.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, if the Senator from New York will yield, I desire to say that I understood he would be willing to withdraw his amendment striking out the proviso.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Yes; the first proviso itself, in lines 15 to 18, inclusive, if the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is adopted.

Mr. FRANCE. May the amendment be stated, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The first amendment is that offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] to strike out the word "may" in line 17 and to insert the word "shall." It is necessary first to vote on that amendment before voting on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Who is to give the direction referred to?

Mr. LENROOT. The law itself.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The language proposed is:

Provided, That in any State having a child welfare or child hygiene division in its State board of health, the said State board of health shall be directed to administer the provisions of this act through such divisions.

Directed by whom? Is the Federal board to direct them or is the head of the Children's Bureau to direct them?

Mr. LENROOT. I think the criticism made by the Senator is well taken. I move to strike out the words "may be directed to" and to insert the word "shall." That will accomplish the object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment as modified will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 17, it is proposed to strike out the words "may be directed to" and to insert the word "shall."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment as modified.

The amendment as modified was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, on page 4, I move to strike out lines 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and the first two words on line 24, for the reasons which I have already given.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, beginning in line 18, it is proposed to strike out the following:

The Federal board may require the State boards cooperating under this act to appoint advisory committees, both State and local, to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act; the members of such advisory committees shall be selected by the State boards, and at least half of such members shall be women.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I wish to express my very cordial approval of that amendment. If this bill is to be effective, the State boards of health must be given authority to direct it. I do not believe it will work in any other way. The effort to allow the Federal board to require the State boards to appoint advisory committees is hardly wise, in my opinion, for the reason that such committees may or may not be desirable in the various States. The same rule can not work in every State; we must recognize the machinery of the State, and we must in a measure concede to them the authority to perfect plans for administering health work within their borders; and to undertake to control the State boards of health by advisory committees will handicap the work. Nearly every State has a State board of health, selected from their physicians, and they can best do this work.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, while I do not feel that the pending amendment is one which vitally interferes with the provisions of the bill, I do consider that some degree of uniformity is necessary, or at least advisable, in the machinery which we set up in the States. It was my thought that if unpaid advisory committees were created they would give us a uniformity which would be very desirable; so that in case it was desired to call a conference members of the voluntary advisory committees could be summoned to the conference. I do not feel that the appointment of advisory committees will in any way hamper the work being carried on by the boards of health or by the other agencies which will be created under the bill, in conformity with the language suggested by the Senator from New York. I hope that the Senate will not adopt the amendment and that the section may be allowed to stand as it has now been amended, in a way which makes it very satisfactory.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Maryland in charge of the bill whether it would be satisfactory to the committee if the requirement as to the Federal board being given the power to appoint advisory committees or to require State boards to appoint advisory committees, whether or not the State boards might care to do so, were modified to provide as follows:

The Federal board may require the State boards cooperating under this act, and with their consent, to appoint advisory committees, both State and local.

I am inclined to think that in Missouri we would like to have such an advisory board; it would interest a large number of people who might otherwise not be interested; and yet I can conceive it may be true, as the Senator from New York has said, that in some States such an advisory board might not be desired. There ought, however, to be the power to give it some official sanction.

Mr. LENROOT. What would be meant by requiring certain action to be taken with the consent of the other parties?

Mr. SPENCER. Under the provisions of the bill it is not provided that they shall be "required," but the word "may" is used so that they may or may not do so.

Mr. LENROOT. The two things are absolutely antagonistic.

Mr. SPENCER. I agree with the Senator as to the word "require," and think we had better change it; but the point is to give to the Federal board the right, with the consent of the State, to have an advisory board in the State so that it would have some official connection with the administration of the law.

Mr. FRANCE. If the Senator will suggest that amendment, it will be agreeable to me personally.

Mr. SPENCER. May I ask the Senator from New York if it will be agreeable to him?

Mr. WADSWORTH. I do not understand just what part the Senator wants to change.

Mr. SPENCER. After the word "act," in line 20, there would be added the words "and with their consent," so that it would read:

The Federal board may require the State boards cooperating under this act, and with their consent, to appoint advisory committees.

In other words, it would not be compulsory upon any State unless the State desired it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is all I am aiming at, and we will get that result by striking out the entire language.

Mr. SPENCER. Yes, Mr. President; we may get the same result; but if we strike out the entire language we give the advisory boards no official standing whatever. There will be no provision for them in the law, whereas the amendment I have suggested accomplishes, I think, what the Senator from New York has in mind, and yet does give to the advisory boards a certain official standing. I should like to see the advisory boards created; I think we would like them in Missouri.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Let me call attention again to how the language would read if the suggestion of the Senator from Missouri were adopted. It would read:

The Federal board may require the State boards—

Require the State boards—

cooperating under this act to appoint, with their consent, advisory committees.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The word "require" should be changed to "authorize."

Mr. SPENCER. That is the very suggestion I was about to make.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It should read "authorize the State boards, with their approval."

Mr. SPENCER. It would read better if the word "require," in line 19, were changed to "authorize," and after the word "act," in line 20, there were added the words "with their consent."

Mr. WADSWORTH. That is a vast improvement.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, that would meet the situation, if it is possible for the Federal Government to authorize such State boards to do a certain thing. I would suggest, however, the word "request" instead of the word "require."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Oh, no; that is a very different matter.

Mr. WATSON. "Authorize" is better.

Mr. FRANCE. The word proposed is satisfactory to me, and I think it meets the suggestion of the Senator from New York.

Mr. SPENCER. Then, if I may be permitted, I move that the word "require," in line 19, be changed to "authorize."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 19, it is proposed to strike out the word "require" and insert the word "authorize," so as to read:

The Federal board may authorize the State boards cooperating under this act.

And after the word "act" to insert the words "and with their consent."

Mr. SPENCER. "And with the consent of said State board," in order that there may be no doubt to whom it refers.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from New York if under his amendment which we have just adopted that authority is not implied? Why is it necessary for the Federal board to authorize the State to do it when you have just provided that the State shall frame its own plan for the administration of this act?

I dislike very much to see such a flagrant inconsistency. You have provided now that the State shall have authority under this law to provide its own agencies for its administration. That has been done upon the insistence of several Senators here that the Federal Government should not control the State machinery for the enforcement of this law. Now it is proposed to authorize the establishment of a committee to be authorized by the Federal Government and not by the State government. If the State government wants a committee under the authority which the Senator's amendment gives the State government to prescribe the method of enforcement of this law, it can appoint a committee.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It can.

Mr. SIMMONS. It does not at all prevent the carrying out of the idea of the Senator from Missouri. If in his State it is thought better to have a plan by which there is to be a State board or an advisory committee, that State, under the authority given by the Senator's amendment, can establish it. There is no necessity for giving a State authority for doing a thing which a provision of the law in broad language authorizes it to do if it wants to do it.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I think the Senator is absolutely right. That is all I have been endeavoring to accomplish, and when I first moved to strike out lines 19 to 24 it was to do away with the mandatory feature which would compel a State to adopt a certain machinery.

Mr. SIMMONS. Of course, we are going to strike this language out, because it is inconsistent.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I am perfectly willing to strike it out. The Senator from Missouri now suggests that the teeth be taken out of that language and that it be really left to the discretion of the States, after all. I think they have that discretion anyway. I think that is quite meaningless.

Mr. SIMMONS. It is absolutely meaningless.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SPENCER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I desire to register an objection to the language proposed by the Senator from Missouri, the validity of which, I think, will be apparent.

I do not think we ought to frame a Federal statute which would grant any kind of authority to State officials. They derive their authority from some other source. We ought not to authorize them. The same fault is found in the succeeding sentence, which I should like to remodel. It reads:

In any State, the legislature of which does not meet in 1920, the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so, may accept the provisions of this act and create a State board of maternal and infant hygiene.

The Federal statute is reposing powers in the governor of the State. That is an eminently inadvisable way to legislate. It seems to me the purpose that everyone has in this matter could be easily accomplished by just using the word "recommend" instead of "require," so that it shall read:

The board shall recommend to the State boards cooperating under this act the appointment of advisory committees, both State and local, to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act.

Then the Federal board will send out a recommendation that these advisory committees be constituted, and set forth their reasons why they should be constituted; and then, if the State was so situated as that its machinery could not accept the recommendations, or there were local reasons why it could not do so, that would dispose of the matter; and thus, so far as uniformity could be accomplished, it would be accomplished.

I should revolt at the idea of our attempting to repose power in State officials. They derive their power from their own State constitutions.

I accordingly suggest, in that same connection, the remodeling of the succeeding sentence, so that it shall read in this way:

If, in any State the legislature of which does not meet in 1920, the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so, shall accept the provisions of this act and create a State board of maternal and infant hygiene of not less than three members, or designate a division of child welfare or child hygiene in the State board of health, to act in cooperation with the Children's Bureau, the said Children's Bureau shall then recognize such State board for the purposes of this act.

That is to say, just insert the word "if" before the sentence commences, change "may" to "shall," and cut out the period after the words "Federal board" in line 5, so that if the governor is authorized to do so, and he shall create such an agency, then the Children's Bureau shall recognize it. Thus you escape the anomaly of Congress assuming to grant powers to State officials.

They derive their powers logically, of course, from the constitution and laws of their own States. So that here, if you should direct the Children's Bureau to recommend to the various State boards the appointment of advisory committees, State and local, it seems to me that you would thus meet the views of all the Members who have expressed themselves.

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I think the suggestion of the Senator from Montana is excellent. I think it is a better word than my own or the other one that was suggested—to change the word "require," in line 19, to "recommend," and let the language read:

The Federal board may recommend.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Strike out the words "may require," and insert in lieu thereof "shall recommend to."

Mr. SPENCER. Instead of saying "shall recommend to," I should suggest "may recommend to."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should put it "shall." Apparently, that is the sense. The sense is that these advisory boards, wherever they can be organized, ought to be organized; and so we direct the Children's Bureau to make that recommendation.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana make that as a motion?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I offer that as an amendment. The Senator has indicated his willingness to accept it.

Mr. SPENCER. I withdraw my recommendation.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Should not the words "Federal board" be changed to "Children's Bureau"?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that that has already been done, so that it will read:

The Children's Bureau shall recommend to the State boards cooperating under this act the appointment of advisory committees, both State and local, to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. "Shall" or "may"?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. "Shall."

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, does the Senator from Maryland think it is wise to make that mandatory upon the Federal agency?

Mr. FRANCE. Yes; I feel that it is wise, as the Senator from Montana has suggested.

Mr. WADSWORTH. You are setting up here a Federal agency of three or four persons, and it is assumed that they are going to know more about what is needed in the way of administration in the States than anybody else in and about Washington. You put in the act creating the board a provision that they must recommend the creation of advisory committees. Now, I do not believe that is necessary.

Mr. FRANCE. It is not material.

Mr. WADSWORTH. If they determine that it is wise, they can do so. If they determine that it is not wise to recommend the formation of advisory committees, they ought not to be compelled to make the recommendation.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. If it is agreeable to the chairman, I am quite willing to substitute the word "may" for "shall."

Mr. WADSWORTH. With that change, I have no objection to the language between lines 19 and 24, if it shall read "the Children's Bureau may recommend."

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I should like to ask if the technical language in the bill is not "Chief of the Children's Bureau"?

Mr. FRANCE. "The Children's Bureau." The words "Children's Bureau," however, are defined in the amendment of the Senator from Utah so that the Chief of the Children's Bureau is included; so that point is covered.

Mr. LENROOT. Very well.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he will now repeat the language of the bill as he would like to have it read, with the changes included which he has suggested, commencing on line 24?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, has the amendment on line 19 been adopted? I should like to know about that before we proceed to another.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I understand that the proposed amendment of the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] included every case in which the words "Federal board" appeared, and that there was substituted in lieu of those words "the Children's Bureau."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The attention of the Chair is called to the fact that the amendment changing the words "Federal board" to "Children's Bureau" wherever they appear in the bill has not yet been made.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I suggest to the Senator from Utah that he make that request.

Mr. SMOOT. I was just going to ask that it be agreed to now.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Can it not be agreed to now that the words "Children's Bureau" shall be inserted wherever the words "Federal board" appear throughout the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is another amendment before the Senate. That can only be agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I understand that the senior Senator from Utah asked unanimous consent that that change be made.

Mr. SMOOT. If there is an amendment pending now, let it be agreed to and disposed of, and then I shall ask unanimous consent that wherever the words "Federal board" occur in the bill they shall be stricken out and the words "Children's Bureau" inserted.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then the sentence would read:

The Federal board may recommend to the State boards——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. "The Children's Bureau."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But that has not yet been done. It will read:

The Federal board may recommend to the State boards cooperating under this act the appointment of advisory committees, both State and local, to assist in carrying out the purposes of this act; the members of such advisory committees shall be selected by the State boards, and at least half of such members shall be women.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Montana incorporate in his amendment the other changes which he suggested?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, may I interpose a suggestion there? The Senator from Montana has made some additional suggestions applicable to the next sentence, and I also have some amendments to the next sentence, and the two can be combined.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I think perhaps we had better dispose of this sentence first.

Mr. FRANCE. I have no objection to the amendment, as perfected by the Senator from Montana, to the language between lines 19 and 24.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, why can not the amendment be stated, and let us act on it, and make some headway?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 19, strike out the word "require," and insert in lieu thereof the words "recommend to"; on line 20, page 4, strike out the words "to appoint," and insert in lieu thereof the words "the appointment of."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, just to straighten out the inconsistency which occurs in the next sentence, perhaps it would be wise for me to offer an amendment before the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] offers his. I have two to offer. On line 2, of page 5, after the word "and," I move to insert the words "designate or," so that it will read "may accept the provisions of this act and designate or create a State board," and so forth.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I think that is a very helpful amendment.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Is there any objection to that, Mr. President? The reason for it is perfectly obvious.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Now I move to insert, in line 2, page 5, after the word "State," the word "agency," and to strike out the rest of the line, and all of lines 3 and 4, down to and including the word "health," so that it will read, "designate or create a State agency to act in cooperation with the Federal board." That makes it conform with the amendment already adopted to the first part of section 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, that principle having been established, I make a request similar to one which the Senator from Utah made, that hereafter, throughout the bill, where the words "State board" occur, the language be changed to read "State agency." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, I move to insert, after the word "women" and the period, in line 24, page 4, the word "If"; on page 5, line 1, to strike out the word "may" and insert the word "shall"; and after the word "board," in line 5, page 5, to strike out the period, so that the sentence shall read:

If in any State, the legislature of which does not meet in 1920, the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so, shall accept the provisions of this act and designate or create a State agency to act in cooperation with the Children's Bureau, the said Children's Bureau shall then recognize such State board for the purposes of this act until the legislature of such State meets.

Mr. LENROOT. I would like to have the Senator's construction of that language. Is it intended to mean that, although there may be no authority whatever in the governor of the State to accept the provision of the act, he may accept them and have the State receive all the benefits of the act?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is expressly provided that he can not do anything unless he is authorized to do so, and he must be authorized to do so by the State law. The point I am making is that we can not confer on the governor of the State the power to create or designate a board. If he has that power, he must of course get it from the State constitution or the State law; but if he does that, then the Children's Bureau, being authorized, will recognize that agency as meeting the requirements of the act.

Mr. LENROOT. One other question. That is the construction I give it in its original language, but does not the Senator's amendment change that construction? In other words, if the Senator's amendment is adopted, could not the governor of the State file a certificate merely stating that, "in so far as I have authority I accept the provisions of the act and designate this agency," and will not the State then be entitled to the money, although there will be no authority whatever in the governor to accept it?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The amendment proposed by me does not alter that situation at all.

Mr. LENROOT. I think it does.

Mr. WATSON. May we not have the amendment reported, so that we can tell what it is?

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, before the Secretary reads the suggested amendment I ask the Senator from Montana if he will not also substitute the year "1921" for "1920."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That should be done. That is what I had in mind. But, before the amendment is reported, if the Senator from Indiana will pardon me, I call attention to one fact, for the purpose of showing that there is no change made, so far as the authorization is concerned. The original draft reads:

In any State the legislature of which does not meet in 1920 the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so—

Authorized how?

So far as he is authorized to do so, of course, by the constitution and the laws of his State. It continues—may accept the provisions of this act and create a State board of maternal and infant hygiene.

That is to say, we say to the governor of the State of Montana or the governor of the State of New York, "You may create a bureau or board of maternal and infant hygiene."

The point I object to is telling the governor of a State that he may do so and so. I want to provide that if he does so, then the Children's Bureau will recognize that agency as the agency of the State.

Mr. LENROOT. If instead of putting the word "if" where the Senator proposes, in line 25, he should strike out the words "so far as" and insert "if," would he not accomplish his purpose and make the construction very clear?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I did not get that.

Mr. LENROOT. Instead of the amendment the Senator proposes, if line 25 be amended by striking out the words "so far as" and inserting the word "if" in that place, will the Senator not accomplish what he desires and make the construction very clear, so that it will read, "if he is authorized to do so, may accept," and so forth?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. But the Senator does not reach the point I am endeavoring to arrive at. What I object to is authorizing the governor to create a board, which we do by saying "if he is authorized to do so he may create a board." We can not authorize him to create a board. We can not delegate any authority to him of that character. But if he is authorized to do so and he does so, then the Children's Bureau will accept that work.

Mr. SPENCER. Would the Senator from Montana have any objection to inserting after the word "shall," as he changes it, in line 1, page 5, the words "under the provisions of law"? That would meet the objection of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], which seems to me to have merit in it. It would then read:

If in any State, the legislature of which does not meet in 1921, the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so, shall, under the provisions of law, accept the provisions of this act and create a State agency.

And so forth.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That would be entirely satisfactory.

Mr. SPENCER. Then there will be no doubt about the governor's action, if he did have the authority.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should have no objection to that. The only point I make is that if under the Constitution and laws of his own State he does it, the Children's Bureau will accept it.

Mr. SPENCER. Exactly. May we hear the proposed amendment, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 24, before the word "In" insert the word "If"; on line 25, strike out the numerals "1920" and insert the numerals "1921"; in line 1, page 5, strike out the word "may" and insert "shall, under the provisions of law," so that the paragraph will read:

If in any State, the legislature of which does not meet in 1921, the governor of that State, so far as he is authorized to do so, shall, under the provisions of law, accept the provisions of this act and designate or create a State agency to act in cooperation with the Federal board—

And so forth.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, let me suggest to the Senator from Missouri if it would not be better to insert, in place of what he desires to insert, the words "by law," so that it will read "so far as he is authorized by law," merely inserting "by law."

Mr. SPENCER. That would not at all meet what I had in mind.

Mr. McCUMBER. Probably I did not understand what the Senator really desired.

Mr. SPENCER. Without the amendment suggested by me, it might well be that a governor would certify that, so far as law authorized him to do so, he accepts the provision, and automatically that would make available the Federal appropriation, when, as a matter of fact, the authorization of the State law was not anywhere near sufficient to give him the authority to accept unqualifiedly. The governor ought not to be allowed to accept unless under the law he has the authority to make the acceptance which he seeks to make. That is what the amendment protects, and that is what the amendment of the Senator from North Dakota does not protect.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think the effect would be the same.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 4, line 24, I move to insert after the word "women" a comma and the words "all of the members of which advisory committees shall serve without compensation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I move that the word "of," in line 21, page 6, be stricken out, and that the word "for" be inserted in lieu thereof.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, line 21, after the word "provision," strike out the word "of" and insert the word "for," so that it will read, "the provision for instruction."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. On page 9, line 16, I move to strike out the words "as chairman of the Federal board," so that it will read:

That the Secretary of Labor shall include in his annual report to Congress a full account of the administration of this act and of the expenditures of the moneys herein authorized.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Utah to the fact that there is an amendment which has not yet been agreed to. The Secretary will state it.

The READING CLERK. On page 4, line 14, and wherever thereafter they appear, strike out the words "Federal board" and insert in lieu thereof the words "Children's Bureau."

Mr. SMOOT. I thought that had been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has not yet been agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the amendment be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HENDERSON. I was just about to ask the Senator from Utah with reference to that amendment. I would also like to ask if the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] that wherever the words "State board" appear in the bill it now shall read "agency," has been agreed to?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That amendment has been agreed to. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to further amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On page 6, in line 2, after the word "elsewhere," I move to strike out the words "to rent buildings outside of the city of Washington." I ask whether the Senator in charge of the bill will be willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. FRANCE. I will not object to that amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "to rent buildings outside of the city of Washington."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the same section, section 6, unlimited power is given to employ assistants, clerks, and other persons, without any limitation of salary. As we have always found that to be a bad practice heretofore, I move the insertion of the following amendment—at salaries or compensation to be fixed by the Secretary of Labor and corresponding to those fixed by law for similar services elsewhere in Government employ.

I suggest to the Senator from Maryland the acceptation of the amendment.

Mr. FRANCE. I think that is a very suitable provision.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It should be inserted after the word "elsewhere," in line 2, page 6.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator State once more the provision about the approval of the Secretary of Labor?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will ask that the Senator read the amendment.

The reading clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Why is it necessary, if the Children's Bureau is to have jurisdiction of this question, to have the salaries determined by the Secretary of Labor? It seems to me the Senator's provision that the salaries shall be similar to those of other Government employees in similar work is sufficient. I would not think it necessary that the Secretary of Labor should have the arbitrary right to fix these salaries.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say, in answer to the question, that it seems to me the fixing of a salary is of sufficient importance, where it is not fixed by law, to go to the head and have the approval of the executive head of the department in which the bureau operates. I do that because of the additional responsibility vested in a Cabinet officer. The Secretary of Labor would merely approve a salary suggested, I suppose, by the head of the Children's Bureau, but it should have his sanction.

Mr. LENROOT. Will not the Senator make it read "approved" rather than "fixed"?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have not any objection to that. I will accept that modification.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Fixed by the Children's Bureau, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. At salaries approved by the Secretary of Labor, but not more than those fixed by law for similar services.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I have no objection to that, but I assume it to mean that the Children's Bureau is to fix them, subject to the approval of the Secretary of Labor. I did not know whether it would be considered that the Secretary was to fix them in the first place.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No. A good deal of initiative would be in the bureau.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the amendment to which he refers deals with the 5 per cent which would be subtracted from any sum appropriated for salaries or whether it deals with salaries which are already paid to employees of the bureau, or both?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand it only deals with those which are created by the bill.

Mr. KING. Are there any salaries to be paid under the bill other than those which will come from the 5 per cent fund, to which reference is made in section 5?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not competent to answer that question. I have had no management of the bill. This applies evidently to the salaries of those persons whose employment is authorized by the bill.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] or the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] whether any money will be paid for compensation or expenses or salaries in the administration of the bill, except from the fund of 5 per cent provided for in section 5?

Mr. FRANCE. I believe not.

Mr. SHEPPARD. That is my understanding also.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, the Chief of the Children's Bureau, it being a statutory provision, would not be included in the 5 per cent.

Mr. KING. I assume a great deal of the work which is called for by the bill is already being performed by the bureau.

Mr. FRANCE. That is true.

Mr. KING. Is it contemplated that the persons who are now performing work which the bill will perhaps increase, shall, in addition to the salaries and compensation which they are now receiving, get 5 per cent additional?

Mr. FRANCE. I think not, if the question is addressed to me.

Mr. KING. I addressed the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. FRANCE. I think that would be very bad practice.

Mr. KING. I think so, too. It would seem to be a duplication and an increase in salaries where it would not be warranted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, on yesterday when an amendment to this bill was being voted upon I stated that I had a pair with the junior Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and not knowing how he would vote on the amendment, I therefore withheld my vote. However, the junior Senator from New York having informed me that he is in favor of the bill, and as I have favored it both as a member of the committee and on the floor, I shall be glad to cast my vote for the measure.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS IN HOLIDAY SEASON.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I offer the following unanimous-consent agreement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the proposed agreement.

The reading clerk read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that on Monday, December 20, 1920, the Senate, at the close of the routine morning business, will adjourn until Thursday, December 23, 1920, and that at the close of routine morning business on Thursday, December 23, 1920, the Senate will adjourn until Monday, December 27, 1920, and during the period from December 20, 1920, to December 27, 1920, no business other than routine morning business will be transacted, and that no bills or resolutions shall be passed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. May I ask to what date that contemplates going?

Mr. SMOOT. December 27. I will say to the Senator that the reason it was not extended beyond that time was because the War Finance Corporation bill, for the relief of farmers, will come from the House on Friday next, as I am informed, and I thought it would be very proper to take that up on Monday and act upon it in the Senate, if possible.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Of course, I would not put anything in the way of giving relief to that situation, but that would necessitate a return to Washington by a great many of us leaving for the Christmas holiday, or else we will have to remain here, because those who are away a night-and-day run would necessarily have to leave their homes on the Christmas holiday in order to be here on the 27th. It seems to me nothing will be gained by that procedure, so far as any holidays are concerned. There is a good deal of matter that might be disposed of. If we are only going to take that kind of a recess, it might be best to go on with the ordinary business of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. That is perfectly satisfactory to me. I thought the Senator from South Carolina was in favor of this proposed agreement.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. What I was in favor of was——

Mr. SMOOT. I am perfectly willing to withdraw it.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Just let me state that I was hoping that when we took a recess for the Christmas holidays we might be able to include the two—Christmas and New Year's Day—as both of them come on a Saturday. If we could get the measure to which the Senator refers over here during the coming week, we might dispose of it, so that when we do take a recess for the holidays it may include the two and not break into the continuity of our holiday.

Mr. SMOOT. I thought of that myself, but I am told by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House that it is absolutely impossible to secure the passage of that measure before Thursday evening. Therefore it could not be over here before Friday, and we could not get a report out of the committee and get it passed during that day. Then the very next day is Christmas. So it seemed to me that this was the only way, if we wanted a week, and that after Monday, if we have not anything special——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. Just a minute. If we have not anything special on the 27th, the Senate could adjourn until the following Thursday.

Mr. ROBINSON. The proceeding which the unanimous-consent agreement contemplates would require Senators who are interested in the measure referred to to remain here until the 27th.

Mr. SMOOT. No; not necessarily.

Mr. ROBINSON. Why not?

Mr. SMOOT. Because that measure will not be here until the 27th.

Mr. ROBINSON. But Senators who live in remote parts of the country can not get home and return by the 27th. Take the case of myself. I can not leave here Monday or Tuesday and get back for the session on the 27th.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator could leave to-night if he wanted to do so, and get back on the 27th.

Mr. ROBINSON. I could not spend Christmas day at home and get back by the 27th, because there is no schedule time that would put me back here. This arrangement is the very worst that could be suggested in so far as the holiday season is concerned. It would be much better to have the Senate stay in continuous session rather than make the arrangement the Senator from Utah has suggested. The Senator discussed this matter with me some hours ago, as he will recall, and he had another arrangement which was satisfactory to me, and I think it would be satisfactory to other Senators.

Mr. SMOOT. I have prepared that unanimous-consent agreement in accordance with the discussion which first led to it, and I have another, which I will read.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Before the Senator reads it, let me make this suggestion to him.

If we were to return on Monday, the 27th instant, and that bill were returned from the other House, it would be referred to the proper committee on this side of the Capitol, and it would be some four or five days or perhaps longer before the committee would report it. It evidently would be discussed at considerable length here. There would be only about five days between that and New Year's Day. If we were to come back here on the following Monday, which is the 3d of January, I do not think any time would be lost, and business certainly would be better attended to than to have the lack of a quorum here during the period of the Christmas holidays.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will read the proposed unanimous-consent agreement which I first prepared, and I should like Senators to follow it. Then I care not which one we adopt. It is as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that beginning with Monday December 20, 1920, and until Monday, January 3, 1921, the Senate will meet each Monday and Thursday, and at the close of the routine morning business on Monday, December 20, 1920, Thursday, December 23, 1920, Monday, December 27, 1920, and Thursday, December 30, 1920, the Senate will adjourn; and during the period from December 20, 1920, to December 30, 1920, no business other than routine morning business will be transacted, and that no bills or resolutions shall be passed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I desire to suggest an amendment in the wording of the proposed agreement. Instead of reading "at the close of the routine morning business on Monday," I suggest that it read, "at the close of the regular business on Monday," so as to give us a full day on Monday in which to transact whatever business we may desire.

Mr. SMOOT. That is really what the agreement provides, for it only extends to Thursday, December 30, 1920; so that when we adjourn on that day to Monday, of course, we shall meet in regular session.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I am speaking about Monday, December 20, next Monday. The Senator's proposal read "at the close of the routine morning business." Why not say "at the close of the business of that calendar day," in order to give us a full day to go on with the business of the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. The proposed agreement might be so amended.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think that would be better.

Mr. SMOOT. The only reason I did not so frame the agreement, I will say to the Senator, was because many Senators told me they desired to leave the city to-night and to-morrow; and I thought, that being the case, we would not try to do very much business on Monday. However, I myself think the Senator's suggestion is a very good one.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator a question. Suppose the War Finance Corporation bill should come back to the Senate on Monday?

Mr. SMOOT. It will.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Under this proposed agreement could it be considered and passed?

Mr. SMOOT. No; it could not, and I think perhaps the Senator's suggestion is a wise one.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then the agreement should be modified so as to make such action possible.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I suggest that the Senator modify the agreement so as to make it read "the calendar day of Monday."

Mr. McKELLAR. Is the Senator from Utah certain that the War Finance Corporation bill will come to the Senate by Monday next?

Mr. SMOOT. I am so informed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understood it would be passed this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. It is now before the other House, and I am told that it will pass before adjournment to-day.

Mr. McKELLAR. If it should not pass the House to-day but should pass on next Monday, we would like an opportunity in the Senate to pass it on Tuesday.

Mr. SMOOT. I think the order is that it shall pass to-day.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My understanding is that the House have adopted a rule that there shall be a three hours' debate on the bill, and that it shall then be voted on.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Utah if he will not incorporate in the request for unanimous consent a provision that we shall vote on the nitrate bill at a certain time on next Monday?

Mr. SMOOT. We can not do that.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah, if I may, why we should adjourn at all?

Mr. SMOOT. If there were any appropriation bills in the Senate ready for consideration, I should be opposed to adjourning at all.

Mr. ROBINSON. I can tell the Senator from Colorado why we should adjourn. Some of us want to go home for the holidays.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that is a very good and laudable reason, of course. We have only until the 4th of next March to pass 13 great appropriation bills; we have a great deal of business besides that. We were elected to perform the duties that appertain to the Senate and to the House of Representatives. At this time, when we have so much business to transact, I shall object to any adjournment at all. Let us stay here and attend to our affairs. The idea of taking two weeks' vacation at a time like this, in my judgment, is not to be considered favorably for a moment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do not spoil the whole thing.

Mr. THOMAS. I am not spoiling anything. I have not been consulted. This is the first I have heard of it.

Let me say, while I am on my feet, that I was not aware when I came in that the Sheppard-Towner bill had been passed; and I desire to take this opportunity of stating for the RECORD that if I had been here, although it would have been unavailing, I should have voted in the negative. However, I object to the custom of adjourning for two weeks for the Christmas holidays in order to permit Senators to go home. Let us stay here and attend to business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That ends the request for unanimous consent.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; that settles that.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the consent of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], I take the manuscript which he has recently submitted to the Senate and move that the program outlined therein be the order of procedure in the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, Mr. President, I know that can be done.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is the reason I make the motion.

Mr. THOMAS. That is what I want done. It may be that everybody will vote for the motion except myself——

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

Mr. THOMAS. But I want a roll call on it, in order that the country may know what is the action the Senate of the United States with all its business before it. The Senate has no right to waste the time of the country and of itself by now taking an adjournment when there is so much business before it. Of course, the Senate can adjourn if it wishes to; I can not help it; but I have made my protest.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move the adoption of the following order to govern the procedure of the Senate——

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I have a great deal of sympathy with the position of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. We have been away from the Senate now for about six months, a much longer vacation than we have had for many years. I have never known the fact that Congress was in session to be an insuperable objection to a Senator going home. Pairs can undoubtedly be arranged for those Senators who desire to go away, and the Senate can continue in session except for the actual holidays or a day or two preceding them.

I feel that it is the duty of the Senate, instead of adjourning at this time, so soon after we have assembled following a long vacation, to take care of some of the work that is before us. We have got into the habit during the last few weeks of doing work, and I am very much afraid that if we interrupt that habit by remaining away from the Senate it will materially interfere with our work here.

I repeat that I see no insuperable objection to a Senator going home if he wants to go, as he has been going heretofore. He can undoubtedly arrange for a pair with some Senator who feels at least that it is his duty to remain here in Washington at this time.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator recognizes the fact that never under such circumstances will there be a quorum of the Senate present, and that all business that would be done would necessarily be done by unanimous consent? The business that can be done by unanimous consent and that ought to be taken care of in that way can be attended to very quickly after we come back here.

Mr. TOWNSEND. That may be true, Mr. President, but that is scarcely a valid objection to the suggestion that we perform our duty here in the Senate or at least attempt to do so during that time.

I should like to have this matter voted on by a roll call, in order that we may determine exactly how many Senators actually feel that it is their duty to go home at this time.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it was understood that this session would be devoted almost exclusively to the consideration of appropriation bills; indeed, a proper consideration of the appropriation bills will consume the entire time of the session. The House has been working upon appropriation bills. They will not be here until after the beginning of the year, so that if we should remain in session there will be but very little if anything for the Senate to do; and, as the Senator from Arkansas has said, what little is done would be of a unanimous-consent character, and we could take up matters coming under that category after the holidays as well as before. If the appropriation bills were here, then there would be very much merit in the position of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will my friend the Senator from Michigan yield to me further?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I will.

Mr. ROBINSON. I wish to say that I have not the slightest sympathy with the suggestion that the good, old-fashioned custom which the Senate has heretofore pursued of observing appropriately the Christmas holiday season should be abandoned now in the extremity in which we find ourselves. There is not a reason in the world why a Senator who wants to act in pursuance of the old custom should put himself in the attitude of having consented that other Senators should bear the responsibility and discharge the duties of the Senate and that he should abdicate the same and take advantage of a vacation. I think the Senate ought to take an appropriate holiday, and that is the reason I have offered the order which I have presented.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, an appropriate holiday, if we want to observe the holiday season, would be to adjourn on Friday night next until a week from the following Monday. That would cover the proper holiday season. While I sympathize with the Senators who would like to go home, even though they have just come from home, yet I realize the congested condition of the legislation before the Congress to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask if there is anything personal in that allusion?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Certainly not. The Senator knows what my answer would be before he asks the question. But in reference to legislation, and to the statement that there is nothing before the Senate, and that we are going to do nothing but pass appropriation bills, that may have been a tentative understanding on the part of some, but we have already shown that we do not intend to follow that course. There are matters which have been urged upon us by the Executive which every Member of the Senate knows ought to be acted upon, and yet at the beginning of the session we propose to say that we shall take two weeks vacation.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. Will the Senator be kind enough to indicate what matters he desires to act upon within the period of the holiday season?

Mr. TOWNSEND. One of them is the bill that is now before the other House. I do not wish to make any suggestions in the face of the positive statements which have been made by some Senators, but I have just been over to the other House, and it is very doubtful whether the bill to which reference has been made and which it has been stated is coming over here to-night is going to be voted on to-night. That is a question which will have to be given consideration. There are other matters; for instance, the nitrate bill, which Senators are so anxious to get a vote upon.

Mr. THOMAS. And which is now the unfinished business.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Yes; which is now the unfinished business of the Senate. Senators have been urging that it is a matter of extreme importance and ought to receive immediate consideration. If it is true that that bill is so important—and I think it is important—I do not believe that we are going to excuse ourselves to our constituents for our failure to act upon it at the earliest possible moment, because of the fact that we want to go home and spend the holidays and lose two weeks of the time of the session. Therefore if we are going to vote on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas, at the proper time I desire to ask for a roll call, in order to place on record the action of the Senate upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, so far as I am personally concerned, I want to say that whether the Senate adjourns or whether it does not adjourn, I shall be here in Washington and shall have all that it is possible for me to do.

I think that with an adjournment there are a great many pieces of legislation that can be hastened. The Finance Committee will meet whether we are in session or whether we are not. The hearings on the measures pending before it will continue; and, so far as the Appropriations Committee is concerned, the District appropriation bill will come over, and the subcommittee having that bill in charge of course will be here and will consider that bill, and we hope that they will be ready to report when we come back.

If there were any legislation which could be hastened in any way by not taking an adjournment, even for a week, I would not want to adjourn, for I do not care now whether we adjourn or not; but there seems to me almost a universal feeling that we ought to adjourn for the holidays.

I discussed the question with a dozen or more of the Senators on both sides of the Chamber, and the legislative situation was such that all of them thought that those who really wanted to go could go, outside of the members of the Committees on Appropriations and Finance.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am quite willing to agree to an adjournment for the holidays. We expected, I supposed, to do that. Some days ago I asked the leader of the majority, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], whether the usual adjournment for the holidays would take place this year. He said that it would not; that we would probably take an adjournment on Thursday prior to the 25th and reconvene on the succeeding Monday. I expressed my satisfaction with that arrangement, and I presumed that that was what the majority intended to do. I think it is what they should do. This, however, contemplates virtually an adjournment of the Senate, certainly a suspension of all the business of the Senate, for something over two weeks, or about two weeks.

I have assumed, and I think correctly, that the nitrate bill, which is now the unfinished business, was made the unfinished business because it was of great importance, at least in the opinion of those having charge of it and pressing it for consideration. If that be so, certainly the Senate can dispose of that measure, or ought to dispose of it, at least, between now and next Thursday afternoon. Hence, it will not do to say that the Senate has no business before it that can be done; and so far as the meetings of committees are concerned, the Senator knows very well that if the adjournment now proposed for the purpose of enabling Senators to go home takes place there can be no committee meetings.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it is going to be universal that Senators will want to go home.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know why Senators, especially those living in adjoining States and at distances not too remote, should stay here if they are not going to do anything. I am inclined to think the Senator will have some difficulty, perhaps, even with his own committees. I know that the Senator from Utah will be here. He is here practically all the time. That goes without saying. But without reflecting at all upon anyone, it seems to me that those of us who stay here more constantly need less vacation than those who are not here quite so much.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], the leader of the Senate on this side, did intend that the Senate should adjourn on Thursday until Monday, as the Senator has said; but there were so many Senators who expressed themselves as desiring this adjournment that yesterday I called up Senator LODGE, who is ill at home, and asked him what he thought about the matter, and he asked me to consult some of the Senators upon this side and also upon the other side, and stated that if it was the consensus of opinion that an adjournment should be taken he had no objection to the adjournment. Of course, in offering the request, I offered it because I thought it was perfectly agreeable to Senators, and that there would be no objection to it; but I want to say that if there is any objection I do not want to have the Senate adjourn at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I simply want to ask a question. In view of the very great importance of the War Finance Corporation legislation, and there being some doubt about whether it is going to pass tonight or Monday, ought we not to postpone any action about a program until after we know when that bill is coming back? I think it would be very, very unfortunate——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. ROBINSON. In view of the suggestion which the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] has made, and in view of the further fact that I am heartily in sympathy with the final disposition of the measure to which he has referred before a recess is taken, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. SMOOT. I thank the Senator. I asked the Senator to do that before, and I think it is the wise thing to do. Then, by Monday, we can decide just what to do.

Mr. President, if nothing else is coming up to-day, and if no other Senator has any business to present, I think the Senate ought to adjourn at this time.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, the unfinished business is a matter in which the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is very vitally interested. I had intended to call up the bill this afternoon and let us begin its consideration; but in view of the fact that it is uncertain whether or not the Senator from Alabama will be back the first of the coming week, and in view of the further fact that we could hardly do much more this afternoon than have a preliminary discussion, I shall content myself with asking that it now be laid before the Senate, with a view to our taking such course as the Senate sees fit about further action on it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I inquire of the Senator from South Carolina whether it is his purpose, in the event the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is not here, to proceed with the consideration of the bill to which he just referred to its final conclusion before the holidays?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not so intend, Mr. President.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is the unfinished business now. Nothing can be accomplished by bringing the matter forward now and pressing it; and that illustrates the force of the suggestion I made a moment ago.

I do not want to be absent from the Senate when that measure is considered and disposed of. I shall abandon my intention to return to my home in the South and remain here and assist in the completion of the bill, but I have felt, and I still feel, that we ought to reach a conclusion in the matter at the very earliest possible moment. In view, however, of the fact that the body at the other end of the Capitol will not dispose of the War Finance Corporation joint resolution this evening, I am willing to wait until Monday to determine this matter finally. Then I think we ought to decide whether or not we are going to proceed with the business of the Senate; and if Senators have determined that they are going to remain here during the holidays and exhaust the rhetoric of expression in the discussion of measures and not act on them, I shall still avail myself of the privilege of taking a brief holiday season, but if important measures are to be disposed of I shall forego that pleasure and remain here.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, after consultation with several Senators who are very much interested in this legislation, I think that in view of the fact that the holidays are here and it remains the unfinished business, it should not interfere with whatever action we see fit to take about our recess, because I understand the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] would like to be present while the bill is under discussion. Therefore, until we finally decide what we are going to do about a recess, I shall not press the bill.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, December 20, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, December 18, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, our Father in heaven, for the profound truths handed down through the ages in Holy Writ; for the brave men and women who have assimilated and essayed to live them in their daily life; for our fathers who conceived, resolved, and maintained a government of the people with their life and substance, and who gave us a Constitution which has challenged the admiration of thinking men throughout the civilized world; for the brave and patriotic men who have upheld and maintained that Constitution under our national ensign through all of its vicisitudes, maintained and upheld Old Glory from its inception to the present moment; for every true American who lives for our Government and stands for its protection. In the name of liberty, truth, and justice. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

REPORT OF INVESTIGATION BY COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present the final report (H. Rept. 1133) of the investigating committee of the Committee on Indian Affairs, with certain recommendations, and ask that the same be printed.

The SPEAKER. Is it a privileged report?

Mr. SNYDER. It is a report of an investigating committee presented for printing under the rule, that is all.

Mr. GARD. If the gentleman will yield, is the report a privileged report and has to be introduced in this way?

Mr. SNYDER. This is simply for printing. I do not ask for any exceptions. The committee makes this report with certain recommendations based on the investigations we have been making for the past year.

Mr. GARRETT. The resolution directed a report, as I remember.

Mr. HASTINGS. Of course, it could be made through the basket.

Mr. SNYDER. Well, it is immaterial how it is made. I simply wanted to get it before the House and get it printed.

The SPEAKER. Did the resolution authorize the committee to report at any time?

Mr. SNYDER. It directed it to report before the end of this session.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the report will be printed.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, should not the report be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs?

Mr. SNYDER. This is a report of the Committee on Indian Affairs from that committee. After the matter had been fully considered and ready to present to the House, and by instructions of the committee, I am presenting this here now.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair this could be reported from the basket.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Could not the report be made by the Committee on Indian Affairs, ordered printed, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs? That is where the report belongs.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. GARD. Is the report made by a special committee?

Mr. SNYDER. The report is made by the whole committee. The subcommittee made the investigation, reported to the whole committee, and the chairman is now authorized to present this report from the whole committee.

Mr. GARD. This is a report of the full committee to the House?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it could be properly entered through the basket.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that indefinite leave of absence be granted to my colleague, Mr. ROUSE, on account of the serious illness of his mother.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the leave is granted. There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 13264. An act to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America;

H. R. 12887. An act establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia;

H. R. 1865. An act for the relief of the Baltimore Dry Docks & Ship Building Co., owner of a dry dock at Baltimore, Md.; and

H. R. 7900. An act for the relief of Rudolph L. Desdunes.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the unfinished business——

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on the District of Columbia appropriation bill, and the question pending is on agreeing to the amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota. The vote was taken but was not announced.

The SPEAKER. A point of order was made that no quorum was present.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 17, after line 14, insert a new paragraph as follows:
"Court of Appeals Building: For fitting up the top story and the basement of the Court of Appeals Building, including material and labor and each and every item incident to such work, $22,000, to be available immediately."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DAVIS of Minnesota, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 501 OF THE TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1920.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce to call up the bill (H. R. 14674) to amend section 501 of the transportation act of 1920, an identical Senate bill being on the Speaker's table. It is House Calendar No. 241. The Senate bill is S. 4526.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin calls up Senate bill 4526, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 4526) to amend section 501 of the transportation act, 1920.

Be it enacted, etc., That section 501 of the transportation act, 1920, be amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 501. The effective date on and after which the provisions of section 10 of the act entitled 'An act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes,' approved October 15, 1914, shall become and be effective is hereby deferred and extended to January 1, 1922: Provided, That such extension shall not apply in the case of any corporation organized after January 12, 1918."

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, section 501 of the transportation act amended section 10 of the Clayton Antitrust Act by extending the effective date to January 1, 1921. Shortly after the transportation act was passed Senator KELLOGG, of Minnesota, introduced a bill in the Senate amending section 10 of the Clayton Act and had it referred to the Interstate Commerce Commission for report. The communication was received by the commission and was referred to counsel and report made by counsel to the commission, but through inadvertence it was overlooked, possibly on account of the tremendous amount of work which was imposed upon the commission as a result of the enactment of the transportation act. The Senate committee, therefore, had no opportunity of considering the amendment to section 10 in the session which ended June 5.

It has been impossible for either the House or Senate committee to amend section 10 in the two weeks of this session which have thus far elapsed. Hence we come to Congress seeking a further extension of the effective date of section 10 of the Clayton Act to the 1st of January, 1922. I think all of those who have examined section 10 of the Clayton Act realize the necessity of amending it because of some provisions of the transportation act. There is clearly a conflict now between section 10 of the Clayton Act and the transportation act. Section 10 of the Clayton Act has to do with dealings in securities, supplies, and other products, while now the transportation act takes care of securities by giving the Interstate Commerce Commission control thereof. That is only one point which necessitates an amendment of section 10. To carry out section 10 as originally drafted would mean a large and an unnecessary expense in many particulars, imposed upon carriers, and would also work an unnecessary hardship, and besides, in the light of the transportation act being in certain respects unworkable. The committee therefore has unanimously reported the House bill, which is identical with the Senate bill, extending the effective date of section 10 of the Clayton Act to the 1st of January, 1922.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is this the clause of the bill that has to do with the purchasing agents and others?

Mr. ESCH. Where the director, stockholder, and purchasing agent are common between the carriers and the selling company or corporation.

Mr. CARAWAY. Is it the same that has been before the Judiciary Committee eight or ten times, wanting an extension?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; there have been two or more extensions.

Mr. CARAWAY. All of which means that the companies have not been able to adjust themselves to the changes?

Mr. ESCH. That was true before the transportation act was passed. Section 10 will have to be amended anyhow. The reason why the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce gets jurisdiction of this bill is because it amends a section of the transportation act.

Mr. CARAWAY. They were not able to get down to the Committee on the Judiciary, and they swapped jurisdiction with them?

Mr. ESCH. The Committee on the Judiciary has twice had it.

Mr. CARAWAY. And has twice refused.

Mr. ESCH. Our committee has jurisdiction of this. I referred it to Chairman VOLSTEAD and he had no objection to our committee taking jurisdiction of it.

Mr. WINGO. Is this the usual annual request for suspending the provision of the law with reference to the joint purchases of railroads? I do not remember the particular promise made to us a year ago, but some kind of promise was made a little different from the regular annual promise about legislation that would cure this permanently. What is going to be done about this in the way of permanent legislation? Ever since I have been a Member of Congress this has been an annual performance, and the RECORD will show that I have exacted some kind of promise that some Member of the House would bring in legislation that would cover it, once a year.

Mr. ESCH. Our committee does not want to encroach on the Committee on the Judiciary, and in offering this amendment we do not, because we amend the section of the transportation act; that is clearly within our jurisdiction. And I will say that a bill has already been introduced seeking to amend section 10, and possibly an opportunity may be given before this Congress ends to give a hearing with a view to amending the provisions of section 10.

Mr. WINGO. The only difference between the gentleman's promise now and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee heretofore is that heretofore the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has said that they have taken up the question of amending the antitrust law. This section has not been covered in the regulations of the transportation act. The gentleman in charge of that particular class of legislation in this House says that they will take it up and consider it. Why did they not cover it by permanent legislation satisfactorily when they had up the transportation act? Why continue to act under suspension? We all know that that is what is being done.

Mr. ESCH. I do not think that the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce should be chargeable with any laches in the amendment of section 10 of the Clayton Act. It was not presented in the transportation act in the Senate or House. We did not feel as conferees that we had an opportunity to go into amending section 10 of the Clayton Act.

Mr. WINGO. Do you mean to say that they made no suggestion that would cover this, which, as every man knows, is a serious proposition on the bill?

Mr. ESCH. They did after the conferees had been appointed, and they filed briefs, but we had so many other problems in connection with transportation that we felt we could not go into section 10 and do it justice.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ESCH. I yield.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman say he has taken this matter up with the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. ESCH. I saw the chairman in reference to this bill, and he was willing to relinquish jurisdiction, and he told me to go ahead.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

On motion of Mr. ESCH, the bill H. R. 14674, identical with the Senate bill, was ordered to lie on the table.

CODIFICATION OF THE LAWS.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, in September, 1919, the Committee on Revision of the Laws presented to the House the record of the hearings on the bill to establish a Code of the Laws of the United States, including letters from many United States attorneys and United States judges, urging the necessity for such a code, some of which were repeated in the report made by the committee to the House last March. There were letters from 56 Federal attorneys, district judges, and judges of the circuit court of appeals establishing the fact that such code is absolutely essential. Since then many other friendly letters have reached the committee, and I present this morning two from justices of the Supreme Court of the United States which will interest the House:

MAY 14, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE, M. C.,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have received the calendar print of the Laws of the United States and thank you very much for the same. The amount of research and industry which you exhibit in your bill is wonderful.

Respectfully, yours,

JOSEPH MCKENNA.

MAY 10, 1920.

Hon. EDWARD C. LITTLE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have your favor of the 29th ultimo, and have just received a copy of your bill for the revision of the statutes of the United States. So far as opportunity has offered I have examined it, and it seems to me that the work is well and thoroughly done. Thanking you for the favor, I am,

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM R. DAY.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the letters referred to.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LITTLE. Your attention is requested to the following letters:

REPLIES FROM UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

MOBILE, ALA.

I unhesitatingly say that there is no book, or set of books, more needed in the Federal practice than a publication of the Federal statutes, compiled and revised.

ALEXANDER D. PITTS.

BURLINGTON, VT.

There is no question but what such a revision of the statutes of the United States is absolutely necessary.

VERNON A. BULLARD.

SAN ANTONIO, TEX.

I am glad to have the opportunity of saying with all the emphasis possible that I do not know of anything that would be more useful and helpful to the Federal judges, district attorneys, practitioners in the Federal courts, and citizens generally than a careful and authoritative compilation and revision of the acts of Congress.

HUGH R. ROBERTSON.

KNOXVILLE, TENN.

It affords me much pleasure to reply and to assure you that this is practically an absolute necessity, both for the use of Government officials and practitioners generally. As you know, the last compilation of the Revised Statutes was about 1878, and since that time more general legislation has been enacted by Congress than during the preceding 100 years. Therefore the Revised Statutes are practically useless to Government officials.

WESLEY T. KENNERLY.

PORTLAND, OREG.

I feel that a compiled and revised publication of the Federal statutes is a necessity. It certainly would be very useful to any practitioner of law who has occasion to practice in the Federal courts, particularly with reference to criminal matters.

BERT E. HANEY.

PETERSBURG, VA.

I can not now recall any law book of which there would be a more extensive use than the statutes of the United States officially brought down to date. In my experience as United States attorney for nearly five years I have been at times greatly embarrassed through the inability to find promptly the Federal statutes bearing upon particular subjects; and notwithstanding the fact that there are now certain publications claiming to cover the field of the Federal statute laws, I do not think that any of them will take the place of the official revision to which you refer.

RICHARD H. MANN.

FORT WORTH, TEX.

In my opinion there is a very great necessity for the careful, compact revision of the Federal statutes. I feel certain that such revision would be of great service to the bar, bench, and litigants.

W. M. ODELL.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

I think it of great importance that the Federal statutes be codified. It is almost impossible now to find the statutes, and a lawyer feels uncertain about the existence or nonexistence of Federal statutes because the indexes are so voluminous, and unless you get the right key to the indexes there is great likelihood of overlooking important statutes.

WILLIAM D. KYSER.

SEATTLE, WASH.

I am particularly convinced of the necessity and importance of an authorized and authentic compilation and revision which proves itself. I have found in the compiled statutes—a convenient but unauthorized compilation—manifest errors whereby certain penalties appeared to be attached to certain acts, when in fact entirely different penalties were by the original act of Congress attached to the commission of those acts.

ROBERT C. SAUNDERS.

FARGO, N. DAK.

We certainly do need a revision of the Federal statutes. I am glad that this work is going to be done. It is woefully needed.

MELVIN A. HILLDRETH.

MARTINSBURG, W. VA.

I have thought for a long time that there should be a revised publication of the Federal statutes. * * * This need has been apparent for many years. * * * The fact is, as the laws are now compiled it is often very difficult to find a statute, and then sometimes it is hard to determine whether it is in existence, whether it has been repealed or amended, and such information requires great research through the different volumes of compiled statutes and Statutes at Large.

STUART W. WALKER.

MONTGOMERY, ALA.

I certainly do think a revised publication of the Federal statutes compiled and revised in two books, so that a man could find easily and rely upon the information, is almost an absolute necessity at this time.

THOMAS D. SANFORD.

CLARKSDALE, MISS.

I consider it highly necessary and extremely useful that there be a revised publication of the Federal statutes. * * * The trouble now is finding the law, and the chances are that when one finds the statutes it will take quite a little time to determine whether or not the statutes have been amended or repealed.

W. S. HILL.

JUNEAU, ALASKA.

The statutes since 1878 are so scattered through various volumes that it makes it almost impossible to know what is the law on any given subject, and certainly there should be a revision.

JAMES A. SMISER.

MILWAUKEE, WIS.

A revision and codification of Federal statutes is seriously needed by both bench and bar. Under present conditions it is many times difficult to find the particular statute wanted and oftentimes very difficult to satisfy oneself that he has found all the statutes applicable to or bearing on the matter or subject involved.

H. A. SAWYER.

KANSAS CITY, KANS.

My idea about the matter is that there should be another complete revision, carefully prepared and annotated, in either one or two volumes. The indexing would be a very important part of a work of this character.

FRED ROBERTSON.

MUSKOGEE, OKLA.

In my opinion the Revised Statutes of the United States ought to be revised and codified. The present Revised Statutes stand as they did in 1878. It occurs to me that possibly 50 per cent of the sections of law in that revision have either been repealed, held unconstitutional, or amended in some form. It certainly can no longer be relied upon as stating the law now in force on a given subject.

W. P. MCGINNIS.

VALDEZ, ALASKA.

Such publication is surely desirable and almost a necessity at this time. A new publication embracing all the statutes up to date is particularly desirable at the present time, in view of the large number of statutes on very important subjects enacted during the last several years.

WILLIAM A. MUNLY.

NASHVILLE, TENN.

I am in favor of a revised publication of the Federal statutes in one book if possible, or two books if the compilation can not be made in one book.

LEE DOUGLAS.

FLORIDA.

From my experience in examining the statutes, it seems to me that such a compilation and revision, with especial attention given to the indexing of the same, would be of great value to the bench and the bar. Very often Congress embodies a criminal provision in an appropriation act, thereby making the same difficult to find. In my opinion such a compilation and revision would be of special value with reference to the laws defining and punishing crime.

H. S. PHILLIPS.

WILMINGTON, DEL.

In my opinion a revised publication of Federal statutes would be most useful and helpful to bar and bench and litigants, and I think it would be most expedient from the standpoint of the Government.

CHARLES F. CURLEY.

DETROIT, MICH.

If they could all be revised and compiled into two or three volumes, which would authentically bring down in those volumes all of the general laws of the United States in force, it would be a very great aid to this office and to the legal profession generally.

JOHN E. KINNANE.

SAN JUAN, P. R.

In my experience as United States attorney I have been impressed with the importance of a revision and republication of Federal statutes up to date in a form that could be easily handled. Such a publication as you refer to I believe would be most helpful to the bar and bench and to the litigant.

MILES M. MARTIN.

LOUISVILLE, KY.

A bill to codify and revise all the general and permanent laws of the United States in force on March 4, 1919, is one of great importance as well as magnitude.

WALTER EVANS.

FROM UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES.

FLORIDA.

I know of no matter requiring more immediate attention than providing the bench and bar with an official revision of the Federal statutes. It is almost impossible to arrive with certainty at just what the statutory law of the United States now is. I sincerely hope that your committee will see that this revision is made by the present Congress.

R. M. CALL.

NEW YORK STATE.

In my opinion an official revision and publication of the Federal statutes is an urgent and pressing necessity. The bench and the bar would be greatly aided by such a publication and such a revision. If this is properly done hundreds of thousands of dollars will be saved to litigants and the judges will be relieved of much worry and anxiety incident to the decision of cases. Such a revision, consolidation, and compilation will be of great assistance to the lawyers.

GEORGE W. RAY.

PORTLAND, OREG.

It has long been obvious that there is a great and urgent necessity for an official publication of the compiled and revised Federal statutes. A new revision would serve to clear up much confusion that the statutes have fallen into by reason of many amendments and subsequent conflicting legislation.

CHARLES E. WOLVERTON.

NEW YORK CITY.

At present it is impossible to get an adequate understanding from official publications of the questions that are pending upon Federal statutory law without an enormous amount of examination of independent statutes.

LEARNED HAND.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.

There can be no question as to both the advisability and the desirability of a revision and compilation of the statutes of the United States.

LEWIS FITZ HENRY.

BALTIMORE, MD.

I am greatly of the opinion that a new collection of Revised Statutes is sadly needed.

JOHN M. ROSE.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

You ask my opinion of the value and necessity of a compilation and revision of the Federal statutes. I am unhesitatingly and strongly in favor of such work. The revision of 1878 is, of course, now very old and incomplete, and by reason of the amendments from time to time of many sections as therein revised, does not present a safe reliance for those called upon to make use of it. A new revision, therefore, of the statutes down to the present date would undoubtedly be of the greatest value to bench and bar alike, and indeed I may say that so far as the judges are concerned we find a growing need for it. I think you will find no division of sentiment on the subject with the bench and bar, and I would be greatly pleased to learn that there is a disposition on the part of your committee to have such a revision made.

WILLIAM C. VAN FLEET.

CRESCO, IOWA.

I have no hesitancy in saying that in my judgment a new or revised edition of the statutes of the United States to and including the acts of the present Congress is not only advisable but almost a necessity to enable the courts and bar to readily ascertain the existing public laws of the United States. The difficulty and burden of ascertaining the present status of the laws of Congress is very apparent. The important thing I wish to urge is the necessity of a new revision of the statute law of the United States at the earliest possible date.

HENRY T. REED.

MADISON, WIS.

A one-volume edition of the Federal statutes which would have general application would be exceedingly useful, and I hope such a volume may be brought out under the direction of the revision committee.

A. L. SANBORN.

CHARLESTON, S. C.

An officially compiled publication of the Federal statutes, revised so as to include all changes and additions to date, would be exceedingly valuable.

HENRY A. M. SMITH.

MOBILE, ALA.

In my opinion there has been for a long time a necessity for a revised copy of the Federal statutes. It is quite a burden to look up what is needed from such statutes. I am certainly glad to see a prospect of an early revision.

ROBERT T. ERVIN.

HARTFORD, CONN.

It would seem to me that there is great necessity for an official publication of a revised and compiled copy of the Federal statutes.

EDWIN S. THOMAS.

PROVIDENCE, R. I.

It would seem necessary that there should be some verification by public authority of the accuracy of private print.

ARTHUR BROWNE.

GUTHRIE, OKLA.

I am decidedly of the view that the Federal laws should be compiled and published in compact form. A compilation in one volume would be of undoubted value and convenience in referring readily to existing statutes.

JOHN H. COTTERAL.

COLUMBUS, OHIO.

It would be of great advantage to both the bench and the bar if there could be brought together in a single volume a compact, systematic, well-indexed issue of the Revised Statutes of the United States. There is a real need of such consolidation. I often have considerable difficulty in tracing the law through the Statutes at Large * * * and I find that attorneys of large experience and extensive practice in the Federal courts have difficulty in locating specific acts of Congress. A set of statutes, well indexed, will greatly facilitate the work of anyone interested in any wise in the Federal laws.

JOHN E. SATER.

CHICAGO, ILL.

A publication of revised and compiled Federal statutes—with references to judicial holdings—would be of very great use to the bench and bar and—considering that the citizen is conclusively presumed to know the law—the publication should be official rather than a thing gotten up by private enterprise.

KENESAW LANDIS.

SIOUX FALLS, S. DAK.

It has been so long since the compilation and revision of the United States Statutes that they are practically valueless. Such a publication as you suggest is, in my judgment, very desirable.

JAMES D. ELLIOT.

PITTSBURGH, PA.

I believe that such a consolidation would be exceedingly valuable to the bench and bar.

CHARLES P. ORR.

NEW ORLEANS, LA.

I think such a work is highly desirable. Notwithstanding very excellent compilations by private parties, whenever I want to know what the law is I go to the original sources. The committee that did the work on the judicial code produced a splendid law book.

RUFUS G. FOSTER.

MEMPHIS, TENN.

Undoubtedly such work would be of great assistance to the bench and bar and I think would be most useful.

JOHN E. MCCALL.

DENVER, COLO.

I think it is quite necessary from time to time that the Federal statutes be compiled embodying, of course, only the acts of general importance.

ROBERT E. LEWIS.

IOWA CITY, IOWA.

I feel that it would be a good thing to have the Revised Statutes compiled as suggested.

MARTIN G. WADE.

SHREVEPORT, LA.

I think a work such as you contemplate would be of much value, but it appears to me what is more needed is that the original Revised Statutes be brought down to date; in other words, that the Statutes at Large since the Revised Statutes be revised and be made easy for reference.

GEORGE WHITFIELD JACK.

CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

NORTH CAROLINA CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

In view of the confusion existing owing to the present condition of the statutes it is absolutely essential that this work be done at an early date. I think it should be done by all means.

J. C. PRITCHARD.

CHICAGO UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

I think such a publication both desirable and necessary.

EVAN A. EVANS.

NORTH CAROLINA CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

I earnestly support the proposition for the revision of the Federal statutes.

C. A. WOODS.

ALABAMA CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

It does not seem to me to be open to question that such a revision is to be desired. * * * Not infrequently the task of ascertaining what is the existing Federal statute law is a difficult one.

R. E. WALKER.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS, FOURTH JUDICIAL DISTRICT.

Such publication would be of great value to the judges and lawyers of the United States. I trust that the proposed revision will be undertaken by your committee.

MARTIN A. KNAPP.

NEW YORK CITY UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

There could and should be published now a work containing in appropriate chapter headings the general laws in force arranged by sections as in the Revised Statutes with references to the Statutes at Large for origin. An official general statute book containing the existing law is much needed.

C. M. HOUGH.

NEW YORK CITY UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

I think a revised edition of the Federal statutes would be very useful to the bench and bar.

H. G. WARD.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS OF MICHIGAN.

A complete revision after the style of the old Revised Statutes and after the model for the Revised Judicial Code would be a fine thing.

A. C. DENISON.

CHICAGO UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT OF APPEALS.

If the proposed official revision extend beyond compilation and rearrangement and would proceed at least to the extent of harmonizing apparent contradictions, omitting repetitions, the redrafting of some laws to comply with judicial construction thereof—in fact, the revision of things substantive as well as those which concern only arrangement and form—I believe it is a task, though huge, it would be well to undertake. Sooner or later this must be done.

SAMUEL ALSCHULER.

When the Revised Statutes were prepared the Federal laws were scattered through only 17 volumes of the Statutes at Large. Now they are to be found in 36 such volumes, public and private, of which the Revised Statutes is one—the first. If such an accomplishment was necessary then, and difficult then, how necessary and how difficult it must be now, when we have more than twice the amount of enacted law in existence.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I would like to know, if you are going to try that process, whether there are any changes in the law or not?

Mr. LITTLE. Our purpose has been to make simply a codification without any changes in the law. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] and I addressed the House yesterday——

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I know that——

Mr. LITTLE. And we assured the House that we felt satisfied that there are not any changes. We have given it the very greatest attention. The RECORD of this morning contains the remarks of the gentleman from Virginia and myself, giving the history of the work, and I think that will answer the gentleman's question. We have good reason to say that more care was taken than then, even.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. I would like to ask the gentleman if he can give the House any information as to the probability of getting consideration of the measure which his committee has prepared?

Mr. LITTLE. I hope at an early date, perhaps on Monday, suspension day, to move a suspension of the rules and ask the House to take up the bill and pass it.

Mr. GARRETT. Without reading?

Mr. LITTLE. Without reading except by title, as was practically done at the other time, in 1874, the only time such a bill has been before the House. In this morning's RECORD I inserted extracts from the RECORD of 1874, showing just what they did.

Mr. HASTINGS. The gentleman means next Wednesday?

Mr. LITTLE. No; next Monday.

Mr. HASTINGS. This coming Monday?

Mr. LITTLE. Yes; the committee is unanimous in the favorable report. It would take two months of the time of the House to read this bill—all of its time—even if there were no interruption.

I have in my hand here a copy of the first laws of the United States, published in New York in 1789, at the end of the first session of the First Congress. If the reading clerk will hold up a copy of this bill while I hold up in my hand this copy of the first laws, the Members can see the difference in size. The House will see by that means the growth and development of our laws.

There is on the flyleaf of this book the name of "G. Washington," written with his own hand. This I take to be one of the choicest relics in the Library. So far as I can judge, this is the first copy issued from the press of the publication of the first laws of the United States, and naturally it went to the Father of the Republic, who was so much interested in it. I thought the House would be glad to see this little relic when they are invited again to look into the features of the bill to enact the code.

They had a book containing all the laws. We have no such publication by our Government.

On September 26, 1919, the learned Judge Charles M. Hough, of the United States Circuit Court of Appeals in New York City, addressed the committee. He said:

"Mr. Chairman, I may be pardoned for closing with the fable that I learned as preparatory to the same institution of learning at which your fellow Member, Mr. BURROUGHS, and myself gained our degrees. You will remember the tale of the cruel tyrant who affixed the terrible penalties to his laws and then put the written laws on top of high columns so that nobody could read them and punished infractions of them as severely as if each citizen had read them. I submit, gentlemen of the committee, that for 40 years the United States, in a modern sense, has been pursuing the same course. While the laws of the United States are not put on top of high columns they might just as well be, for the purpose of practitioners—the largest number of practitioners, too—who conduct their offices and get their clients and do their business at some distance from a city containing any extensive law library. For them the laws of The Laws of the United States might just as well be buried. Is it not time to resurrect them?"

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a report from the Committee on Rules.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LUCE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Massachusetts rise?

Mr. LUCE. I rise to a question of constitutional privilege. I request that the Clerk read the first section of Senate joint resolution 212.

The SPEAKER. Is the question of privilege based on that?

Mr. LUCE. The question of privilege is based on this section.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the Senate joint resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation are hereby directed to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this measure, I will suggest the absence of a quorum. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman, of course, has that right. It is a matter that should be, I suppose, directed to the attention of the Chair. The gentleman from Pennsylvania makes the point that there is no quorum present. [After counting.] Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Crowther	Gallivan	Holland
Anthony	Cullen	Gandy	Hull, Iowa
Babka	Currie, Mich.	Ganly	Hutchinson
Baer	Darrow	Godwin, N. C.	Igoe
Benson	Davey	Goldfogle	Ireland

Maher	Perlman	Sanders, Ind.	Williams
Mason	Pou	Sanders, La.	Wise
Mead	Radcliffe	Sanford	Zihlman
Mooney	Rainey, Ala.	Scully
Morin	Ransley	Shreve

The SPEAKER. On this roll call 306 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming moves to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no question of privilege properly raised at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has not stated his question yet. The Chair thinks the gentleman has a right to state it.

Mr. DOWELL. I merely desire to raise the question of order that the resolution just read is not the basis for the privilege suggested by the gentleman from Massachusetts, and can not be made so under the rules of the House; and, therefore——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not heard the gentleman from Massachusetts state his question yet. The Chair can hardly rule that it is not in order when the Chair does not know what it is.

Mr. DOWELL. I want to raise the question at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman shall have his opportunity. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there are gentlemen present who did not hear the reading of the section in question by the Clerk, I trust I may be permitted to repeat it in order that the point that I shall raise may be understood.

This section says:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation are hereby directed to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I raise the point of order that there is no constitutional privilege giving the right of filibuster in the House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know that this is a filibuster.

Mr. BLANTON. This has been read once to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. DOWELL. I desire to raise another question of order, that the resolution is not properly before the House, and that this question can not be raised at this time, if there is a constitutional question here at all, until it is properly before the House. I raise that point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no idea yet what the point is that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is raising. The Chair thinks he ought to hear it before he passes upon it.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts can not possibly raise the question of privilege that he has attempted to state. The gentleman stated that he rose to a question of "constitutional" privilege. There is no such proposition. There are just two questions of privilege, one a question of the "privilege of the whole House" and the other a question of "personal privilege." Either one of them might be founded upon a constitutional provision or restriction, but the gentleman ought to raise a question either of the "privilege of the whole House" or of "personal privilege."

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that it was a question of "privilege of the whole House."

Mr. BLANTON. No; he said "constitutional privilege."

Mr. LUCE. It was my intention to raise a question of the privilege of the whole House. If I may be permitted to state the question of privilege, I will say that it is based upon the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution, which says that—

All bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives.

And at the proper time I propose to give effect to the privileges of the House by the same procedure as that formerly followed, namely, the presentation of a resolution modeled in the language of one presented by Mr. Sereno E. Payne when chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, as follows:

Resolved, That the first section of Senate joint resolution 212 in the opinion of this House contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States and is an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said resolution be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. I will not undertake to base it upon the question that this is not the proper time to raise the gentleman's point of order, even if it were sound. The point of order is that section 1 of this joint resolution does not propose to raise revenues. It does not say so. It will be contended by its opponents that it is a joint resolution to drain revenues from the Treasury instead of raising revenues. It is a bill to rehabilitate an agency of the Government that now exists under law by requiring the executive officers to make it function as provided by law. That has nothing to do with raising revenue.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. It is apparent now, from the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], that the question is not in order at this time. This resolution is not before the House. It has not been properly brought before the House, and therefore the gentleman is entirely out of order in attempting to raise this question in this way.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, may I be heard on the point of order?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say to the gentleman from Iowa that the resolution has been passed by the Senate.

Mr. DOWELL. The fact that the resolution has been passed by the Senate does not permit a Member to raise at any time a question of privilege. If the House takes it up, it is before the House, but it has not been brought before the House at this time. I raise that question.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts has not presented a question of privilege, constitutional or otherwise, so that that may be before the Chair.

Mr. WINGO. That is the point of order I made.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman made the point of order that it did not raise revenue.

Mr. WINGO. I also made the point of order that the gentleman had not stated a question of privilege, and then I gave as a reason that it did not propose to raise revenue.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will take one point at a time.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the position of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but he has not had an opportunity to state what he is trying to get at. If these gentlemen will let him alone, he will state his point.

Mr. LUCE. If I am to address myself to the point of order I may remind the Speaker of that with which he is already familiar, namely, that similar questions of privilege have been repeatedly raised in this House. I have before me the volume of Hinds' Precedents containing several pages describing similar questions of privilege and detailing discussion thereon. I have before me the debates of the Twenty-fifth Congress, first session, containing the record of an episode in the year 1837, where precisely the same matter was brought to the attention of the House. It has always been open to discussion as a matter of high privilege. I can not understand how, in view of the unbroken record of precedents, this can be doubted. A Member has a right to lay before the House at the proper time the reasons why proposed legislation may not be properly considered by this body. If the Chair desires, I will give him the references to repeated instances in which precisely this thing has been done, and as far as I know at the same time in the course of procedure at which I am trying to do it, and under absolutely similar circumstances.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman should present the question in the resolution that he read. The Chair thinks the resolution should be pending.

Mr. LUCE. Then, Mr. Speaker, I offer the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Let the resolution be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the first section of Senate joint resolution 212, in the opinion of this House, contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States and is an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said resolution be respectfully returned to the Senate with the message communicating this resolution.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the resolution is not in order, and I ask for the regular order to reinforce that point of order.

Mr. LUCE. On the point of order I will call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the second volume of Hinds' Precedents, paragraph 1491, where the matter arose on a point raised by William H. Calkins, of Indiana, to the effect that a resolution of like nature to this was not in order, either to be offered or considered, until the bill to which it referred was brought before the House for consideration. After debate the Speaker said:

The resolution offered by the gentleman from Georgia is offered by him for the purpose of raising the question of constitutional privilege, a question involving the constitutional prerogatives of the House in the formation of revenue bills. And in practice this has always been held to be a matter of high privilege. The only question raised now by the point of order of the gentleman from Indiana is as to the matter of time of raising the question, and it is suggested that the bill is not before the House for consideration, and hence that it is too soon to make the point of order raised by the gentleman from Georgia. In argument it is said that the House does not know officially what the bill contains for the purpose of determining the question.

The Chair does not take that view of the matter at all. The bill has been returned to the House by the official direction of the Senate. It goes, under the rules of the House, it is true, to the Speaker's table, but the House has taken notice of it there, has ordered it to be printed, and it is before the House for its action. It is sufficient to say that if the matter was under consideration once in the House, under the rules, in the opinion of the Chair, it would then be too late to raise this question of constitutional privilege against it, so that the House must look to the bill to determine that question before it proceeds to consider it at all.

The House must look to the bill. This is the first reasonable opportunity that the House has had to look to the bill.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Was not that a case where the bill had passed the House and gone to the Senate, and then was afterwards returned to the House?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. This resolution has never been before the House for consideration.

Mr. LUCE. It has never been before the House and therefore the time to raise the point is now.

Mr. DOWELL. How is the resolution before the House at this time?

Mr. LUCE. Because it has been reported to the House by the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. DOWELL. But it is not before the House for consideration.

Mr. LUCE. Speaker Keifer ruled that the point must be raised before the bill is up for consideration by the House.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will pardon me, I tried to hear the reading of the resolution. Was not the ruling based on the point that it had consideration by the House?

Mr. LUCE. On the contrary, the point was raised that it had not been considered by the House, and that when it was up for consideration the point could not be raised.

Mr. LONGWORTH. But in that case the bill had been considered by the House. It had passed the House.

Mr. LUCE. Yes; but the objectionable clause was inserted by the Senate and had never been considered in the House. The Speaker ruled that after it had once been taken up by the House it would be too late to raise the question of privilege.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. If the gentleman will pardon me, I made the point of order against the resolution that it is not in order on the special ground that it does not present any constitutional question or question of privilege. Personally I have no doubt whatever that if it does present such a question, this is the proper time to press the resolution. It certainly could not be presented after a rule was adopted to consider it.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I shall, then, address myself to the question involved in the point of order, as to whether this does involve the constitutional privilege of the House. Gentlemen will recall the phraseology of the Constitution in this particular which I have just read, that revenue bills must originate in the House. The point immediately arises, whether this is or is not within the scope of the term "revenue bills." The matter is old. Many men far abler than myself have presented arguments for and against the proposal during nearly a century of controversy. I can not hope to add anything new to what they have said, but perhaps there are gentlemen here who are not familiar with the main argument involved, and, therefore, for their help in considering the resolution, permit me briefly to rehearse the origin and purpose of this constitutional phrase.

In the earliest days the Lords and the Commons, after listening to the demand of the King for money, answered his appeal separately, without consultation between each other. In the course of time, nobody knows just when, the Commons began asserting theirs to be the right of way, claiming that they should have the preference in making answer to the King. In the seventeenth century the general subject became of the most extreme constitutional importance, because controversy over it played a large part in leading to those troubles in England which cost Charles I his head. After the Commonwealth the matter came again in issue. Controversies between the House of Commons and the House of Lords were frequent through many years, finally resulting in the establishment of the belief now unquestioned that the representatives of the people have the right to determine money matters first.

Our forefathers brought here an intimate knowledge of these controversies at Westminster. Very early, within two or three years after its establishment, the House of Burgesses in Virginia forbade the governor to levy taxes without its consent, and in 1666 it insisted on its prerogative in framing money bills, resenting any share therein by members of the council. In the Province out of which my own State of Massachusetts came, the prerogative of the house was a question of bitter controversy between the general court and the governor's council for half a century. The house asserted its right to originate not only revenue bills, taxation bills, but also appropriation bills, and even to audit the expenditure of money by the executive. In the first constitution framed by an American State, that of New Hampshire, there was asserted the specific declaration that the house should originate bills for raising money. This doctrine was followed by four of the other States, and then in turn was put into the Federal Constitution. In the convention for the framing of the Constitution it again became the center of most important controversy, and the compromise on this point was one of the great concessions that made our Constitution possible.

After the Union had been formed the matter came in issue in Congress. By 1837 the situation had reached such a point that John Quincy Adams, in discussing a contention precisely similar to the one I now raise, said that in his opinion the matter admitted of no question at all, and I may anticipate the normal course of my argument by pointing out that the question was then a matter of the issue of Treasury notes—not a matter of appropriation, not a matter of taxation, but a matter of the issue of Treasury notes. This eminent statesman who had been President of the United States and was perhaps as well qualified as any man who has lived under this Constitution to pass judgment, said that in his opinion the matter admitted of no question at all. If ever there was a money bill, this was one. Then he made this significant statement:

This House had too long suffered the other branch of the legislature to dictate to it every measure relating to revenue. For the last five years not one of all the measures of that character had originated in that House.

For five years prior to 1837, on the authority of Mr. Adams, not one measure imposing revenue or concerning revenue had originated in the House, and he said there could be no question that a bill relating to Treasury notes is a matter of revenue. This will be the nub of the present controversy, but before reaching it permit me to call attention to the numerous times in which the House afterwards saw fit to consider this interference with its constitutional prerogatives on the part of the other branch.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. By reason of the fact that the gentleman had been forced to briefly state his case, I am unable to catch his line of argument, and I would suggest that he should be permitted to argue the question in his own way and to such an extent that we can understand the relevancy of his position.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is overruled, and the gentleman from Massachusetts will continue.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I regret that there are gentlemen in the House whose monopoly of its time during many sittings has led them to think that they alone control its interests. [Laughter and applause.] As I said, the nub of this controversy is the question of whether there is or is not involved here a matter of raising the revenue. In support of my contention that it does come within the scope of the revenue, I must call the attention of the Speaker to the laws involved, which are those of the Sixty-fifth Congress relating to financing the war. First, Mr. Speaker, the less important point. By the amendment approved March 3, 1919, it was provided as to the War Finance Corporation—that any balance remaining after the payment of all its debts shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts, and thereupon the corporation shall be dissolved.

In other words, the profit of this corporation was to accrue to the benefit of the United States and was, therefore, to be revenue. That this is not an immaterial point may be substantiated by observing in the annual report of the corporation that its earnings in two years amounted to $36,982,739.80, certainly not an insubstantial amount of revenue. Thirty-six millions may now seem a bagatelle, but $36,000,000 prior to the war was esteemed as not unimportant.

Last week there was a gathering in Chicago for the purpose of organizing a private corporation with a capital of $100,000,000, with the possibility of extending its loans to $1,000,000,000, exactly the same limit that would be provided by this resolution. This meeting was called by the president of the American Bankers' Association for the purpose of engaging in precisely the same business that is here contemplated.

These men are going into the business, of course, partly for profit—doubtless partly from motives of patriotism, but partly for profit. In this Chamber to-day gentlemen are anxious to hurry the United States into exactly the same business with exactly the same limitation of loans, in complete and absolute competition with private capital.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order the gentleman is not discussing the point of order but arguing the merits or demerits of the resolution.

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman will permit, I will draw the conclusion bearing precisely on the contention I am trying to establish, which is that this resolution contemplates the making of profits and therefore a revenue to the United States.

Mr. TINCHER. Well, the argument that the resolution ought not to be adopted because some people out in Chicago are organizing a corporation I do not think has much to do with this.

The SPEAKER. It seems to the Chair the gentleman is directly directing his argument as to whether this is a revenue measure or not. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, the United States can not engage in the banking business in competition with a coequal and cotemporary private institution without either making as much or more profit by keeping its rates for loans at the same level with those of the private corporation or else making less profit by cutting under the rates of a private corporation. Is it to be conceived that the Government of the United States, engaging in competition with a private corporation having precisely the same limits, will cut its rates below that of a private corporation, so as to prevent the private corporation from functioning?

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. DOWELL. The gentleman now is discussing the question of policy and not the question of order before the House. The gentleman is now discussing the bill as to its effect.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. DOWELL. That is a question that could be answered, I think, but it seems to me that the whole argument here is one of the policy of adopting the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the gentleman is claiming that this is a revenue bill, and therefore subject to a point of order, and is now arguing to show it is a revenue bill.

Mr. DOWELL. The point I was raising is this question: I was asking the gentleman if it was not now a question of policy as to whether the Government should enter into this business. That is the question he is discussing, which, in my opinion, is not germane.

Mr. LUCE. If the House should finally consider this resolution it would be proper to express myself on the point the gentleman has made. What I am now pointing out is that it is inconceivable that this corporation, the War Finance Corporation, will not function for the purpose of making money.

Mr. JONES of Texas and Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas rose.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If this were an original proposition in the House, and if the question had originally come from the Senate, which it did not, as I understand the War Finance Corporation originated in the House and the law that proposes to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to continue its action is now the law, having originated in the House it might present a different question. It is true that the Senate passed the resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury to revive the activities that he suspended last May under this law, but does not the gentleman from Massachusetts recognize the distinction between a revival of action under a law and the enactment of a law?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman anticipates a matter that might be discussed later, but inasmuch as he has forced upon me a discussion of this situation which I myself would have thought more properly might be taken up at another stage, I presume I am warranted in answering him. The gentleman raises a question of the deepest interest as to whether the proposed resolution is or is not a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury and War Finance Corporation Board. I may say that a distinguished gentleman, speaking in another Chamber in this city, which the rules of parliamentary law forbid me to discuss or to designate under a more specific term, said that this was nothing more than an expression of opinion. On the other hand, the members of my committee who in the majority have voted to report this bill believe that it is a law; that it is an order; that it is a direction; that it is not an expression. Now, if the distinguished gentleman in another Chamber, to whom I have referred, is right in saying that this resolution is nothing but an expression of opinion, then discussion of it would be nothing but a waste of time; but I must here assume that the resolution is meant to have the force of law to be an order, a direction. However great may be the impropriety of the procedure, however it may intrench upon constitutional prerogatives, what infringement it may be upon constitutional privileges, I must assume, nevertheless, that in the face of precedent, in the face of tradition, in the face of a reasonable construction of the Constitution, the Congress does by this resolution intend to order the War Finance Corporation to function.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Is it not true any revenue that may be derived from the operation of this resolution is merely an incident to the resolution? There may be a loss or a gain, but the purpose of the resolution is not to raise revenue, and the fact that it might be an incident is not of such consequence as to state that the purpose of the resolution was the raising of revenue.

Mr. LUCE. I really dislike to weary the House with a repetition of the thousand arguments that have been made upon that particular point. It is for the House to decide whether this is merely incidental, whether a profit of $36,000,000 accruing to the taxpayers of the country is incidental or not. This bill contemplates the loaning of $1,000,000,000 at a profit. If the gentleman asserts that profit here is incidental, may I not point out to him that nevertheless it must be more than an incidental purpose of the gentlemen who have been meeting in Chicago in order to proceed along similar lines, assuming they are not driven out of business by the Congress of the United States. Certainly their profit will not be incidental. Therefore, I may assume, perchance, that the profit of the Government will not be merely incidental.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I appreciate the points of the gentleman's statement. However, the gentleman will recognize that the purpose for which the law was framed was not for the making of this profit, but for the carrying on of a certain line of business. Now, there may be a profit, there may be a loss, but the purpose is to carry on and finance a certain business, and it has not for its primary purpose the raising of revenue.

Mr. LONGWORTH. While I greatly doubt whether this particular resolution is for the purpose of raising revenue, the question of the gentleman from Texas does not apply. Frequently the House passes a bill for preventing any revenue, notably the passage of the prohibitory tax on white phosphorous matches, the object of which was to prevent revenue. That is a revenue bill. It makes no difference whether it raises revenue or discourages it.

Mr. TINCHER. There is a special provision that all revenue laws must originate in the House of Representatives. Does the gentleman contend there is any inhibition in the statute upon the other lawmaking body or anyone else, by a joint resolution or otherwise, that the law, having originated in the House of Representatives and passed upon by both Houses of Congress and signed by the President and become a law, should not be enforced? Is there anything in the Constitution to prevent any other lawmaking body passing a resolution asking for the enforcement of any law, provided it is clearly on the statute books?

Mr. LUCE. The resolution can be of avail only if it actually amends the law to which the gentleman has referred. In the language used by the Secretary of the Treasury in the hearings of the committee, and accepted, apparently, by the committee, this resolution contemplates substituting the will of Congress for the will of an executive official.

The law in question permits a certain exercise of discretion. This was definitely brought out in the gentleman's presence. It was definitely brought out as contemplating an amendment of existing law by substituting the will of Congress for the will of the Executive, and by putting an end to the exercise of discretion, and it therefore comes clearly within the province of this House in the matter of the assertion of its constitutional rights, if my contention as a whole is sound at all.

Mr. TINCHER. Do I understand the gentleman contends that this resolution amends the War Finance Corporation act? Is it an amendment to that act?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I insist on the point of order that this discussion, with all deference to my friend, is not on the point of order, but on the merits of the bill. The Speaker can see and decide whether or not this is a revenue bill without the discussion that has been raised here. If the resolution comes up for consideration, then the gentleman can offer these arguments against its adoption. The question is whether or not it is a revenue law, and I think the Speaker can pass on that without any further discussion.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman has confined himself to that distinction, as to whether it is a revenue measure or not.

Mr. LUCE. If I have been diverted in any degree from the proper line of discussion, it has been simply with the desire to be courteous to a fellow member of the committee who rose to interrogate me. Now, to be equally solicitous for my friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], I will attempt with his permission to point out another particular in which this matter distinctly becomes a revenue bill. I observe by the last annual report of this corporation that there have been coming into the Treasury of the United States certificates of indebtedness, bonds, and so forth, to the extent of $374,313,493.89. The return of this money to the Treasury of the United States has been thus described by the Secretary of the Treasury himself:

> If the corporation continues to make loans in aid of exports, it can do so only by calling upon the Treasury of the United States to repeal securities of the United States in which the capital furnished by the United States is invested, or by selling bonds of the War Finance Corporation to the public. These bonds, although not guaranteed by the United States Government, would nevertheless be marketable only on account of the ownership of the entire capital by the Government.

The Secretary of the Treasury informed the committee—as he has said on other occasions, if I mistake not—that there is a credit to the account of this great corporation on the books of the Treasury, and that if this corporation should function it would have the right to demand from the Treasury $386,000,000. If the Treasury is to take securities in its possession and sell them, it can thus raise the money. Otherwise it must go and borrow it. The bill contemplates the possibility that this corporation shall compel the Secretary of the Treasury to borrow $386,000,000 more and add it to the inflation now existing.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I know the gentleman always desires to give the facts.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I yielded for a question only.

Mr. WINGO. I appreciate the gentleman's desire to facilitate the orderly business of the House, and I shall endeavor to assist the learned gentleman. What is wrong in, and what would prevent the Secretary of the Treasury from, restoring to the capital stock of the War Finance Corporation the Treasury certificates that he canceled at the time it suspended, without ever having to go out and borrow a dollar in the market? If Treasury certificates in May were legitimate investment—and they are under the provisions of the act a legitimate investment of the capital stock of the corporation—what is wrong with the Secretary of the Treasury restoring this capital by issuing to that corporation Treasury certificates in an amount equal to those he canceled? That would not be a floating of bonds as a sale of certificates in the open market.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that this has nothing to do with the constitutional question.

Mr. WINGO. I agree with the gentleman, but——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then why interject it? The gentleman from Massachusetts should be permitted to confine himself to the question at issue.

Mr. WINGO. I did not; the gentleman from Massachusetts was contending that the Secretary would have to borrow money, and I corrected him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the gentleman from Massachusetts should be succinct, and speedily bring the matter at issue to the attention of the Chair.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me for a question in point?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman make a distinction between such a resolution as this, which merely orders the Secretary to enforce a certain provision of the act of March 3, 1919, and a direction by this Congress to enforce another provision?

Mr. LUCE. It depends upon whether the provision in question was originally a matter of discretion; whether it was discretionary or ministerial. The courts invariably draw that distinction.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can hasten, for I have no desire to prolong the deliberations of the House, it has been pointed out that this $386,000,000 has been used to redeem debts of the United States, and a certain political party has not hesitated to claim credit to itself for this reduction of the debt. This can be undone only by increasing the debt of the United States, by issuing new Treasury certificates, by bringing in new sources of revenue.

And now, sir, having, I trust, adequately covered the main features of the situation, will you permit me to dwell for one moment upon a phase of it that was brought into the issue in question by the Lever bill in connection with the cotton futures act of 1915? Judge Hough declared that this bill was not and had not become a law, because it originated in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. What bill does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. LUCE. The cotton futures act. I am pointing out the fact that Judge Hough said it was not law because it originated in the Senate. The question went up on appeal but was dismissed by the Supreme Court upon the motion of the plaintiff in error.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BLANTON. My point of order is that under the rules of the House on a question of privilege each Member raising it is entitled to one hour and only one hour. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Massachusetts has used his hour.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, the question of privilege is not yet before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair overrules the point of order. The gentleman from Massachusetts will proceed.

Mr. LUCE. To summarize my argument, I contend that this measure originated in the Senate; that it contains a section which, in accordance with the precedents of the House, comes under the constitutional inhibition in the matter of raising revenue; that it so does because it involves the possibility and even the probability of large profits accruing to the Public Treasury and to that extent diminishing the burden upon the taxpayers; and because it involves an increase of the debt of the United States by $386,000,000, which can be met only by raising additional revenue.

If I were permitted to divert, I should be glad also to point out the interference of this proposal with the general fiscal policy of the Treasury Department. But I am quite aware that that will not be permitted. Therefore I rest my point chiefly upon these two contentions—that the matter involves the raising of revenue within the precedents of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I wish to discuss this question very briefly. All laws which incidentally raise revenues are not laws for the purpose of raising revenue. Would the gentleman from Massachusetts contend, for instance, that the Senate could not pass a bill providing for the sale of a former public-building site and that it would not become a law if then passed by the House and signed by the President? The effect of the law would be to raise revenue. That is the only effect it would have. And yet no one has ever contended that the Senate could not originate a bill of that kind, the incidental effect of which is to raise revenue.

The provision of the Constitution the gentleman referred to in the light of history, and in the light of history it was adopted. It provides that bills for the purpose of raising of revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives. It does not provide that laws which take the effect and which will have the effect either of raising revenue or producing a deficit shall originate in the House, and no one can tell whether the passage of the original act in this case was to produce revenue or to produce a deficit. No one can tell whether the passage of this resolution, if it shall be carried out in the spirit of the resolution, will produce revenue or produce a deficit. But everyone knows that the purpose of the law is not to produce revenue. The purpose of the law was to aid in the transaction of business, to aid in exports, to aid in the war, and not for the purpose of raising revenue. I doubt whether the gentleman from Massachusetts or anyone else will contend that Congress has the power to create corporations to engage in business for the purpose of raising the revenue of the Government.

While we have broad latitude in the raising of the revenue, I do not know of any provision of the Constitution which would authorize Congress to engage in business for the purpose of providing the revenues of the Government. The revenue is merely incidental. Besides, this resolution is only a direction to enforce existing law.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman a further elaboration of that statement? May I ask if in his judgment you do not by this resolution amend existing law?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It does not amend existing law, but it enforces existing law, and to that extent might be considered as amendatory. It is not an amendment. It is a direction to enforce a law which now is not required to be enforced.

Mr. LUCE. If this is not technically an amendment, does the gentleman think it within the constitutional province of Congress to direct the Executive to exercise judgment?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Why, certainly it is within the province of Congress to direct the Executive to exercise judgment where we have conferred the judgment upon it. We could take away entirely the judgment of the Executive in a matter of this kind. When we pass a law prescribing that the Executive may have discretion, we may change that and compel the Executive to exercise power.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman brings out precisely the point I desire to emphasize, that this is a change in the law. If it is not a change in the law, I desire to direct his attention to the fact that it would be absolutely contrary to the doctrine of the separation of the powers.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I stated in the first place, before the gentleman interrupted me—though I do not regret the interruption—that this required the Executive to do something which now is not required; but that does not change the situation at all. I believe that the original law might have originated in the Senate, not as a bill raising revenue, but this is merely a direction to the Executive to execute a law which is upon the statute books, which law originated in this House. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts presents a resolution, and claims that a section of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) infringes the privileges of the House, because it is a revenue bill which the Senate has no right to originate.

Against that the point of order is made that that is not a question of privilege.

Speaker Carlisle, in a similar case, made this ruling:

The Chair thinks whenever it is asserted on the floor of the House that the rights or privileges of the House have been invaded or violated by any other body, or by any individual, a question of privilege is presented, at least to the extent that the Chair is obliged to submit it to the House for its decision. Of course, the Chair itself will decide all questions of order arising during legislative proceedings of the House; but when the allegation is made that the rights or privileges of the House collectively have been invaded, that is a question which does not come within the province of the Chair to decide. The House is the custodian and guardian of its own rights and privileges as a body, and must always possess the power and have the opportunity to determine what those rights and privileges are and whether or not they have been improperly interfered with.

Following that decision the Chair will submit the question to the House whether the point of order lies against this resolution. The Chair submits this question to the House: Is this resolution presented by the gentleman from Massachusetts in order as a matter of privilege?

Mr. GARRETT. Did the gentleman from Massachusetts present a resolution?

The SPEAKER. He did.

Mr. GARRETT. I understood him to announce his intention so to do.

The SPEAKER. The resolution was reported at the desk. The question is, Is the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts in order?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the resolution be reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the first section of Senate joint resolution 212, in the opinion of this House, contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States and is an infringement of the privileges of this House, and that the said resolution be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Is this resolution in order?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure that by this resolution this matter is presented precisely as I, at least, will be glad to see it presented. Upon one phase of the matter I should say that the resolution of the gentleman is in order. I think it would be in order for the House to express an opinion as to whether or not its constitutional privilege and duty had been invaded. The matter upon which I would like to pass is the question of order originally raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The resolution, of course, is not in order unless it raises a question of privilege.

Mr. GARRETT. Does it not raise a question of privilege by asserting that a constitutional right has been invaded?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think it does, unless it shows where a constitutional right is invaded. Every Member of the House can not rise to a question of privilege, present a resolution, and get two or three hours' time upon it simply by asserting something. There must be something upon which to base the assertion, and I made the point of order that the resolution was not privileged and did not present a question of privilege, constitutional or otherwise, and demanded the regular order.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I shall vote to sustain the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois; but I wish it distinctly understood that in so doing I am voting to reach the major proposition of the original point of order made by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is, Is this resolution in order as a matter of privilege?

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Speaker, is not the question before the House now the question of sustaining the point of order?

The SPEAKER. That is what the Chair stated.

Mr. DOWELL. Those sustaining the point of order will vote "aye" and those opposed to the point of order will vote "no"?

The SPEAKER. No; the Chair stated it the other way. The Chair thinks the question before the House is, Is the resolution of the gentleman from Massachusetts in order as a matter of privilege? As many as think that it is in order as a matter of privilege will vote "aye"; those opposed "no."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN of Illinois) there were—ayes 28, noes 142.

The SPEAKER. On this question the ayes are 28 and the noes are 142, and the House decides that it is not a question of privilege.

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a further verification of the vote by the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts demands the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and 9 Members only having risen in favor thereof, the yeas and nays were refused.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 620.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. J. Res. 212, the same being a joint resolution "directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes." That there shall be not to exceed two hours of general debate, one-half to be controlled by some member of the Committee on Banking and Currency who is in favor of the joint resolution, and one-half by some member of the Committee on Banking and Currency who is opposed to the joint resolution. That at the conclusion of the general debate the joint resolution shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. That at the conclusion of such reading the committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House, together with amendments, if any, whereupon the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the joint resolution and all amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Committee amendment: Page 1, line 8, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "three."

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some arrangement, if I can, for the discussion of the rule. If any member of the Committee on Rules is opposed to the rule, I think it only fair that the division should be between those favoring and those opposed to the rule rather than between the majority and minority members of the committee.

Mr. POU. So far as I am advised, there is no member of the minority of the Committee on Rules opposed to this resolution. I can speak for only those members of the minority.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is no one on this side who desires time in opposition to the rule. Suppose we agree to let the rule come up for a vote.

Mr. POU. I am willing to do that without debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 212.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PHELAN. As to how the time is to be divided——

The SPEAKER. It is to be divided between those in favor and those against the resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I suggest that it might expedite the business if the members of the Committee on Banking and Currency were to agree on the Member who is to control the time? The rule divides the time between those opposed and those in favor.

The SPEAKER. The time is to be controlled by some Member who is in favor and some Member who is opposed.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I think it is understood that the time shall be divided equally between myself and some one opposed to the resolution.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am opposed to the resolution, and I suggest that the time be divided between the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] and myself.

Mr. PHELAN. I have no objection. I am opposed to the resolution, and so is the chairman of the committee. All I want is to have the time fairly and equitably divided.

Mr. McFADDEN. So far as I am concerned, I am willing that the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] should control the time in opposition.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the House determined last week that after the rule was adopted you could not change it, and so I think we ought to have the question of who should control the time come up under the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it would be well to determine now who shall control the time.

Mr. PHELAN. Will the gentleman from Kansas make some arrangement so that he will give half of his time to Members in favor of the resolution on this side?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I shall undertake to carry out that arrangement.

Mr. PHELAN. Then I do not care who has charge of the time in opposition to the bill if that arrangement is made.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the time be equally divided, I to control one half of the time and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] the other half.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that he control one half of the time and the gentleman from Massachusetts the other half. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The question now is on the motion of the gentleman from Kansas, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 212.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SNELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of Senate joint resolution 212, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes.

Whereas there exists in the agricultural sections of the country unprecedented and unparalleled distress on account of the inability of the farmers to dispose of the corn, wheat, cotton, wool, live stock, and other commodities now in marketable condition at prices that will pay the cost of production; and

Whereas the people of Europe are in dire need of the agricultural products now in possession of the farmers of this country, but are unable to purchase on account of existing financial conditions; and

Whereas, under an act of Congress, there was established the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of financing the exportation of American products to foreign markets; and

Whereas the activities of the War Finance Corporation were suspended in May, 1920, by an order of the Secretary of the Treasury; and

Whereas the banks of the country are unable to extend credit to the farmer in order that the farm products may be held until they can be sold in a fair and reasonable market: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation are hereby directed to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets.

SEC. 2. That it is the opinion of the Congress that the Federal Reserve Board should take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal reserve system to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them, by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at a fair and reasonable rate of interest.

The following committee amendment was read:

Page 2, line 9, strike out section 2.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the provisions of the rule the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. STRONG] is recognized for one hour and a half and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] for an hour and a half.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this resolution directs the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation and that it be rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets, and I hope it may have your favorable consideration and your votes and that it may pass this House by a large majority.

The committee recommends that section 2 of the resolution be stricken out, as the mere expression of opinion therein is not calculated to accomplish any favorable result, and the committee deems it unwise to encumber the passage of the resolution by including an ineffective clause which will be fruitful of controversy and barren of results.

The committee has held hearings and has had before it for consideration the hearings held by the Committees on Agriculture of the Senate and House in joint session.

The War Finance Corporation, by the act approved March 3, 1919, was empowered to encourage exports, and for the accomplishment of this purpose was empowered to sell bonds to the extent of six times its capital stock of $500,000,000; but by the amendment of March 3, 1919, it was provided that the aggregate of the advances made for the purpose above set forth remaining unpaid should never at any time exceed the sum of $1,000,000. There was an inevitable delay in the organization of the corporation for the purpose of carrying out the duties imposed by this act, but during the short period it operated it advanced for the purpose of financing the exportation of domestic products the following amounts:

Commodities.	Countries.	Amounts.
Agricultural implements	Great Britain, France, and Belgium	$4,000,000.00
Condensed milk	England and France	5,000,000.00
Cotton	Czechoslovakia	9,322,117.27
Electrical equipment and supplies.	Great Britain, South Africa, Australia, France, Belgium, and Italy.	10,796,537.00
Grain, flour, and foodstuffs	Belgium	12,229,000.00
Locomotives	Poland	5,000,000.00
Total		46,347,654.27

While it would seem from the amount advanced that no great demand has been made upon the corporation for advances, the fact is when on May 1, 1920, the corporation suspended, upon the request of the Secretary of the Treasury, proposals receiving the approval of the directors of the corporation amounted to $100,000,000, 75 per cent of which were for agricultural purposes. The proposals thus approved by the board were as follows: $17,500,000 of copper, $2,200,000 fabricated steel to Italy; $5,000,000 "Black Patch" tobacco from Tennessee and Kentucky; $4,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a large southern exporter; $25,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a group of southern bankers; $3,000,000 for cotton to Italy by a group of bankers; $9,000,000 by a group of bankers for export of cotton to Italy; $24,000,000 for the export of cotton by a syndicate of banks headed by one of the largest national banks in the United States; $2,400,000 by a group of bankers for coal to Italy; $4,000,000 by a group of bankers for cotton to Italy; $4,000,000 for ships to be bought or constructed in this country for Italy; in all, $100,000,000 in applications promising practical results with adequate security, according to the opinion of the directors of the War Finance Corporation.

When the Secretary of the Treasury requested the directors of the War Finance Corporation to suspend operations, it resulted in the adoption by the directors of the corporation on May 10 of the following resolution:

Resolved, That at the request of the Secretary of the Treasury and pending further action by this board the making by the corporation of further advances for export purposes, except pursuant to existing commitments, be suspended.

The Secretary of the Treasury has given to the committee the reasons actuating him in requesting the directors to suspend the operations of the corporation. Whether or not his action was wise or unwise is not in issue at this time. The question at issue is whether or not, in view of the conditions now existing, the operations which were suspended in May should be resumed. Necessity for the resumption of operations has been urged upon the committee by representatives of the agricultural interests of the entire country and by representatives of those who are engaged in the exportation of our products and those engaged in financing such exports.

It appears from the testimony before the committee that of the total capital stock of $500,000,000 there is on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the corporation $370,000,000. It is agreed, however, by those who advocate the resumption of the activities of the corporation that the funds necessary to accomplish the purpose of the law can best be secured by the sale of bonds of the corporation.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman does not contend that the $374,000,000 is going to be put into the corporation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania deny that the $374,000,000 is in the Treasury to the credit of the corporation?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not know. Will the gentleman explain how the corporation can resume without any capital?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman does not deny that the money is in the Treasury to the credit of the corporation.

Mr. McFADDEN. My information is it has been used to reduce the public debt, and according to the Secretary of the Treasury, who was before our committee, if the corporation is revived it will require the issue of temporary certificates.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. According to the testimony of the Secretary of the Treasury the money is now on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of this corporation, and the Treasury can not take away from the credit of the corporation.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield further.

During the period of the operation of the War Finance Corporation it sold only $200,000,000 of bonds. This issue of $200,000,000 of bonds, bearing interest at 5 per cent, was disposed of within five days notwithstanding that a great press agency erroneously announced on the second day that the entire amount had been subscribed on the preceding day. This would indicate that there is a ready market for the bonds of this corporation, and the former managing director of the corporation, who is familiar with the conditions of the market to-day, is emphatically of the opinion that an issue of $200,000,000 of its bonds at this time would readily be accepted by the investing public.

The statement of the former managing director is that during the period of operation in the great majority of cases where the corporation approved a request for a loan its approval resulted in the purchase by the investing public of the securities of the exporter, and, therefore, that the benefit which resulted from its activities was far greater than is indicated by the comparatively small amount of its advances.

While it may be argued with some force that when the corporation suspended its business on May 1, 1920, there was an increase in the volume and the dollar value of our exports, it is true that shortly after the suspension of the operations of this corporation our exports began to decrease until the month of November, 1920, when there was a marked decrease in the exportation of commodities and especially of agricultural products. The agricultural interests of the country seek a market for their goods and not merely credit to enable them to hold their products.

The European purchaser is unable to purchase unless long-term credits are made. The exporters of the Nation can not grant these long-term credits unless they in turn can finance them. The banks of the country appear unable to do this further than they have. It therefore becomes necessary to induce the investing public to put its resources at the service of the exporters, and the only agency through which it appears feasible now to do that is through the War Finance Corporation, which can sell its bonds to the investing public and use its money to finance exports. It is argued that this function can be best performed by private enterprises. The War Finance Corporation has perfected its organization and without delay could afford the relief desired and which is necessary. The private corporations proposed to be organized under the Edge law have not perfected their organization and we could not hope to have them operated for many months to come. In addition to this the testimony shows that the promoters of the two corporations proposed to be organized under the Edge law are of the opinion that the operation of the War Finance Corporation is essential to their successful operation at this time.

The testimony is conclusive that gilt-edged collateral can be secured by our exporters, and inasmuch as by the terms of the act the War Finance Corporation can advance only to persons and corporations engaged in business in this country, and it is certain that it will function as it did during the period of its operation, making advances only where the loans were underwritten by groups of American bankers, whose indorsement guaranteed the repayment of the loan. The effect of the activities contemplated by this corporation under this resolution will be to enable the products of this country to find a market, and the money that is invested in financing the bills will go directly to the banks and other institutions which are creditors now of the producers, and who need relief, and will start a period of debt cancellation, which is the only orderly method of deflation which can be evolved.

The hearings before our committee and before the Joint Committee on Agriculture of the House and the Senate developed the fact that the agricultural interests of the great West had suffered by far the greatest slump in the prices of its products, that corn in the West was selling at 30 cents a bushel, that wheat and cattle and sheep were not bringing anywhere near the cost of production, that credits were restricted, and that farmers with large crops, large supplies of corn and alfalfa and hay for stock were unable to get cattle to place in their feed lots, and it is true that in my district there is not one feed lot in twenty that contains any cattle. The farmers with cribs full of corn and an abundance of alfalfa and hay can not get the credit with which to secure the cattle.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. If this War Finance Board should be revived, and I am in favor of it, how long would it take the board to begin operation to give relief to these people in agricultural districts?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. It should not take to exceed 30 days; but relief will come at once, for the reason that the psychological value of it will come with the passage of this resolution and will help those interests in the West who need credit. For instance, the sheep raisers and the stock raisers in the West and the cattle feeders, who are now unable to obtain credits, are being carried by their local banks, and they are told that they can not get any further advances. The city banker who is carrying the country banker is considering now crowding the country banker for the payment of rediscount loans, and they have refused any further extensions. If the Congress of the United States should pass this resolution and it is signed by the President, immediately the city banker would understand that with the revival of the War Finance Corporation there would be opened up an opportunity for the exportation of these products that would create a market for them and make it possible to liquidate in time and with fair returns, and he would not press the country banker, and the country banker, in turn, would not press the man to whom he had loaned the money, and the stockmen of the country would not be compelled to place their herds upon the market. If you continue a restriction of credits whereby the cattlemen and the sheep raisers can not be given further extensions but must sell the cows and ewes with their entire herds, you are going to destroy the manufacturing plants which supply the beef and hides and the mutton and the wool of the Nation.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. PHELAN. Did not every representative of the sheep and wool interests state that neither this bill nor any other financial relief would be of any avail whatsoever unless an embargo were placed and subsequently a protective tariff act were passed?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I agree with my friend that they urged an embargo and a protective tariff on wool and mutton, but they said that this resolution would give immediate temporary relief, and that is what we want to do to save the cattle and sheep herds until we can pass a tariff act that will protect those interests.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I am interested in this matter because I have had some experience, as far as tobacco growers are concerned, with the War Finance Corporation. Under the original War Finance Corporation act, which we are seeking by this resolution to revive, the officers of the War Finance Corporation have no power to loan money to a foreign Government for export purposes, but it is within the power of the corporation to loan on sufficient security to American bankers or exporters for the purpose of making possible exportation of such commodities. I am very much for this, but how will it benefit the man who raises corn? I am from a great corn belt. For instance, I got a letter the other day from a constituent of mine who raised 10,000 bushels of corn that cost him $7,000 to raise. He stands to lose $2,500 because of the slump in corn. How will this extend the market to that man?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Any exportation of farm products of any kind is going to help the corn raiser. Even the revival of the cotton market will cause the cotton man of the South to sell his cotton and having obtained the proceeds he will use more of our corn. You can not mention an industry which the revival of this corporation will help that will not help the wheat and the corn grower and the stockman and every other agricultural interest in my district and the gentleman's district.

I would like to add further that there is a country whose credits are good, whose people are starving by the millions, to which we can export our cotton and our corn and wheat and meats if we had this corporation that could make possible the extension of credits for a term of years, and that is China. They both need and want the surplus which we have in abundance.

Mr. KINCHELOE. There is a bit of information which I did not know until I read the gentleman's report. I introduced an amendment to the War Finance Corporation act at the last session of Congress, in order to enlarge its powers so that it could loan money directly to foreign Governments that had a Government monopoly on tobacco for the purpose of buying our tobacco. I see in the gentleman's report on page 2 that there was a tentative agreement, at least, to loan $5,000,000 for this purpose. I am wondering where the gentleman got that information. Did he get it from the War Finance Corporation officials?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. We got it from Mr. Meyers, who was a member of the War Finance Corporation, who gave testimony before our Banking and Currency Committee.

Mr. KINCHELOE. And at that time it was the intention to loan this money, except for the order of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Such was their intention; yes. In closing I want to say this: It will be urged by men opposing this resolution that it will inflate the currency; that it will raise prices; that it will do that thing that we have been working against, increase the cost of living. I am not an inflationist. I do not want to inflate the currency, but during the war we did inflate all prices in this country; we went up in a balloon of price inflation, and the question now is how to get down. Some gentlemen want to tear open the balloon and let us fall hard. That is what has been done to the farmers of the West; that is what has happened to the cotton men of the South and the woolgrowers and the cattlemen of the country.

What we want to do in the reorganization of this War Finance Corporation or the resumption of its functions is to permit us to reach the ground gradually and safely, to get back gradually to prewar prices, as the other great industries of the country are doing.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I would be glad to do so.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. The gentleman representing the live-stock industries of the West who appeared before our committee stated that advancing the money would be a postponing of the evil day, and that it would have the effect of throwing the money into rat holes unless it were followed by a protective tariff or embargoes, and if that is the case it seems to me that we have got the cart before the horse and had better pass other legislation before passing this kind of legislation.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. The gentleman said, however, most positively that the revival of the War Finance Corporation would give immediate temporary relief until the time when we could have a protective tariff. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 20 minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas want to use some more of his time now? If not, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN].

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this resolution presents an unusual situation. It is an attempt to compel a high official of this Government to put in force a law; or, in other words, it is the claim of the interests back of this measure that the Secretary of the Treasury, dominating the War Finance Corporation, has sought to close the business of this corporation when special business interests of the country demand its continuation in full operation. It is an unusual proceeding for a member of another party as chairman of a committee of this House to come to the defense of an officer of another party in the administration, but to-day we find that it is necessary to defend the action of the Secretary of the Treasury in carrying out what he believes to be conservative ideas in regard to affairs pertaining to the War Finance Corporation and the Public Treasury. We find in opposition to the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation that the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the Federal Reserve Board—yea, even the directors of the War Finance Corporation itself—saying that it should not be done; that it is unwise to rehabilitate this corporation——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. With the exception, I might say, of the activities of the former chairman of that board, Mr. Eugene Meyer, who has seen fit to differ with the Secretary of the Treasury in regard to business operations of this corporation, who has gone up and down this country preaching that it should be revived, and I have no doubt now that the reason that this proposition is brought in here is largely due to the fact that this former chairman of this board has become so interested in the rehabilitation of this corporation that he has gone out and presented his case to these various farmer and other organizations as a palliative and——

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I can not be interrupted now. The gentlemen who appeared before the committee advocating the rehabilitation of this corporation—and I speak particularly of Mr. Haggenbarth, who represented the sheep growers and cattle growers of the West—stated frankly to the committee that if the activities of this corporation are revived, in the absence of an embargo, that it would be only a palliative; that it could not stop the critical situation which now confronts these interested people throughout the country in the settlement of affairs pertaining to stocks on hand representing overproduction. He stated to us frankly that one of the most important things in connection with this was the fact that the woolgrowers of the country could not sell their wool. He stated frankly that there was a two years' supply of wool in this country, and unless there was an embargo placed that the revival of this corporation would not help out the situation. When questioned further along in the testimony he reiterated that statement and really apologized that he must make that statement, and in all fairness to the members of the committee, he said it was absolutely necessary we have an embargo, which must be followed by a protective tariff, before any relief could come to those people. He said the situation was so desperate in the West that this revival would not bring relief to the situation, but that indirectly, perhaps, there might be some help somehow, some time or other, for those people from the rehabilitation of this corporation.

Mr. McKEOWN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will yield.

Mr. McKEOWN. Is it not a fact that the Argentine Government is contemplating the financing of its woolgrowers for two years in order to give time for the wool market to right itself?

Mr. McFADDEN. I am not informed as to that; probably the gentleman has the facts in the matter. It matters little to us here what plans they adopt, their situation is so different than ours.

Mr. McKEOWN. Does not the gentleman think that would help this country if the woolgrowers were given a chance to hold their wool until the market righted itself?

Mr. McFADDEN. It would help to raise prices to the consuming public.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. The rehabilitation of this corporation in my judgment will interfere with the early resumption of that old law of supply and demand. We are suffering because of the interruption of that law, and we are feeling the effects of it now.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I have only a few minutes. The gentleman can get time.

Mr. WINGO. No; I have no time. It is so handled the gentleman controls most of the time. Of course, if the gentleman does not care to yield, he does not have to do so.

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not control the time, but I will yield. If the gentleman does not care for this time, of course I will proceed.

Mr. WINGO. If the gentleman will yield. He declined to yield a while ago and then yielded to another gentleman. I will ask the gentleman this question: The gentleman says that the Federal Reserve Board is against this. I challenge it. What authority has the gentleman got for it?

Mr. McFADDEN. The statement of the members of the Federal Reserve Board.

Mr. WINGO. When?

Mr. McFADDEN. In a speech by Gov. Harding at Indianapolis recently and in personal conversations with me.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman makes the statement. Show the statement where the Federal Reserve Board considered this question——

Mr. McFADDEN. I did not say they considered it, but I said they were opposed to it. Does the gentleman deny that they are?

Mr. WINGO. I deny the majority of them are against section 1; a majority of them are really at heart in favor of it. I presume they all oppose section 2, but the best argument in favor of reviving the War Finance Corporation is the statement of Mr. Harding before the Senate committee. Nowhere in his Indianapolis speech does he say the War Finance Corporation should not be revived.

The gentleman says that the War Finance Corporation favored it. It has but three members. One of them is Mr. Houston, and the others are two assistants of his in the Treasury.

Mr. McFADDEN. Is the gentleman willing to revive that corporation with such official organization?

Mr. WINGO. Yes; I am. I think most of the damage has already been done. But I did not want the gentleman to leave it in the RECORD that certain gentlemen and organizations were opposed to this, when I know just the contrary, judged by their silence.

Mr. McFADDEN. I wanted to call the attention of the House particularly to what is required when this War Finance Corporation is rehabilitated. When this act was passed it provided an appropriation of $500,000,000 to be provided out of the Public Treasury for the purposes of this corporation. A year ago at the suggestion largely of Mr. Meyer the then managing head, Congress passed an amendment to this law which permitted this corporation to function in the aid of export trade. It provided among other things that they could use the credit of this corporation up to the extent of $1,000,000,000. Notwithstanding the fact that this full authority was given them, only $46,000,000 has ever been used by this corporation for the purpose of aiding export trade, and it became very apparent to those who were engaged in the duties devolving upon them as directors of this corporation last May that the usefulness of the corporation had ended, because 5 per cent of the loans made were made to concerns whose credit would permit them to obtain money through independent banking channels, and therefore they began to liquidate the corporation, and they liquidated it to the extent of paying back into the Public Treasury $374,000,000 of that capital stock.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Was that money covered into the Treasury to the credit of the corporation?

Mr. McFADDEN. It stands as a credit to the corporation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. Then it is not covered into the Treasury to miscellaneous receipts?

Mr. McFADDEN. My understanding is that it was used in the reduction of the debts of the Treasury Department, and while this balance stands as a credit to the War Finance Corporation, if this corporation is rehabilitated it will require the sale of temporary certificates, or at least will require the issuance of certificates, to be placed back into the treasury of the War Finance Corporation in order to put it in full operation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. I want to call attention to this fact, that whenever any money is covered into the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts an additional appropriation must be passed to take it out. No money that is carried on the books of the Treasury is covered into the Treasury.

Mr. McFADDEN. This was the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury in connection with that transaction.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. We have the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury, and he says that it is on deposit in the Treasury to the credit of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman does not contend that the actual funds or cash is there to the credit of the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. What the gentleman means is, if the corporation calls for this money, inasmuch as it is on deposit there and he has used it, the Treasury certificates, the Treasury would then have to go out and take care of itself.

Mr. McFADDEN. If the War Finance Corporation requires cash to go ahead and do business under this organization, the Secretary of the Treasury has to furnish cash or certificates of indebtedness, or bonds, to this War Finance Corporation. That is exactly the situation. In order to get cash the Secretary of the Treasury will have to sell something he has to sell, and what the Treasury Department does nowadays when it wants any money is to offer temporary certificates, and there is now outstanding some two billions and a half dollars' worth of these.

Mr. BRAND. Does not the gentleman recall that the Secretary of the Treasury testified before our committee in answer to a question from me as to when, if it was revived, it would begin to function and operate, that it would operate immediately?

Mr. McFADDEN. I think he did say that if this law was passed he would revive the activities of the corporation.

Mr. BRAND. And that it would begin to operate immediately, and therefore it follows that the corporation could not do this unless the funds in the Treasury to its credit were available immediately.

Mr. McFADDEN. The Secretary of the Treasury did state that if this was rehabilitated he would either have to replace in the treasury of the War Finance Corporation cash or certificates of indebtedness.

Mr. HAUGEN. It would only be that the money was called for. The money is there on deposit.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is not true. The funds with which to meet the requirements of this corporation would come from the Treasury, as I have just stated, or from a sale of its own securities. And in order to sell its own securities it has to have assets, and the original law provides $500,000,000 as the amount of capital which the Treasury Department subscribed. And I want to say, too, that I believe before this corporation can sell its securities it must function in an orderly way and must have the capital the law provides, or else the purchasers of those securities will begin to make inquiries as to what assets the corporation has back of its bonds or note issues.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understood the gentleman to state a while ago that a certain gentleman from the Northwest that came before the committee said a revival of this would not help the woolgrowers. I represent more growers and sheep in my district than are in Utah, and I am receiving letters every day asking for the passage of this resolution.

Mr. McFADDEN. I am simply repeating what the gentleman said——

Mr. TINCHER. As I understand the gentleman, he is defending the Secretary of the Treasury. Does not the gentleman think that the Secretary of the Treasury, who was compelling this War Finance Corporation without any authority of law, to convert $374,000,000 into the Treasury, might possibly have avoided this difficulty by buying short-time certificates instead of paying off the war debt with that fund, without any authority of law for it?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not want to attempt to suggest what the Secretary of the Treasury should do or not do in that direction.

Mr. TINCHER. I understood the gentleman in opening to say that he was going to defend the Secretary of the Treasury in his attitude toward the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska. That includes John Skelton Williams, I suppose?

Mr. SNYDER. In connection with the question propounded a moment ago by the gentleman in reference to wool, if this Finance Corporation is reorganized and started over, what effect does the gentleman think it would have on the people in his district that now own wool, since they are asking for an embargo on wool into the country? How does he expect that this Finance Corporation, having been started, will assist those woolgrowers in his district? I would like to have the gentleman explain that to us.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. By making direct loans to them, as they did during the war, thousands of them.

Mr. SNYDER. That is exactly what I wanted to bring out, but I wanted to bring it out from the chairman of the committee, whether he understands that this Finance Corporation is to start lending to the woolgrowers and wheat growers money out of this corporation's funds? I had supposed that this was for the purpose of financing exports and not for the loan of individual amounts of money to individual farmers. Can it be possible that we have come to that? There are banks in this country that are abundantly able to take care of every woolgrower who has wool to put up as security.

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not care to yield. I refuse to yield further. The purpose of the revival of the War Finance Corporation was to aid the export business of this country. It was not revived for the purpose of making loans to farmers or to people who are engaged in holding the products of the farms. I do not understand that the rehabilitation of this corporation provides for any such thing now. There can be, under my understanding of this law, no loans made direct to farmers for the purpose of holding commodities. In fact, we have of late been engaged in this country in an attempt to lower prices, and now when we are getting to the point where prices are beginning to go down and the consuming public is beginning to get some benefit from it, we are going to enact a law which will interfere with the working of the law of supply and demand, the very thing that we have been suffering from for some years past.

What I wanted to do when I began was particularly to point out the position we would be in in a national way when we rehabilitate corporations of this kind and continue the Government in business. During the last few weeks and months we have been in a hot political discussion all over this country, in which I think the people have voiced their sentiment in regard to the Government meddling in business; and it seems now that in answer to that sentiment we should not proceed to the rehabilitation of one of those instrumentalities. It seems to me this is a time to begin to separate the Government from business. If this corporation starts in business again and the Treasury of the United States is called upon to furnish these hundreds of millions of capital, it means that the Treasury must go into the market and sell additional securities.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. McFADDEN. If they do not sell their own securities, they will sell the securities issued by the War Finance Corporation; and this legislation provides that those securities or bonds shall be tax exempt; and I would like to inquire of the Members of this House how a privately owned corporation, such as is being organized now, with $100,000,000 capital, is going to compete with an institution that has behind it a Government subsidy under the law, such as tax-exempt securities?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. SNYDER. Since the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] absolutely disagree upon this proposition, I take it that the gentleman from Texas is for this measure because he expects that his woolgrowers are to receive loans from the War Finance Corporation for their own purposes. Now, the chairman of the committee says that the resolution does not contemplate any such thing as that. I think that the chairman is correct, and I think that the gentleman from Texas is wrong; but I would like to have this thing cleared up if we can, so that those of us who are called upon to vote eventually upon this measure will know whether we are called upon to vote yes or no upon that proposition.

Mr. McFADDEN. I believe that the farmers and stock raisers of this country who are in distress at this time are deceived as to that. I think that a revival of this corporation will not do what they think it will do, as promised, under the leadership of one who was formerly running that corporation and who believes it should now be revived.

Mr. SNYDER. I would like to ask the gentleman another question.

Mr. McFADDEN. Very well.

Mr. SNYDER. Does the gentleman know of any loan that was made to an individual farmer during the period of the operation of the War Finance Corporation?

Mr. McFADDEN. There were a lot of loans made to dealers in stock in the early days of the financing by the War Finance Corporation; but of late, since we passed that amendment a year ago, loans have been made to such concerns as the International Harvester Co., the Baldwin Locomotive Works, and the Bethlehem Steel Co., institutions that can go into the market and borrow all the money they need upon their own security. In other words, they do not need to lean on the Government at all.

Mr. SNYDER. They are large farmers.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman from Kansas says or intimates that I represent those large institutions. It is not so, and the gentleman has no reason for saying so.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman ought to be aware of that fact.

Mr. BRAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. You do not mean to answer this question by saying that if this corporation is revived the money is going to be loaned to any individual farmers?

Mr. McFADDEN. No.

Mr. BRAND. The purpose is to loan it to exporters. No farmer will get it in the West or South.

Mr. McFADDEN. That is what I stated.

Mr. SNYDER. What I tried to correct was the impression that was left in the minds of some Members, at least in my mind, that this measure did contemplate loaning to the woolgrowers in the gentleman's district.

Mr. BRAND. The woolgrower will not get any of it by direct loan.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield further.

Mr. McFADDEN. During this war this country has loaned to Governments of Europe $10,000,000,000, and the exporters have exported in excess of that amount, so that there is an unsettled trade balance now existing of between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000. If I understand the temper of the people of this country, it is to the effect that they are willing to send their products and accommodate these people in Europe so long as they can be secured, and not beyond that point. The great trouble to-day, if there is any congestion or holding back of exports, is to the fact that those devastated countries of Europe can not furnish proper security. I am not aware of the fact that the resources of this country have been denied to the exporters by the banks that have been financing these exports, but it is more properly a question of proper credit being offered to this country if there is any holding up in exports at this time. And if this corporation is revived it is simply notice to those engaged in export business at a profit that the United States Government proposes to finance exports and will lend its credit for that purpose, at least to the extent of $1,000,000,000, and this in addition to the ten billions of Government loans upon which no interest is being paid, and, further, before the unfunded trade balance of three to four billions has been financed.

It therefore seems to me that if we are to rehabilitate this corporation and lend to it the protecting arm of our Government, we are discouraging private enterprise in handling this business, and we are continuing the Government in business and putting a hindrance on private capital handling the business affairs of this Nation.

In addition to that, I seriously question the advisability of extending the credit of the Government in this manner, in view of the deplorable condition in which the Treasury is at this time.

Some of these gentlemen say that the banking facilities of this country have been denied to the farmers. The fact remains that Gov. Harding, in a recent address in Indianapolis, pointed out that the Federal reserve banks in distinctly agricultural districts have rediscounted bills for member banks amounting to $1,500,000,000, and he estimated the proportion of the system's total loans directly in support of agricultural and live-stock interests September 3, 1920, as follows: Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, 27.3 per cent; Atlanta, 23.7 per cent; Chicago, 48.3 per cent; St. Louis, 22 per cent; Minneapolis, 65.6 per cent; Kansas City, 59.8 per cent; Dallas, 50 per cent; and San Francisco, 58.7 per cent. In some of these banks, he says, the proportion of agricultural paper held is much greater now than on September 3. He says there has been no curtailment of agricultural credits by the Federal reserve banks, but on the contrary, there has been a very large volume of credit extended by member and nonmember banks in support of the agricultural interests, and while this has been going on the deposits in the New York City banks have decreased from November 12, 1919, to November 10, 1920, from $6,313,998,000 to $4,916,375,000.

From the evidence presented to the committee it would seem that the Federal Reserve System has been very generous, and in fact, the commercial banks also, in extending credit to the interests which are claiming special relief at this time, who, unfortunately, are holding this great stock of overproduction.

It seems to me, in view of this fact, that the Secretary of the Treasury, the Federal Reserve Board, and the best financial minds of this country should be given some consideration before the passage of a resolution of this character, which provides for the inflation and possible disturbance of our whole financial system that this resolution does.

As a matter of fact, during the past two years the Federal Reserve System has been extending credit, and it has been issuing an increased amount of Federal reserve notes, and it has about reached the limit of safety in that respect. So that it seems to me that when the Federal Reserve System is criticized on the ground that it has not furnished credit to the farmers of the country, the men who make that assertion are not familiar with the facts when they so state.

This legislation, it seems to me, is purely class legislation. There is not any question about it. We might as well look it squarely in the face. It is stepping in and putting your hand into the Public Treasury for the purpose of financing a special interest in the United States, or a special class of industry. You can call it what you like, but it is nothing else than that.

Mr. BARKLEY. What language is there in this resolution that refers to any particular class?

Mr. McFADDEN. The class of exporters.

Mr. BARKLEY. Does not that include men who are engaged in all sorts of enterprises, without regard to their character or nature?

Mr. McFADDEN. That may be indirectly, but as a class it is to aid exporters, and this special legislation is urged now for the purpose of aiding the farmer. I think the farmer is being deluded if he believes that——

Mr. PHELAN. And it does not include the sheep grower and the woolgrower, because they do not export.

Mr. BARKLEY. If they do not export and they are not crippled by foreign conditions, it is not necessary that they be aided in that respect.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman who was before the committee pointed out to the committee the fact that there was a great influx of beef and lamb and wool and all of these products coming into this country. He pointed out that the thing that was necessary to do was to stop imports; that it was not a financial proposition in the first instance, but that they must have an embargo to stop the influx of these products that were coming in competition with the production of our own farms, and that is why I say, when I oppose this legislation, that I do not believe it is going to help the farmer in the way he thinks it is going to, and I believe he is laboring under a delusion when he and his representatives come here and ask for special class legislation. And in that respect I want to point out to you that if you do this thing now, there is the possibility of the revival of the grain corporation—there is danger of a revival of legislation to extend our aid to practically every line of industry in the United States. I want to say to you men here that this is no farmers' proposition at this time. We are in the midst of a general business depression. Those men who are in close touch with the business affairs of this country know that there is a general business depression throughout the length and breadth of this country of practically 70 per cent; and while these special people are suffering it is only a part of the suffering which they must bear in unison with the other business interests that are suffering in like manner, because of this great world-wide adjustment which is taking place, and it is necessary to get things back to a proper level in this country and as soon as possible, and we must all work out our own problems without running to the Public Treasury every time we have a pain.

Mr. SNYDER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. SNYDER. With reference to the special class, the last whereas to this resolution reads:

> Whereas the banks of the country are unable to extend credit to the farmer in order that the farm products may be held until they can be sold in a fair and reasonable market.

Mr. McFADDEN. There is the problem right there. Everybody has been trying to get prices back to normal. This is a proposition to stop the normal process of development in that particular. We propose to check the falling of prices, so that they can not get down where the consuming public will get the benefit of this readjustment. The manufacturer and the producer have each suffered in turn but the poor public is deprived of the full benefits, and it is time that he did——

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McFADDEN. I will.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Is it the information of the chairman that it would not be a good thing to check the decline in prices now if it could be done by safe legislation?

Mr. McFADDEN. I do not understand that the consuming public is getting the full benefit of the reduction in prices. It is my information that until the consuming public gets the full benefit of the reduction in prices the matter should proceed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. STEVENSON].

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Chairman, let us take up the discussion at the point where the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] left off. He says that this is class legislation, that this is legislation to provide money for the benefit of one certain class, to wit, exporters. In the first place, the thing this country needs is for commerce to move, and if you provide the machinery whereby the exporter can finance his bills, commerce moves, and to the benefit of the woolgrower, the sheep grower, the wheat grower, the cattle grower, and everybody else.

But I do not think the Congress can afford now, even if that was true that it was in favor of the farmer, to raise the cry of class legislation. The Secretary of the Treasury is every day paying out millions of dollars to the railroads under the direction of Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury is forbearing to collect millions of dollars that the railroads owe the Government, under the direction from this same Congress. The Secretary of the Treasury has been paying out on a guaranty millions of dollars that were directly provided for by legislation by this Congress for the benefit of one class of business people.

Let us see what those figures are. We provide in the Esch-Cummins bill for a fund of $300,000,000 to loan railroads. We provide for guaranties upon which the Treasury has paid out $650,000,000. We provide for the payment of our debts to the railroads, largely without set-off, and to take long-time obligations of the railroads with a small amount of security that they can give on the debt of $938,000,000.

I do not think we will be in a good position to reply to the farmer, "We could not do anything for you because it is class legislation," when the farmer asks us what we did about the railroads—$2,000,000,000 that we have provided for them during this same Congress.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have only 10 minutes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I simply want to ask the gentleman if he has information as to how much was paid to the war contractors and the shipbuilders?

Mr. STEVENSON. I have not the information. Now, so much for that. If this is class legislation we are all tarred with the same stick and have no decent answer to make to people whose products they can not sell because their exports can not be financed.

The gentleman said that there was in Gov. Harding's speech, and it is true, that the agricultural interests had had paper discounted to a large extent in the Federal reserve banks of this country, and that is true. I can show that they could go considerably further, but they put the brakes on. How are you going to loose the brakes. There are agricultural notes in the banks to-day because the export trade of the country has been tied up and there is no foreign market for the sale of agricultural products. You provide for the exporter at Wilmington to export 100,000 bales of cotton, you finance his bill, give him the cash, and the millions of dollars that come from that sale goes to the farmers and from them into the banks that have discounted his paper, and goes into the regional banks, and you will have the cancellation of all the debts by the cash that will be put in circulation. That is the trouble. The money of the country is largely tied up in unmarketable products because there is no financing of these goods that are to go abroad.

The gentleman says that $4,000,000,000 have gone abroad and been financed. That is an exaggerated statement. I am not charging my friend with exaggeration because it has been said by the Secretary of the Treasury; but granting that that is true, what does that show?

It shows that the banks of this country have at this time gone their limit in financing these corporations, and they can not go further. We have got to give to the investing public in this country the bonds of the Finance Corporation, bonds that are issued on capital stock, get the investing public to take these bonds, put the money into the commerce at the present time, and put that at the service of the exporters, and thereby finance the property that has been made by the farmers of this country and let the money pay up the debt of the farmers and relieve the banks.

Now, we hear all this about there being no further power to carry paper. In November the Federal reserve notes were contracted $30,000,000. Last week they were contracted still more.

Mr. DUNBAR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Is it not a fact that while there may have been a temporary contraction of Federal reserve notes last week, is it not a fact that since June 30 of last year the Federal reserve notes have increased $280,000,000, and for the year previous increased $750,000,000?

Mr. STEVENSON. I can give the gentleman better stuff than that. In 12 months from November 1, 1919, to November 1, 1920, they increased $576,000,000, but they were always covered by a gold reserve that was ample, and the gold reserve increased in the last 30 days from 44 to 48 per cent, when you set aside 35 per cent as a reserve against the deposits.

To-day it is around 49 per cent, when you set aside 35 per cent for your deposits. You have 49 per cent of gold reserve for every dollar of the Federal reserve notes, and, therefore, we have not come to any impassable position with regard to the money of this country.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. DUNBAR. Is it not a fact that for $3,600,000,000 worth of Federal reserve notes we have but $1,200,000,000 worth of gold, and that is less than one-third? That is according to the daily statement issued by the Treasury Department.

Mr. STEVENSON. The daily statement issued by the Treasury Department does not give accurately the condition of the Federal reserve notes and the Federal reserve banks. If the gentleman will look at Sunday's paper he will see the statement made that the net gold reserve last week increased considerably.

Mr. Chairman, I want to address myself just for a minute to the conditions. They are not peculiar. People out West and the people in the South want money for their agricultural products, and the people of the Northeast want money for their manufactured products. You will never get a market until you start business.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. STEAGALL].

Mr. STEAGALL. Mr. Chairman, it seldom happens in the history of legislation that this House has an opportunity to vote upon a proposition the wisdom of which has been tested out and demonstrated in the light of practical experience. Such is the case with reference to the rehabilitation of the activities of the War Finance Corporation. Gentlemen must not confuse the resolution before the House with the passage of the original bill establishing this corporation. If we were called upon at this particular time to have the Government set up an agency to engage in the sort of business for which this corporation was originated, there would be ground for diversity of opinion as to the wisdom of such action. But that is not the question before the House. The question is whether we shall have the board of directors of the corporation go forward with the business for which it was established or indorse the action of an administrative officer of the Government in peremptorily terminating the activities of the corporation at a time far in advance of the period intended by Congress. The original War Finance Corporation act was passed to assist in financing such business undertakings as might be essential to the successful conduct of the war.

Four months after hostilities had ceased Congress extended the provisions of the law by an amendment providing that the corporation should engage in loaning money to the extent of a billion dollars to aid in the exportation of American products and the loans to run to the maximum limit of five years. The corporation had at that time and still has a capital of five hundred millions, subscribed and paid by the Government. The corporation has to its credit in the Treasury now $370,000,000, in addition to its other assets. It is authorized to issue bonds for a sufficient amount to make the maximum of loans allowed under the law. The former director of the corporation, who is perhaps better informed than anyone else regarding the affairs of the corporation, stated in the hearings before the Committee on Banking and Currency that the corporation could easily dispose of its bonds at 6 per cent. At the time of the passage of the amendment authorizing the corporation to make loans to aid in exports the Government was still engaged in making vast loans to Europe. The Government had loaned the sum of $1,400,000,000 between the time of the cessation of hostilities and the passage of this amendment. It was recognized on all hands that in the disturbed condition of finances and affairs throughout the world extraordinary steps would be required to maintain our export trade and preserve the prosperity which our people were enjoying. The stricken people of Europe had need for all they could purchase from us, but no funds with which to pay cash for our goods. The only method by which our trade could be maintained was through the extension of credit, and it was greatly desired to have the Government put an end to the policy of making direct loans to the nations of Europe.

In the very nature of things a new situation confronted the business world with which they were not prepared to deal. The banks of the country acting individually could not undertake the enormous and hazardous risks required. Congress undertook to provide the necessary legislation by which our export business could be handled on a permanent basis without aid from the Government. We passed what is known as the Edge law, authorizing the establishment of corporations to engage in financing export trade and permitting banks to subscribe to the stock of such corporations. The proposition was to allow the banks to cooperate and by assuming a limited liability organize corporations to assist in carrying on foreign trade. Any man with reasonable forethought was bound to recognize that our prosperity could not last if we did not make some provision for selling our products to the outside world. When the Edge bill was before the House I called attention to the danger of the disturbed conditions confronting the country. In a speech on that measure delivered on November 3, 1919, I said:

> The situation respecting our foreign trade is such that something should be done to make sure that the farmers and manufacturers of the Nation shall not suffer from a severe slump in our exports and sudden and sweeping decline in prices. We are told that for the fiscal year ending June 30 last our exports exceeded imports between four and five billions of dollars. Our trade during that period, including both imports and exports, reached the stupendous sum of more than $10,000,000,000. This vast volume of business can not be handled to the best advantage of the American people without some new method of international banking. The American dollar has advanced until it is worth $1.12, as it relates to the British pound sterling. In France and Italy it is even much higher, and in Germany higher still. This is bound to result in the impairment of our foreign trade to the great detriment of the cotton growers, the wheat growers, the cattle raisers, the manufactuxers, the laborers, and every interest of the American people. We must maintain and increase our production and continue to ship our goods to the markets of the world if we hope to preserve our marvelous prosperity.

The War Finance Corporation was designed to bridge over the period following the war until steps could be taken by which private capital could take over and handle the business of financing our export trade. The Edge law sought to establish a method by which private capital could be organized to conduct this business, but before the business world could avail itself of the opportunities offered by the Edge law the Secretary of the Treasury succeeded in closing down the operation of the War Finance Corporation. He did this in face of the fact that the corporation was intended to cover the period of readjustment I have just outlined and in face of the specific provision of the law that it should terminate upon the President's proclamation of peace. It was not intended that the time of the cessation of actual fighting should have any bearing on the matter. The Congress foresaw that there would be more or less chaos and confusion in our international relations for fully a year after formal declaration of peace. Again, at the time of the passage of the amendment to the act—March 3, 1919—providing for assistance in financing exports, no one had any thought that there would be a formal declaration of peace earlier than the latter part of that year. The President at the time of the passage of the amendment was in the United States. It was necessary that he return to Paris for completion of the peace treaty, and then it would have to go to the Senate of the United States and be ratified before there would be any proclamation of peace. It will be seen that the Secretary of the Treasury not only terminated the operation of the corporation before a proclamation of peace by the President, but he did so many months before the Congress at the time of passage of the amendment could have thought it possible for such proclamation to be issued. It is so clear that the action of the Secretary of the Treasury was contrary to the intention of Congress that there can be no serious controversy about the matter.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I have not the time, otherwise I should be glad to do so. The resolution before us only proposes that we reaffirm our confidence in what we did last year. It is not proposed to require anything to be done, except that the law already passed be carried out. It is simply a direction to an administrative officer of the Government to go forward with the business of the corporation, which he, himself, says was terminated by his instruction. Some of the members of the board to whom his directions were given are holding and still hold subordinate positions under him. But the Secretary of the Treasury states that if the resolution before us is passed he will go forward with the business of the corporation, and that it will function along the lines originally intended. It is not my purpose to make harsh criticism of the Secretary of the Treasury for his action. Conditions then were vastly different from those with which it is our duty to deal at this time. The important thing is to deal wisely with the situation as it exists to-day.

Has any harm ever come from the operation of the corporation? Did its officers prove reckless and incompetent? Did they undertake to float securities to the embarrassment of the Government? Did they accept business indiscriminately and unwisely and extend credit to any unworthy enterprise? The record shows the reverse to be the case. The fact that the corporation was managed so conservatively and limited its business to such a small volume is even urged as argument against the revival of its operations. The fact is the gentlemen opposing the resolution answer one another. At one time they tell us that the corporation did not function or do business enough to accomplish the relief its proponents desire at this time. The next moment they seek to arouse apprehension that if the corporation resumes its activities the directors will go out and float bonds to the limit of their authority and involve the Government in schemes that will be embarrassing to the Treasury. The fact is neither contention is true. The record shows that the corporation was most conservatively managed; that none of the evils that have been pointed to in this discussion ever happened. During the period of operation the corporation sold only $200,000,000 of bonds. This issue of bonds, bearing interest at 5 per cent, was disposed of in five days, notwithstanding the fact that the press announced on the second day that the entire amount had been raised.

This fully justifies the opinion of Mr. Meyer, former managing director of the corporation, that the investing public would now gladly accept $200,000,000 of the corporation's bonds. The Secretary of the Treasury who had such potent voice in the conservative management of the corporation as it was formerly run entertains the same conservative views with respect to the wisdom of reviving it. He will still be in virtual control of the system when it resumes business. The corporation was doing a conservative, helpful business.

It has been contended that the revival of the corporation will interfere with the organization of corporations under the Edge Act. The fact is, as shown by the testimony in the hearings before the Banking and Currency Committee, the financiers now interested in the organization of the $100,000,000 corporation under the Edge law launched at Chicago recently and those interested in organizing the $6,000,000 corporation which is being formed at New Orleans, all favor the revival of the War Finance Corporation. They look to it for aid in inaugurating the new companies and in financing their undertakings.

Let me say just here that it is not contemplated that loans by the corporation shall be made to foreign Governments or citizens of foreign Governments, but loans are restricted to exporters in our own country.

All loans that have been made were made upon the indorsement of American exporters and banking institutions. The corporation suspended business on May 1, 1920. But shortly after the stopping of loans by the corporation our exports declined until the month of November, 1920, when there was an enormous decline of exports, especially agricultural products. It is true that there was an increase in the volume of our exports as expressed in dollars at the time of the action of the Secretary. Many people have been misled by figures showing our yearly exports, as expressed in dollars. The thing that really counts with the producer is the amount of products exported. The farmers produced cotton, corn, and wheat and other products. Attempt is made to show that the volume of exports is 25 per cent in excess of what it was before the war. But this is misleading. Exportation of cotton from September 24 to November 27, 1920, was 1,481,450 bales. It was about the same for the same period last year. Our cotton exports for the same period in 1913 were 3,837,139 bales, the year before that 3,808,429 bales, the year before that 3,710,514 bales, and the year before that—10 years ago—2,915,511 bales. This is a true statement and shows what our actual exports in cotton have been. It furnishes a good illustration of the entire situation.

The farmers of the country are not so much interested in securing credit to enable them to hold their products as they are in finding a market in which to sell their goods at a fair price. Farmers, merchants, bankers, and all classes in the wheat and cotton growing sections are suffering because of a lack of markets for their products and a general shutting down of business in consequence. Everyone in this body knows what conditions are throughout the country to-day. When the Secretary of the Treasury had the corporation cease functioning he said that the country was prosperous and unemployment negligible. This was set forth as the controlling reason of his action. Can anybody say that the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury is applicable to conditions at this time? Certainly, if there ever existed any necessity for an agency like this to bridge over the period between the termination of the war and the time when exports can be undertaken successfully without Government aid—if there ever was a time that such a policy was wise—who can deny that such is the case in the conditions that confront us now?

There is nothing in the contention that the resolution involves class legislation. We seek simply to revive the operation of a law which by its terms extended its benefits to all classes and all kinds of American products. Such was the kind of business the corporation engaged in while it operated, and such will be true of its future transactions. It is true the Senate resolution as originally drawn limits its application to products of the farmer. At the time the Senate Committee on Agriculture framed its resolution I offered a concurrent resolution in the House making the aid to be extended apply to all American goods, products from mines, farms, and factories, and the resolution before us has been amended so as to have the same broad application. It applies to all American goods, as well as to farm products.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes; if the gentleman will give me enough of his time in which to answer him.

Mr. McFADDEN. The gentleman agrees that the corporation has been functioning for the last year.

Mr. STEAGALL. Oh, no.

Mr. McFADDEN. For how long?

Mr. STEAGALL. It was functioning up to May 10, 1920.

Mr. McFADDEN. And during all that time it had capacity to lend to the extent of a billion dollars?

Mr. STEAGALL. Yes.

Mr. McFADDEN. How much aid, all told, was expended?

Mr. STEAGALL. The gentleman has the figures—$46,000,000 in actual loans were made, but the gentleman knows that the testimony before the committee shows that the greatest service rendered was in arranging for financing exportation by other institutions. That proof shows that in many cases the directors of the corporation helped applicants for loans to secure the desired accommodations from other sources. Such will be the case hereafter. The direct loans made is by no means a fair criterion by which to judge the benefits of the corporation. The gentleman in one breath seeks to alarm the House lest the Treasury become involved in business backed by its credit to the extent of $1,000,000,000, and yet in the next breath he makes objection to the resolution because he says it will do no business at all. First, the appeal is to those who think only of the money side of the proposition, then they turn to those who are seeking relief for the farmers of the country and tell them that the corporation will not do business enough to be of benefit.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will.

Mr. McFADDEN. Does the gentleman believe that the class of credits which are being offered now presents a dangerous situation? Is not that one response by the Secretary of the Treasury to gentlemen when he stated it to the committee in words to that effect?

Mr. STEAGALL. The record shows that a big part of the business of the directors was in rejecting applications for unsound credit. There was never more conservative management of any business than was that of the board of directors of this institution. Not a dollar was lost during the time of its operation. The corporation had pending and approved when it suspended operations applications for loans amounting to $100,000,000, 75 per cent of which were for agricultural purposes.

The proposals thus approved by the board were as follows: $17,500,000 of copper, $2,200,000 fabricated steel to Italy; $5,000,000 "Black Patch" tobacco from Tennessee and Kentucky, $4,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a large southern exporter; $25,000,000 cotton to Czechoslovakia for a group of southern bankers; $3,000,000 for cotton to Italy by a group of bankers; $9,000,000 by a group of bankers for export of cotton to Italy; $24,000,000 for the export of cotton by a syndicate of banks headed by one of the largest national banks in the United States; $2,400,000 by a group of bankers for coal to Italy; $4,000,000 by a group of bankers for cotton to Italy; $4,000,000 for ships to be bought or constructed in this country for Italy; in all, $100,000,000 in applications promising practical results with adequate security, according to the opinion of the directors of the War Finance Corporation.

No wonder that the sudden shutting down of the corporation under the circumstances when it was doing so much for American business should have had a depressing and demoralizing effect. It was helping every legitimate interest, as it will do when it starts its activities again.

All thoughtful men recognize that the farmers of the country prosper through the prosperity of the manufacturers; the manufacturers prosper through the prosperity of the farmers. The farmers are in a way dependent upon the bankers and the bankers are dependent upon the farmers. Every worthy class is interested in the success of every other legitimate line of endeavor. The resolution seeks to benefit every section and every interest in the country, and everybody knows that in every section there is crying need for relief, and all depend to some extent on our export trade. The prosperity of the entire Nation is involved in our export trade.

The talk we hear that nothing can be sold because nobody needs anything is absolutely fallacious. Why, we are told in the press reports to-day that 30,000,000 people are starving in one nation alone. They are a peaceful people, possessing vast resources, yet we are told nothing can be done to extend credit to them; that we can do nothing toward finding a market among them for our food supplies. Neither is true. Gentlemen, one of the most foolish things ever heard is this idle talk about overproduction. There is no overproduction of necessaries in this country to-day. [Applause.] God Almighty does not do things in a foolhardy way. There is not one more drop of water in the ocean than there ought to be, and there has never been a pound more cotton or corn or wheat yielded from the soil of this land than was best for mankind. [Applause.] It is mockery to treat the bounties and blessings of nature as a misfortune, and it is ridiculous to say that large crops are a curse. If such argument were true, we might ask if it would not be well to import a few more anarchists to burn and destroy some of them. There is nothing to it. [Applause.]

Much has been said in this discussion about cotton. I declare to you that I have never seen the time when the people in the cotton section, many of them women and children, both white and black, who toil with their hands to make this great crop, have had sufficient clothing to shield them from the winter winds even in that mild climate. What the world needs is proper facilities for the transportation and distribution of the products of the toil of man, and there has never been greater need for this throughout the world than there is to-day.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will.

Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania. Does the gentleman think that because we have two years' supply of wool in this country that anarchists ought to be imported here to burn it up?

Mr. STEAGALL. I will let the gentlemen of the House answer that in their own minds. If the gentleman had understood me fully, he would not have asked such a question. None of us wants that, and certainly there is no gentleman here who would make that statement.

Now, let us see. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McFADDEN] says the people voted to separate the Government from business of this kind. I want to ask the gentleman, if that is so, why it was that when we passed the bill this week repealing the laws enacted to aid in the prosecution of the war, the legislation providing for the establishment of the War Finance Corporation was specifically exempted from that measure? Only this week, gentlemen, has this House reaffirmed its attitude and opinion on this question. [Applause.]

I do not contend that the passage of the resolution will result in immediate and complete relief. It is always more difficult to cure than to prevent. It can not be doubted, however, that the discontinuance of the operation of the corporation had its part in the disturbance and destruction that have overtaken the values of agricultural commodities and which has affected seriously the bankers, merchants, and every legitimate interest. The corporation was created to deal with the very sort of situation that now confronts us. It is not class legislation. Every thoughtful man who knows the alphabet of economic affairs understands that our prosperity and progress depend upon the success of the farmers. But we seek to aid every legitimate interest in the Nation. What farmers of the Nation need, what bankers need, what the whole country needs is to start business to going in order that debts may be paid, confidence restored, and money released. This is the kind of credit deflation the country needs. To get it we must pay proper regard to our export trade. We are blessed with the most marvelous resources on earth. We are surrounded by plenty in all the things that should bless mankind. Mountains and mines have given up their treasures, our cattle feed upon a thousand hills. Our soil has yielded a prodigious harvest.

We have in abundance the food, fuel, and raiment for which the world stands in need. All that is required is a better system of marketing and distribution. This is the task that confronts us. Not to undertake it now involves a confession of bankruptcy of American statesmanship.

The Government should exhaust every effort to aid in working out the problems that have come with the emergencies attending the war. It has been demonstrated by experience during the time it was in operation that no evil effect may be feared from the resumption of the War Finance Corporation. The best brains of the Nation believe that the revival of its activities will be helpful in solving the difficulties which all recognize, and for which so many of us desire to find a remedy. The corporation is authorized to make loans to the extent of $1,000,000,000. The authorized use of such a fund for facilitating exports is bound to increase and stimulate business on every hand and will revive confidence and hope throughout the land. [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TINCHER].

Mr. TINCHER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I am not surprised after reading the recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury to this Congress as to our new tax law when he suspended the operation of this law and took $374,000,000 that was supposed to be used to carry on the export business of this country and retired a portion of our war debt within three weeks of the time that this Congress expressed itself in favor of saving the War Finance Corporation as a reconstruction law. It is, however, the only law that the Secretary of the Treasury suspended, the only war law that was to be carried out at the time we attempted to repeal the war laws, and we excepted it. I am surprised that any man, especially on this side of the House, would rise in his place and defend the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury. In my district we passed on this proposition, because I told them out there that the destruction of this law, the suspension of that law, passed in March, after the signing of the armistice the fall before, by the Secretary of the Treasury was in keeping with the Democratic administration, and was autocracy, unwarranted and unauthorized, and was working a hardship upon the people of my district, and it did. It has suspended everything, and there is no other agency, either private or public, to take its place. This Congress has been good to the Secretary of the Treasury, and passed a law that he recommended authorizing the creation of a private corporation to function during the reconstruction period, but because of his anxiety to deflate, not the currency, but the prices to the producer, in his anxiety to push his pet theory of paying some of the war debts right now, he took that money and, instead of retiring certificates which would be due in 60 or 90 days, he retired war bonds. He took that money out of the Treasury, without any authority of law to do it and used the credit on the books of the Treasury of this country, showing that the War Finance Corporation has that credit. Notwithstanding the fears of some of my colleagues as to the effect of the resumption of the War Finance Corporation, I do not think it can do any harm, and certainly the people of this country are entitled to have any good that might come from it. It is no class legislation. If it is class legislation, then what kind of class suspension did the Secretary of the Treasury, whom you so ably defend to-day, indulge in last May when he suspended this corporation?

I do not believe it and I challenge it. And while I can not be accused of being overfriendly to the attitude of the Secretary of the Treasury, I will not charge or indict him for suspending the only law that was in effect that affected the farmer, but if the resumption of that activity by this corporation is class legislation, then he was guilty of the vilest kind of class suspension.

He did not deflate the currency. He deflated the prices of farm products; he destroyed the prices and demoralized agriculture in every particular. I have not much confidence in the way this law will be administered in the future, judging the future by the past. Realizing the attitude the Secretary of the Treasury takes in the matter, I can not be as sanguine——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TINCHER. May I have one minute more?

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I yield one minute more to the gentleman.

Mr. TINCHER. Some one has said that the farmer wanted this law for temporary relief; that he wanted a tariff law for permanent relief. Well, give us this temporary relief, and I promise you that the prospects are fair that after the 4th day of March it will not take as many Congressmen to pass a tariff law as it does now. And we have the best prospect for a tariff law, that all my good friends are practically unanimous in wanting to-day, that we ever had. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 25 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE].

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, last week there gathered in the city of Chicago a conference assembled at the invitation of the president of the American Bankers' Association. The purpose of that conference was to develop a corporation with a maximum financial capacity, under the Edge law, of $1,000,000,000. As a result of that meeting, I find in the Chicago Tribune of December 12, Arthur M. Evans writing the article:

> The billion baby in the world's markets was born yesterday. The project to form a corporation of $100,000,000 capital and $1,000,000,000 capacity was adopted by the conference of finance, agriculture, industry, and business interests. A committee of 30 was appointed, and $100,000 to meet the expense of launching the project was raised in 10 minutes.

Upon the following day the Chicago News, in an editorial, said:

> Herbert S. Hoover described the Chicago conference of bankers, manufacturers, and farmers, which authorized the formation of a $100,000,000 corporation to help finance American foreign trade, as the most momentous since the armistice.

The most momentous since the armistice! At the very time when this corporation is in process of formation the Congress of the United States is asked to do precisely the same thing, with precisely the same limitation on investment—$1,000,000,000.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How far has this organization or corporation under the Edge law progressed in its formation?

Mr. LUCE. Last week, the report says, it raised $100,000 in 10 minutes for the preliminary expenditures.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. How far have they gotten along in doing business? When will they be ready to make loans and extend credits?

Mr. LUCE. I do not know. I know the initial steps have been taken.

I desire to call to the attention of the committee the contrast between these situations, and ask them to consider if they ever had a more definite or clear chance to choose between progress by the Government and progress by individual initiative. Mind you, these corporations, one a Government corporation the other a corporation started by private citizens, have the same limitation upon their possibilities—$1,000,000,000. What is the contrast in the raising of their capital? Here you contemplate putting your hand into the Public Treasury and taking from the taxpayers of the country, or adding to the country's debt, to raise a capital of $500,000,000. That is the way the Government proceeds, or the way you direct your Secretary of the Treasury to proceed, namely, to take the money of the taxpayers for your capital. That involves no exertion whatever, it requires no initiative, no personal activities on the part of those soliciting subscriptions. Did any gentleman ever engage in starting a corporation find himself confronted by a more attractive method of raising capital than by passing a law in the House of Representatives and in the Senate and have it signed by the President? All you have to do is to draw from the Treasury your capital. On the other hand, the private citizens organizing for such a purpose have to go out and get the capital subscribed.

What happens next? You say to the public corporation, "Your shares and your bonds shall have tax exemptions," and you say to your private corporation, "If you succeed in inducing people to invest money in your enterprise, they shall pay taxes." In other words, you give a bonus at the very outset to your public corporation, you put a handicap on your private corporation.

It is known by those on the inside that the bonds of your public corporation are not to be guaranteed by the United States. The $500,000,000 of capital is a guaranty, but there may be $500,000,000 without guaranty by the Government. Almost every small buyer of bonds will think them guaranteed. Indeed, your Secretary of the Treasury has pointed out that the bonds can not be sold unless they have behind them the guaranty of the United States Government. Your private corporation has no such guaranty. Your private corporation has the guaranty of the money paid in as capital stock, but beyond that none, as I understand it.

Under these circumstances, gentlemen, let us next confront the element of risk. Let us next ask ourselves whether we may prudently hazard the money of the people in this emergency.

Let me call your attention to the facts of the condition in Europe, to which most of this exportation is to be made. Let me ask you solemnly to reflect as to whether you believe you are warranted in your official capacity in extending the public credit further to the consumers of Europe—for that is what this means in the last analysis.

Of course, it goes through the form of being loaned to the exporter and accrues to the benefit of the producer, but in the last analysis the money is loaned to the consumer in Europe; and what has Europe been doing in these two years since the armistice to show that we ought to intrust to her another billion dollars of credit? The statisticians inform us that the additions to the debt of the world—and that is for much the greater part European—were $44,000,000,000 in the first year after the armistice, and that they were $42,000,000,000 in the second year after the armistice, so that they have increased in these two years from $212,000,000,000 to the stupendous figure of $300,000,000,000. At the same time these countries to which it is proposed to extend this credit have been working the printing presses to their utmost capacity in grinding out paper currency. At the conclusion of the armistice the paper money of the world, nearly all European, amounted to $43,000,000,000. A year later it was $55,000,000,000, and two years later it was $82,000,000,000. At the present moment the paper money of the world has behind it only 9 cents in gold for every dollar in paper.

May not that give pause to gentlemen who think that we might, offhand, hastily, without great reflection, hazard a billion dollars more of our credit in these investments? But it may be—it may well be—that private individuals, private exporters, may desire to take the risk and be willing to take the risk which as holders of a public trust it would be unwise and improper for us to take. Why not leave this to the men who are willing to take the risk and stake their own money rather than make it perhaps impossible for them to function by putting in competition with them an organization based upon the taxpayers' money in part, with the taxpayers' guaranty in part, with the advantage of tax exemption and functioning as a Government institution?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the distinguished gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Always with the greatest pleasure.

Mr. BLANTON. Take a cattleman, for instance, who as the result of a lifetime of work owns 50,000 acres of land, who has borrowed from the bank $80 a head to buy 10,000 head of aged steers at $90 a head to pasture on his land and to mature for the market. He has the grass and water to fatten and mature them. That paper is class A paper with the Federal reserve bank. It is as good as gold anywhere. If he can mature those steers and put them on the market fat he has made a good profit, as they would likely sell for $100 to $110 each. The member bank feels perfectly safe in lending $80 a head on such steers, costing $90 a head, when there is plenty of grass and water to mature them. Then the Federal bank right now, at a time when the cattle are not fat—when, if the cowman could hold them a couple of months, the cattle would get fat, and he could then put them on the market at a profit—the Federal reserve bank requires that money to be paid in now, and the member bank from which he borrows the money forces him to ship those immature steers and put them on the market unfattened, when they will not bring more than, say, $60, and not anything like the money he has borrowed from the bank, and at one fell swoop he is caused to lose every dollar of his earnings of a whole lifetime. Does not the distinguished gentleman think the Government ought to help do something in that emergency at the present time? That is the situation that prevails with the stockmen, and a worse situation prevails with respect to the farmer.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman presents a very interesting hypothetical question which has no relation to the question I am discussing.

Mr. BLANTON. Oh, the distinguished gentleman from Massachusetts may become exhausted some day physically, but he never will mentally. [Laughter.]

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Taking it for granted that the risks attendant are as great as the gentleman has said, does the gentleman believe that private enterprise would go into this business if the risks are such as he has pictured? Do I make myself clear?

Mr. LUCE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes himself very clear, and presents the most embarrassing question that can be asked of me. My personal views in this matter and my personal apprehensions are of such a nature that I am wondering whether I should be rendering a public service if I spread them on the record. I have been told so many times of the psychological damage done at a time like this by statements that may not prove to be warranted by facts, but are statements of opinion on the part of persons in such positions as the gentleman and myself occupy, that I do not think that I ought to put my personal judgment into the record, but that I ought to confine myself to the one thing: If there be risk, it shall be better borne by private citizens than by representatives of the taxpayers. You have the private citizens at hand ready and willing to take this risk, organizing to take this risk. Why plunge the Treasury of the United States into that which the private citizen is ready to do?

Mr. DEWALT. As I understand the gentleman's answer to my question it is this: That while he has an opinion on this subject, he does not believe that it is expedient for him to give it?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. I do.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I understood a while ago that it was the gentleman's contention that this bill would raise revenue. If it would raise revenue there would not be any risk in extending the credit of the Government.

Mr. LUCE. The gentleman misunderstands me. I meant to say that it could raise revenue.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Another question. As to the hypothetical question propounded by my colleague [Mr. BLANTON], as to throwing these cattle on the market that are not mature, does the gentleman think the public interest would be promoted by allowing those cattle to be matured and developed into better beef, and that ultimately the public interest would be promoted by doing so?

Mr. LUCE. I have not the slightest doubt of that. I wish it could be done; but the representatives of that industry came before our committee and said this bill would not directly help one iota toward that end. They said it would help general business, and that if it helped general business it would benefit the cattle raiser, as it would benefit everybody else, but that this bill was not the remedy.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does the gentleman mean that the representatives of the cattle interests said they did not want this bill?

Mr. LUCE. No; they said if this bill helped the general business situation they were for it.

Mr. JONES of Texas. If it will help the general business situation, is not the gentleman for it?

Mr. LUCE. I am not for helping the general business situation temporarily, with the certainty of ultimate damage, any more than I advocate the taking of alcohol for the temporary stimulation of the human body.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Does not the gentleman think the work of this corporation heretofore has resulted in advantage both to the Government and to the general public as it was operated when it was heretofore in full force and effect?

Mr. LUCE. If the gentleman would read the statement of the Secretary of the Treasury he would find, if my memory does not deceive me, that this corporation was of service during that period of uncertainty immediately after the conclusion of the war, when it was feared that exports would fall off because they could not be financed, but presently it was found that private initiative was equal to the exigency and that it was no longer necessary to hazard the public funds. It did function usefully until the needlessness of its further continuance was shown by experience.

Mr. JONES of Texas. I will state in that connection that I am not willing to accept the Secretary of the Treasury as the final authority on that subject.

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. BRAND. The gentleman does not want to go on record as stating, does he, that the witnesses who testified before the House Committee on Banking and Currency stated that the revival of this corporation would not help the situation generally?

Mr. LUCE. Oh, no. Their judgment was that it might help the situation generally.

Mr. BRAND. I will ask the gentleman if all of them, except Secretary Houston, did not testify that it would help the situation all over the country?

Mr. LUCE. Without examining the record I could not affirm that my friend speaks with complete precision in that particular. They had different degrees of optimism in the matter.

Mr. BRAND. My recollection is that Secretary Houston was the only one who testified before our committee that it would not help the general situation all over the country.

Mr. HUSTED. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. HUSTED. Was it made very clear before the committee that private funds were not available for the financing of any export trade that did not involve undue risk?

Mr. LUCE. It was not.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield for a question?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. Will it embarrass the gentleman at all in his address to the House to touch upon the consequence of inflation of credit and the inevitable future consequence of the rise of prices all along the line?

Mr. LUCE. It will not embarrass me at all. That is a part of my address to which I was approaching through the tortuous channels of interrogation. [Laughter.] I am informed on the best of authority that the utmost limit of inflation possible under this bill is $2,500,000,000. Understand, I do not predict that this limit will be reached, but in facing legislation it is necessary to take into account the extreme possibility.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUCE. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is that ascertainable by some kind of calculation?

Mr. LUCE. It is.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman state briefly how that is ascertainable?

Mr. LUCE. I am always doubtful of myself when I attempt to follow the intricacies of the Federal Reserve System, but as I understand it—and I hope gentlemen will forgive me if I find out I am wrong and change this in the RECORD—as I understand it, this corporation can loan up to $1,000,000,000; that this $1,000,000,000 issued in the shape of bonds or certificates, or whatever form it takes, and lent to exporters, can by them be taken to the banks and pledged as collateral for credit in the banks; that the banks can then take this $1,000,000,000 of securities to the Federal reserve bank and rediscount them, in consequence of which rediscounting process Federal reserve notes are issued to the bank rediscounting the paper, and that then, built upon these Federal reserve notes, reissued, can be pyramided other credit of the same sort until a maximum expansion or inflation of $2,500,000,000 is reached.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. WINGO. I want to suggest to the gentleman that in revising his remarks he had better look up the law. My impression is that that paper could not be rediscounted.

Mr. LUCE. I think it is in the law.

Mr. WINGO. I differ with the gentleman, but he may be correct.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES].

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I take it for granted there is no question about the conditions existing in the agricultural sections of the country at this time necessitating some remedy. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE], though opposed to the resolution, says that the condition is such that last week bankers met in Chicago in what he calls a most momentous meeting, to organize a bank under the Edge law to render assistance in the exportation of products. Europeans want our goods, but because of the exchange conditions are unable to pay cash and can purchase only if our exporters can grant long-term credits. This the exporters can not do unless they in turn can finance their bills, and they can not finance them except through the War Finance Corporation or such banks as are proposed at the Chicago meeting referred to.

If such banks were in existence to-day, or if it was possible to perfect such organizations in such short time as to cause them to immediately function, they could perform the service necessary to relieve the situation. But the two corporations now in process of organization under the Edge law can not hope to begin business for several months, while the War Finance Corporation is in existence and can function immediately. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LUCE] is enthusiastic in advocating the functioning of the Edge banks, but the business which he urges the business men of America to engage in he believes extremely hazardous for the War Finance Corporation to engage in. He intimates there is question as to the character of the security that is offered to American exporters. The testimony before the House and Senate committees is that ample security was secured during the period of its operation and can now be secured if the corporation resumes business. And then there is this material difference, that while the Edge law bank accepts the collateral of the foreign purchaser, backed usually by a syndicate of foreign banks and at times by the foreign governments, under the law the War Finance Corporation can lend only to persons or corporations doing business in this country, and it accepts only such loans as have been previously accepted by American exporters, and in addition requires in nearly every case that the paper of the exporter be underwritten by American bankers, and relies for its repayment upon the guaranty of American bankers.

In the minority report the opponents of the resolution state in one paragraph:

> The seriousness of the risk has been shown by the hesitation of American financiers to take advantage of the Edge law and organize for the purpose of doing the very thing this resolution contemplates. Because private capital will not do the thing in any important degree we are asked to hazard the public capital.

And then they answer their own objection in another paragraph in this language:

> Since the armistice it is estimated that private credit has been able to finance foreign lending through commercial channels to the huge extent of between three and four billion dollars. There is no proof that its resources are exhausted.

Now, as to the source from which the corporation will get its funds. It has to its credit on the books of the Treasury $376,000,000. This is part of the capital of the corporation. The fact that the Secretary of the Treasury invested the capital in Treasury certificates does not change the fact that this is the capital of the corporation and is to its credit to-day. If the corporation resumes business it could demand this capital or issue its bonds. It is agreed by all that it should function as it did before, by issuing bonds. The corporation issued $200,000,000 bonds at 5 per cent, and the entire issue was sold within five days notwithstanding the fact that on the second day a great press agency announced that the issue had been entirely subscribed on the previous day. The former managing director, Mr. Meyer, asserts that a similar issue of $200,000,000 can be floated without difficulty. But opponents say if this is done it will interfere with the Treasury issues. Well, this morning's financial news advises us that the issue of Treasury certificates floated this week was on the first day oversubscribed to the extent of $3,000,000, which would indicate that there is an investment market for such securities at this time.

But the gentleman from Massachusetts states that it would cause a great expansion of credits. Well, let me read the statement of Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board. He was asked by Mr. Meyer:

> If the War Finance Corporation could assist in the exportation of $250,000,000 or $300,000,000 or $500,000,000, say, of additional exports, whatever the exports may be, if that much more could be added, on a sound basis, and we had $100,000,000 of obligations from sound concerns, some of them through new corporations to be formed, your idea is, taking the same ratio, four or five times that amount, that would liquidate $2,500,000,000 of credit now frozen in this country.

Wouldn't that add the biggest thing you could do to relieve the whole situation in this country in the matter of credit strain? That is what I want to know.

Mr. HARDING. I think undoubtedly it would relieve the banks a good deal.

This is not a proposal to advance credit to enable persons to hold products. It is a proposal to advance credit in order to assist in selling our products. It will aid in providing a market for products for which there is now no market. It will enable the farmer to pay his bank and his bank to pay the regional reserve bank and thus reduce instead of expand credits. It will aid in the cancellation of debts and start the machinery of business. I hope the resolution will be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, let no one be alarmed by the contention that this is class legislation. Let us consider not only the preamble but the exact language of the resolution. It reads as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes.

Whereas there exists in the agricultural sections of the country unprecedented and unparalleled distress on account of the inability of the farmers to dispose of the corn, wheat, cotton, wool, live stock, and other commodities now in marketable condition at prices that will pay the cost of production; and

Whereas the people of Europe are in dire need of the agricultural products now in possession of the farmers of this country, but are unable to purchase on account of existing financial conditions; and

Whereas, under an act of Congress, there was established the War Finance Corporation for the purpose of financing the exportation of American products to foreign markets; and

Whereas the activities of the War Finance Corporation were suspended in May, 1920, by an order of the Secretary of the Treasury; and

Whereas the banks of the country are unable to extend credit to the farmer in order that the farm products may be held until they can be sold in a fair and reasonable market: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation are hereby directed to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets.

The activities of the War Finance Corporation during the few months that it was in operation show very clearly that it was not operated in behalf of any particular class of citizens. For instance, there was advanced to assist in the exportation of agricultural implements $4,000,000; to assist in the exportation of condensed milk, $5,000,000; in the exportation of cotton, $9,322,117.27; of electrical equipment and supplies, $10,796,537; grain, flour, and foodstuffs, $12,229,000; and of locomotives, $5,000,000. This makes a total of $46,347,654.27, and out of that total approximately $19,800,000 was advanced to assist in the export of manufactured products and $26,500,000 was advanced for financing the exportation of agricultural products. That is practically the relation that manufactured products and agricultural products in this country bear to one another.

This is the revival of legislation in behalf of all of the industries of the country. Of the $26,000,000 advanced in behalf of agricultural products, fully one-half is sooner or later going to find its way into the till of the manufacturer. Our farmers are suffering great financial losses, even bankruptcy, at this time, and justice demands that we do everything within the power of Congress to facilitate the marketing of their crops at reasonable prices and thus preserve their financial solvency.

I shall support this measure trusting it will bring some relief to the farmers of the State of Washington and the entire country.

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, the Doorkeeper will close the doors, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration Senate joint resolution 212, finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, that 277 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he handed in the names of the absentees to be recorded in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, this matter presents itself to me somewhat like this: We have the goods, the people in Europe have the want. They desire our goods, but they can only purchase them by payment in cash, by credit, or by exchange. They can not pay the cash. They can not give us in exchange sufficient in the way of goods to enable them to purchase the produce which we desire to sell to them. They can obtain from us the goods which we wish to sell and which they wish to buy only on credit, but the individuals in our country or the corporations seeking to make the sales to Europe can not themselves carry credit lines sufficient to enable them to proceed with sales without taking all of their ready cash. The only way in which they can furnish sufficient credit to the people in Europe to make the purchase from us is by having the investing public in America take up these lines of credit and carry them. If the War Finance Board can loan money to the people making the exports to Europe and then in turn issue their bonds and the American investing public will purchase those bonds, that credit is furnished.

I know of no other way to furnish the credit unless it be by large corporations organized by the investing public in America. If such corporations are organized and succeed they would relieve to the extent they were successful any demand or drain upon the Finance Corporation. I am one of those who believe as far as practicable the Government ought to stop standing in the way of the operation of the law of supply and demand, but I appreciate that in the present conditions in the world it is impossible to furnish the credit that is necessary in order for us to sell goods to those who need and want them without some aid from the Government. While I do not know how effective it will be, because it depends in the end upon the willingness of the investing public in America to loan its money or credit in Europe, I hope it may be successful. I do not see how it can do harm and I see how it can be of great benefit. [Applause.]

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOULD].

Mr. GOULD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have not in the few years I have been here taken up very much time on the floor of this House, but to-day in listening to the debate it occurs to me that many Members of the House do not seem to comprehend, and certainly I have not heard it very clearly explained, the manner in which the average export business and credit is handled. The export bills which may be issued by the banks for any food products that are sold by the producer or the produce buyer go, of course, to the bank, and as I understand by our present banking system eventually lodge in the Federal Reserve System. If we are going to sell our products to Europe, as the gentleman from Illinois said a few minutes ago, there are just three methods by which the produce which we have to sell can be paid for—by cash, credit, or exchange of goods. Business men and bankers with whom I have talked within the last few months seem to feel that the future of the country and of business—and that affects everyone from the producer of crops down to the ultimate consumer—can best be served by getting back to the policy of having our regular channels restored, and of going back, to use an expression that we heard in the recent campaign, to "normal." But so far as the War Finance Corporation is concerned I would like to ask the committee as to the nature of the securities which have been given to the War Finance Corporation in connection with the loans which they have made during the war and as to whether or not this committee of the House and the Treasury Department are satisfied that the loans made and the securities given are as good as a Government corporation should expect. I notice here in the report of the committee that we have sold fabricated steel to Italy; we have sold cotton to Czechoslovakia, cotton to Italy, coal to Italy, and so forth; and I do not know whether the committee cares to go on record as answering the question. My motive for it is this: Why not have the future export business handled by and along regular channels through the relation of bankers—our bankers have bank connections in Europe—and let the security be examined, and let our whole program of foreign finance be handled by those who are in contact with conditions. What is the sense in continuing a policy which, and I raise the question, may or may not be satisfactory? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, there is only one speech on this side. I will use my time or the gentleman can use his time as he pleases. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 25 minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, this is not a question on which there are not two sides. There is a very reasonable, or at least plausible, argument, I think, for the resolution, and I think a very sound argument against the resolution. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] very briefly stated the argument in favor of some kind of method of financing our exports. The bill in its essence is this: It provides a means whereby money or credit can be raised—we will call it money—money can be raised from the American people and, directly or indirectly, however you may care to term it, loaned to people in foreign countries, so that those people in foreign countries may buy American products. That is the whole essence of the resolution.

The advocates of the resolution feel—and there is reason for them to feel—that this process will result something like this: That the money will come from the American investor to the War Finance Corporation, be loaned by the War Finance Corporation to banks or to exporters, and by the exporters, through some process, loaned to the foreigner; that the foreigner, through the credit obtained in that way, will buy the goods of the American—cotton, wheat, and other exported commodities—and in that way trade will be resumed in this country; that the cotton owner will dispose of at least part of his present crop, and so with the wheat man and others having commodities to sell; that, once a movement in these commodities starts, business will be resumed and the whole country will be benefited.

I think that is a fair statement of the argument for the resolution, and, so far as that goes, I think I would not take issue with the statement that the thing can possibly be done and done properly.

If I were to take any other position I should take a position in direct contradiction to the position I took upon this floor when I argued for the passage of what we termed the Edge bill. There is law on the books to-day and there has been law on the books for a full year whereby this very thing could be done. Practically nothing has been done, however. I am opposed to this resolution for several reasons. I am opposed to it, first of all, because I think it is time the Government got out of the banking business. I think it is time that we stopped these artificial props of which we had so many during the war, of which we have had some since the war, and which have inevitably led to the signs of trouble and possible disaster that we see confronting us to-day. If we had followed economic laws in larger degree during and subsequent to the war, the country would not be in the bad condition it is to-day. Whenever anybody got into trouble or saw any trouble facing him immediately he ran to the Government and asked for some legislation or help whereby he could tide over his difficulties. And as a result, through all these artificial processes, through this failure to live up to economic principles, we are in trouble.

Now, my belief is that the sooner we face things as they are and the sooner we resort to sound economic principles the sooner we will return to normal ways of doing things and the sooner the country will get back on its feet and start from a sound foundation.

To illustrate how various interests appeal to the Government, the sheep growers came before our committee the other day. They did not advocate this particular resolution, but they said it would help them indirectly. This is the condition of the woolgrower: The price of his product has dropped amazingly. The bottom has dropped out of the market. We have had importations of sheep and the products of sheep and of wool from foreign countries, so that to-day there is no market in this country for those products. How is the woolgrower going to be helped by this or any other financial legislation until the price of his product goes up? It is no secret. Everybody here knows that in many of our commodities some of the banks, at least—I will be moderate and not be an alarmist—some of the banks have loaned on commodities more than those commodities will bring on the market to-day. What are we going to do? Are we going to loan more and more on commodities already pledged on loans exceeding their market value? Anybody can see the fallacy of that. And when I put the question to every single one of the men representing the sheep industry who testified before us they replied, "Legislation of this kind, financial legislation of any kind, is of no use to us unless we can raise the price of our product; and that we can do only by embargo and subsequently a protective tariff." Are we going to help them by this resolution? It is evident that we will not help them by this kind of a resolution. We may help the cotton men; we may help the wheat men. We may do that if people will start Edge corporations and buy the bonds. That is the natural way.

Let me point out why people want this kind of legislation and do not want to wait for Edge corporations. In the first place, the Government is behind this proposition. No matter what anybody says, the Government is guaranteeing these bonds, in effect, to the extent of 50 per cent of their possible issue. Under the law, if this is passed, the War Finance Corporation can issue a billion dollars of bonds. The Government is obligated to the amount of $500,000,000 of stock. If, therefore, the bonds for any reason do not prove worth their face value, the owners of those bonds can come back on the Government to the extent of $500,000,000. Somebody will say to-day there is no danger of that, because this corporation will take good security. I want to ask some of you men from the cotton districts and some of you men from the wheat districts what some of your banks have done as to the extent of loans upon commodities during the past year or two years; what some of your eminent bankers have done; how far they are overextended on commodity loans? You are not telling us that the men who are running those institutions and who have been looked upon as men of good judgment are now carrying heavier loads than they should carry. I do not say that in criticism of those men. Quite the contrary.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts yield to the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. PHELAN. No; I can not yield.

Mr. YOUNG of Texas. I thought you asked a question. Will you not let me answer it?

Mr. PHELAN. I wanted to point out that men who heretofore have been considered men of good judgment, and men of good judgment to-day, have mistaken this whole general situation and have become involved to a greater extent than they ever should have become involved. The same situation arises with respect to this War Finance Corporation act. Who can say what securities Europe shall have to offer us? There is nobody that I know of who is authorized to speak for those countries. Who will tell us of the sound securities they have? They had at Brussels a conference recently, and one of the great troubles and difficulties and perplexities they had was to find the kind of securities upon which they could get credit from anybody in the world. Take any country you wish in central Europe—I will not mention the names of any—that are at present involved. Do you gentlemen here want to take securities from those countries, or the people of those countries, when the very stability of their Governments is uncertain, when you do not know what is going to happen to those countries politically?

Yet, what does this proposition involve? We go to the American people and we say to the American people, "We want your money to loan to people in Poland; we want your money to loan to people in Czechoslovakia; and we want it to loan to France and Italy, and all of those countries, so that they can buy American products.

Everybody knows that that will not be said with reference to the War Finance Corporation bonds. Everybody knows that this will be the process: Let us take two cases. I am a bond salesman, and I go up to you and I say, "Here, I represent an Edge corporation. I have some bonds to sell. We have a capital of so much. We invest in foreign securities, as we are doing an export trade or helping the export trade. We issue bonds. Back of those bonds is our capital and surplus, and back of those bonds are securities of foreign countries, perhaps of traction companies, manufactories, mills, or what not; but those are the securities behind the bonds we want to sell you. Will you buy those bonds? It is very important that you and other investors shall buy those bonds, so that they can buy our products."

Think what the average American is likely to say. He may say to me, "Let us see. There is a great deal of trouble over there. What do I know about those countries? I guess I had better hold back a while and see what is going to develop."

Now, suppose, in the other case, I am a salesman trying to sell War Finance Corporation bonds, and I bring in those War Finance Corporation bonds to you. What do I say to you? Do I tell you that story? It is the same story in effect; the purpose is the same. But, no; I say, "Here is the War Finance Corporation bond. In the first place, this War Finance Corporation can not issue more than $1,000,000,000. The United States Government is behind it to the extent of $500,000,000. There is 50 per cent."

A Member of Congress, reflecting, as I think, the view of other Members before our committee, stated that the Government would have a moral obligation to the full extent of that bond issue, because the Government would never let the holder of a War Finance Corporation bond lose anything on his investment. The Secretary of the Treasury, standing before our committee, said the same thing, so that I might add, as an argument, the Government has a moral obligation. I can say, "You will never lose anything by it." I will say to you, "Here is a good bond, practically a United States bond. Will you buy it?"

You as an investor might well say, "Yes; I will buy that; I will be glad to buy that." The argument suggested can be used two ways. It might be urged that we can raise money, perhaps, this way when we can not do it the other way. On the other hand, when I am helping to pass legislation, I would like to have the people of the country know what they are doing if they act as a result of our legislation. If they are entering into a big policy of great consequence they should know it, and I say to you that when you sell the War Finance Corporation bonds the people will not know what the policy behind it is.

When you sell them Edge corporation bonds they will know what the purpose is. If they want to encourage that kind of policy they can buy the Edge corporation bonds, but they are not engaging in any policy knowingly and consciously relative to foreign financing when they buy the War Finance Corporation bonds.

I am opposed to the resolution for that reason. I think when we enter into that kind of policy, the people of the country ought to know the policy in which we are engaging when they invest money. Some of the Members from the farming districts were opposing the Edge corporation bill because they did not want to see American money, when needed at home, used in building up foreign manufactures and foreign industries.

Frankly I am not in entire sympathy with their point of view; but that was their point of view, and the people of the country have a right to know what this policy back of the War Finance Corporation is, and they will not know it if we have this War Finance Corporation, because they will think that these are Government bonds.

Mr. McFADDEN. Are these Edge corporation bonds to be tax exempt?

Mr. PHELAN. No. I was coming to that. Now, the Government is behind these bonds. In addition, they are to be on practically the same basis, so far as tax exemptions are concerned, as Victory notes. I am opposed again to repeated tax exemptions. Somebody may say to me, "Why did you vote for the farm loan act?" I voted for it because I could not have everything I wanted in that act; but I always was opposed to the tax-exemption feature, so far as the national income-tax law was concerned, of farm loan bonds.

Where are we going to stop? Last night I picked up the Washington Times and I saw on one page, boxed in a prominent place, the statement that a movement was on foot to bring about legislation whereby the bonds of the so-called Edge corporation should be tax exempt from the Federal income tax, the argument being used that we ought to encourage our people to put the money in these channels to help the foreigner to buy American goods.

We all know that there has been considerable agitation in this country for the Government to issue tax-exempt securities to enable people to build homes. Your Committee on Ways and Means is trying every possible way it can to raise money, and here the Congress of the United States is making provision for the output of a possible $1,000,000,000 of tax-exempt, or at least in some degree tax-exempt, war finance bonds.

Where is the thing going to stop? If we keep on, everybody has a good argument to float tax-exempt securities for one or another purpose. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] very aptly said—and I do not disagree with him—that there are people in Europe who want to buy but who have not the means. This furnishes the means.

I come from a city of practically 100,000 people. There are people walking the streets of that city who want to buy things. So it is in all our large cities. They want to buy coal and food and clothing, but they can not buy any of those things because they are loafing, out of employment. Now, why not have the Government lend them money? They are good, honest people. They are hard-working people. Why not have the Government loan them money so that they can get through this winter? Is that a wild proposition?

What security have they to offer? They have the security that honest people have, that they will pay back, that they have sound bodies, that they have honest purposes. Oh, no; you can not lend on those things, it is urged. How do you know that you have any better security over in Europe?

I am opposed to this resolution for another reason, which that suggests to my mind, that before we empower the Government to embark on this kind of a proposition there ought to be some satisfactory evidence presented by experts, by somebody who knows, before a committee of this House, as to what the conditions are in Europe, and as to what is their power and ability to pay, now or at any other time.

This resolution provides for the issuance of bonds, from one year to five years. Suppose we issue one-year bonds. Mr. Meyer suggested that they would probably issue a great many one-year bonds. He suggested that as an answer to my objection about the tax exemption, saying that they would not last very long, because a great many of these bonds would be one-year bonds. Does anybody think the people of Europe who get credit are going to pay a large sum of this money in one year? Anybody who knows the situation knows that they can not do it. The Government has loaned already between nine and ten million dollars, money raised from the people of this country. Now, this proposition, to be sure, does not provide for the loaning of money to foreign Governments, directly by the Government, but it does provide for what is similar, for loaning the money of our people to European people at some place, somewhere, on the security of the bonds that in many respects are similar to, if not indeed essentially, Government bonds.

That may be all right; but I say that before we embark on the proposition we ought to know what the class of securities are and what they can give us and whether they can ever pay back the loan under this bill. No evidence has been presented in regard to it, and when we asked for time the advocates of the resolution said we were trying to block the resolution. The first meeting of the committee after Congress convened was last Tuesday morning. They asked that the resolution be taken up, and there was no objection to it, but when we asked that we might hear the bankers and some of the importers they said that we were trying to block the legislation.

Now, I do not want to block legislation; I want to see all good legislation pass. But I say the House ought not to pass this legislation. The point I am making is that you ought not to be misled by the simple statement of what is desired by this law. It is all right to use American money to buy American products for use in a proper way, but I do not think it is right for us to keep the Government in the banking business.

I will agree that many of the things the proponents say are true, but I do want to see us return to the old economic conditions where the economic rule worked well.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PHELAN. Yes.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. When we passed the act there were not the same activities. Does not that suggest to the gentleman that we ought to try his plan?

Mr. PHELAN. It suggests to the gentleman that if there was need of it, and the enterprise of the American people and the funds of the American people were ready to go into the business, we would have the Edge corporation before this. We have had the law on the statute books a year. Where were the growers of cotton, the growers of wheat? Why did not somebody initiate and start the proposition? The thing they are afraid of is that the American people will not embark on the enterprise, and so they want the Government to hold the bag. Advocates of this resolution state that the Edge corporations have not been formed because the War Finance Corporation was not functioning; they would have been started if it had been functioning. Why do they take that position? Because they are afraid the people will not buy the Edge corporation bonds, but they will buy what they think are Government bonds. Once the War Finance Corporation gets the money, the incorporators of the Edge corporation think they can get it from the War Finance Corporation.

I have no objection to the exporters of wheat or the exporters of cotton or anything else getting all reasonable help, but I do object to having everybody, when he gets into trouble, come to the Government and say, "Here, you carry the load." No matter what anybody says, when the Government gets behind a proposition like this, when it gives up its credit to the extent of $500,000,000, it is so much more of a strain on the credit of the Nation.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. The Edge law was not designed for the exporters, but for the service of the public. If that does not function, does not the gentleman think we ought to try something else?

Mr. PHELAN. I think we ought to stop coming to the Government every time we get into trouble. If you can not follow the economic channels, if you can not promote foreign trade, if you can not build up a corporation to do the things that ought to be done under the natural economic forces, it is the best evidence that if you try to apply artificial pressure you are flying in the face of the economic laws and bound to fail.

I am opposed to the resolution because I think the Government should get out of the business of conducting foreign trade or export financing, because we should stop now further extension of tax-exempt securities, because we should cease the use of expedients and artificial supports to meet an essentially unsound condition, because we should get back to normal and natural methods and proceed in accordance with sound economic principles, because the Government is already charged with sufficient burden of indebtedness, and this burden, whether actual or contingent, should not be added, because if at any time the War Finance Corporation bonds should be carried by the banks or forced upon the banks we should have further inflation and further subsequent disaster, because, as other branches of commerce and trade are likewise in distress, they have an equal right to receive Government aid and this legislation is discriminatory, because it is hopeless for the Government to put its credit behind all who need credit, and because once the Government embarks again upon this business no one can predict to what extent the Government may become involved nor for what period of time, and the War Finance Corporation may become a fixture for years to come.

The country has paid enormously for its defiance of economic laws. Let us once more act in accord with these laws and avoid further inevitable troubles. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, there are a few objections to this resolution which merit consideration. One is that it will not accomplish what is expected of it. The other is that we will be in danger of giving credits to European peoples that will not be secured, and therefore the Government will meet with loss. I do not think that either argument is justified. Gentlemen seem to think that this is only a measure for the benefit of a certain class of people. I hardly think that it is proper or consistent to take that proposition as true. It is not for the purpose of assisting any particular class of people; it is really for the purpose of relieving the stagnation of business in this country. If the primary products of the country, upon which all of the industry of the country rests, upon which all of the commercial interests of the country rest, can be marketed or exported, it means that the whole business of the country will be stimulated and will get into activity. It is not primarily, or principally, even, for the benefit of those who are the producers of the primary products. It is because, unless we can have a market for the primary products of the country, all of the industry of the country will remain stagnated.

I believe also that there is no, or, at least, very little, foundation for the argument that these credits will be extended to peoples or to institutions in foreign countries that are not solvent. It should be remembered that the War Finance Corporation does not loan to the manufacturers in foreign countries; it does not loan even to foreign countries themselves. The banks and the exporters are the people to whom we, the Government of the United States, extend credit. Certainly we know and will know, the Government will know, the War Finance Corporation will know, to whom to make these loans. They will know whether they are solvent or not, and no credits will be extended except to solvent banks and to solvent exporting corporations or individuals. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] has suggested delay. He says we should have more information before taking action. The gentleman has enlightened the House. He has told us of the thousands of people unemployed and walking the streets in his own city. What is true of his city is true, I believe, pretty much all over the country, and I believe it fair to say that millions of people are out of employment. Another sad situation so far as the farmer is concerned is that the price paid to the producers of farm products has been cut in two, and the price charged to the consumer has enhanced 19 per cent in the last year. For instance, coal is selling in my district at $20 a ton, and corn is selling at less than $8 a ton. The price on the lower quality of live stock is so low that it is selling in Chicago for scarcely enough to pay yardage, feed bill, commission, and transportation charges. Money is scarce and hard to get at any price, with the prevailing condition known to all. It seems unnecessary to discuss that, nor does there seem to be any question but that something should be done to meet the emergency. Clearly, what is required, what is desired at this time, is some legislation that will give relief, for immediate relief should be granted.

If the proposed resolution will give the deserved and desired relief, which I believe it will, it should pass immediately. The resolution, if amended as is proposed by the committee, can do no harm. Nor is it, as contended, class legislation; nor does it interfere with the Federal Reserve Bank System. It simply provides:

That the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation are hereby directed to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation, and that said corporation be at once rehabilitated with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural and other products to foreign markets.

It includes every commodity. Even if limited to agriculture, as has been suggested, with our interests in common, its benefits would extend to every activity. We go up and down together; with business lagging on the farm we have dull times in the cities. So if the proposed legislation will help agriculture, it will also help commerce and labor.

I believe the resolution here proposed will to some extent grant relief, and inasmuch as immediate relief is desired, why not vote and dispose of the matter with a view to giving the relief at the earliest possible moment? [Applause.]

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, has the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] used all of his time?

The CHAIRMAN. He has used all of his time.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas yields eight minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I think that we all regret that we have not reached a condition following the war in which business either at home or abroad has been restored to anything like normal. I think that all of us regretted during the war, and regret even more now, the necessity of invoking unusual governmental agencies in connection with trade and business. No one will be happier than I when the time comes when the Government may properly keep out of the banking business, so far as undertakings like this of the War Finance Corporation, now under consideration, are concerned, and out of the management and control of business in every manner and form.

"It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us." A large part of the world is well-nigh bankrupt. Following the war, and in the last few months particularly, the decrease in the price of great basic products which should be gradual, in order to be healthy, has become disastrous; the bottom seemed suddenly to go out of the market, and very largely because the channels of trade were clogged, because private enterprise and private financial institutions were not able to furnish the credit necessary to keep trade moving. That is the situation.

What can we do about it? I am not altogether certain that the passage of the resolution before us and the revival of the activities of this corporation will greatly help the situation, but it will have a helpful effect; it will not, in my opinion, under any circumstances have a harmful effect. So far as it may be possible to operate under the War Finance Corporation, the business of the world will be quickened, exports of America will be enlarged, and the credit situation will be relieved. While we may not accomplish all that some hope for by the passage of this resolution, we can at least help the situation and improve conditions, and without danger of harm. It is our duty, therefore, under the circumstances to suggest, recommend, and advise that this agency of the Government, intended to aid in the export of American products, and thus aid in the restoration of better trade conditions, shall be again put into operation for the benefit of the country generally. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired. All time has expired. The Clerk will report the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That it is the opinion of the Congress that the Federal Reserve Board should take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them, by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at a fair and reasonable rate of interest.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Strike out all of section 2.

Mr. McKEOWN rose.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the Government of the United States owes $25,000,000,000. The annual interest charge on that sum, including the sinking fund, amounts to $1,250,000,000 a year.

We have loaned the Governments of Europe $10,000,000,000, and they have not paid a dollar of interest. Nobody knows when they will.

The business people of the United States have shipped goods abroad for which they have taken the paper of European purchasers to the amount of $12,000,000,000, that is already discounted in American banks, and that is not being paid when it becomes due. And now we propose, in effect, through the Government of the United States—for that is what it means—to advance another billion dollars, to lay another charge upon the backs of the American people for that amount. I understand that next week a proposition is to be presented to the House to loan Germany a billion dollars to buy goods in America.

What you do by the passage of this resolution is to take the money out of the Treasury of the United States in effect and pay Europeans for goods purchased in America, and then come back to the American people who have shipped the goods, and others of the American people, and ask them to buy the paper, so that when they ship their goods and receive the pay they will be compelled, in order to sustain this institution, to buy the paper that has been issued as a result of the sale of the goods.

The time has come when we must stop this artificial stabilization and let nature take its course. If you are going to do this for the farmer and the cotton grower, what are you going to do with the men whose wages all over the country have been reduced about 22½ per cent? I do not see any reduction coming in the prices they are compelled to pay for what they have to buy. Are you trying to reduce the cost of living to-day while they are idle? Oh, no. You are trying to stabilize prices, and that will compel them to pay the high prices that now obtain. But you are not guaranteeing them any employment, not at all. Factories are closing right and left. Why are they closing? The values of the commodities of the factories of the country have fallen. Nobody knows what their value is. The people who own these factories are seeking no legislation, are they? They are willing to permit the economic conditions to control. You are undertaking artificially to stabilize and keep prices up when everybody in the United States wants prices to come down. They are coming down, whatever you do. This legislation is not going to help the situation at all except to the extent that it adds new obligations on the Treasury of the United States, and thereby adds to the necessity of increasing the taxation on the backs of the American people. [Applause.]

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the first section of this resolution is to direct the Secretary of the Treasury and the members of the War Finance Corporation to revive the activities of the War Finance Corporation with the view of assisting in the financing of the exportation of agricultural products to foreign markets.

The second section is to have the Federal Reserve Board encourage the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to grant liberal extension of credit to the farmers upon the security of agricultural products at the lowest possible rate of interest.

It passed the Senate with both of these sections incorporated. I introduced a similar resolution early in the session which was referred to the Banking and Currency Committee. That committee failed to take action until after the Senate had passed this resolution. They then reported with the recommendation that section 2 be eliminated. I am heartily in favor of the resolution as it passed the Senate.

I realize that the Federal Reserve Board has no authority to grant loans, or dictate to member banks as to what they shall accept as credit, but a mere expression of approval by the Federal Reserve Board that a liberal extension of credit to farmers upon the security of agricultural products at the lowest possible rate of interest would have a good moral effect.

The discussion to-day has been confined almost exclusively to the importance of arranging for foreign credit. I agree that this is all important, but at the same time we should undertake to improve our home market, and one way of doing this is by voting down the amendment proposed by the committee to strike out section 2 of the resolution.

The condition of the country is critical. The fall in the price of farm products in the last two months means a loss to the farmers of more than $6,000,000,000. Agriculture is the foundation of our wealth and prosperity and hence our largest business. It cost the farmers more by far to make this crop than ever before on account of the high price paid for labor and the very unusual high cost of supplies. In many sections of the country the crops were not good. The cotton crop was far below the average in many parts of the South. However, if the cotton growers could have gotten something like 35 cents a pound for this crop, as they expected, they could have paid their debts and been in a position to make a crop next year. Now the price of cotton is 10 or 12 cents a pound, less than one-third the cost of production.

This is not due to overproduction, but for the want of a market. Sixty-five per cent of our cotton is exported in normal times. We have about 13,000,000 bales, with a home market for 6,000,000, and must depend upon a foreign market for the balance of 7,000,000. There is the usual demand for our cotton and other agricultural products in the foreign markets, but they can purchase it only by payment in cash, by credit, or by exchange. On account of the conditions as the result of the war they can not pay cash. They have not the goods to sell us to enable them to buy what we have to sell, so that we can not secure it by exchange in trade. So if they buy, they must buy on credit.

The purpose of this measure is to provide methods for taking up their credit and encouraging it.

The War Finance Corporation was created during the war, and could at first only help finance enterprises or individuals engaged in purchasing war supplies for the Government or banks that were aiding such institutions, and served a most useful purpose during the war.

Congress amended the act creating the War Finance Corporation in March, 1919, so as to enable it to aid in extending our exports, and provided for the continuation of this work for one year after the declaration of peace. It rendered a most useful service in reestablishing trade relations and foreign markets which were destroyed by the war.

The condition of our country is such that it was never more important for a full and active operation of the War Finance Corporation than now. While it may not accomplish as much as some of us hope for, nor as much as it would had it been reestablished earlier, still I believe that it will do much good. We are facing a very grave situation, caused by the very sudden fall in the price of farm products, and I am in favor of doing all that can be done to immediately relieve the situation.

I believe the resumption of the activities of the War Finance Corporation would encourage the immediate formation of export corporations and very materially aid and encourage the banking corporations organized to aid in financing foreign securities.

The psychological effect would be marvelous in addition to the actual financial assistance rendered.

I trust that this measure will pass the House to-day and that it will become a law at the earliest date possible, with the confident hope that it will furnish much relief to the farmers who are in such great distress by reason of the sudden fall in the price of their products. [Applause.]

Mr. McKEOWN. Mr. Chairman, the question as to the financial situation of this Nation at this time is one the business men of the Nation are not agreed upon. It is one on which the business world is at sea. They do not understand what is taking place now on the eve of the new year. The retailer of this country to-day is striving to hold on to save himself from the wreck that may come upon him in the reduction of prices of the products on his shelves.

The prices of products of the farmer have gone down so low in the last two months that he can not tell what to do. He is abandoning his crops. In my country they are leaving cotton unpicked in the fields because of the low price and of the cost of labor.

So the situation is a critical one, but I dare say you will not get much benefit from this legislation unless it is carried out in the spirit that Congress passes it. If the men in charge of this War Finance Corporation sit down and exact compliance with such rules as to absolutely make negligible the purpose of Congress, then we will reap no benefit from it. The situation is not so much different from what it was in 1907, except that there is now plenty of money in the country, but the same situation faces the business men as in 1907.

UMI

Here is the thing that is the tragedy of the whole situation: Over in the countries of Europe, where they need the products of this country, the men who manufacture these products into goods to put on the market find themselves in this situation—that they must buy from hand to mouth the raw products that are placed in the warehouses at high prices, and they can not manufacture goods out of them in competition with countries that are able to buy the raw products that are now going on the markets at such greatly reduced prices. So the low price of raw products in this country is ruining the market for raw products in the old countries, because it is putting out of business the manufacturers who buy the raw products.

Now, my friends, I want to call attention to this fact: That it is true that the United States Government ought not to go into the paternalism business, but at the same time we have given to the railroads by the millions in order to help them carry on transportation. When they came to Congress we readily granted them every request, and we turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission full authority to lend them whatever money they needed. And yet when the farmers, the men who produce the things that we must live on, come to the Congress we hesitate in extending them financial relief. The whole industry of this country is slacking. Men are daily walking about the streets hunting for employment. I want to see things get back to normal, where crops will be moving and factories humming with the music of contented labor. [Applause.] I have some doubts if that state of industrial rehabilitation so much desired will be "normalcy."

It is as difficult a task to impress upon the Congress as it is to impress the financial interests of the country not directly connected with farming with the conditions in which the farmers of the country find themselves. Financial interests far removed from the farming districts do not comprehend and are slow to be convinced of the dire effect of the price breakdown to the farmers. If the farmers of the Nation should break down at planting time, like the railroad transportation broke down during the war, then there would be no difficulty in convincing the teeming thousands who live in the cities as to the importance of the farming industry, and they could then realize that it is a truthful statement that farming is our most important industry.

When the railroads broke down we immediately went to their relief to the tune of over a billion dollars, and, although the war is over, we are advancing them all the money they need and have raised their rates to the sky without in any way taking care of the rates on cattle and farm products. You have turned the people over to the railroads, and the farmer is paying his part of the freights. You have the same old story of peaches rotting in the orchards of Michigan while just across the lake they were selling from $4 to $6 per bushel, and wheat rotting while the world goes hungry. These conditions hurt the farmer worse than other industries, because he could not get one crop out of the way before the harvest time of the next, and his business has been one of continued congestion.

This Congress guaranteed the rates to insure reasonable returns on the money invested in railroads; but now the same Congress is not hurrying to help the farmers, while many able men in the Congress even oppose the passage of this resolution.

Finances have broken down in the sudden contraction of the currency. It is destroying the cotton farmer and threatening to wipe out the entire cattle industry. The interest rates are so high that it kills all legitimate business and breeds speculation. We financed the war, but since the armistice speculation has run wild, and the American people, from the highest to the lowest, plunged into a riot of extravagance the like of which has never been witnessed before in this country.

Men of moderate means are not satisfied with one automobile for the family, but insist on having one for each adult in the family. Liberty bonds and war-savings stamps that were bought during the war were hastily thrown on the market to be spent for some passing pleasure. Workers on small salaries bought the most costly clothing on the instalment plan, and goods that were offered at a reasonable price found no purchasers. The profiteerer reigned from Maine to California, and on farming machinery he was at his best.

One of the troubles with our financial situation is the fact that we have so much of our capital in the hands of speculators. This reign of extravagance created an abnormal desire for unaccustomed luxuries, short hours of work, and as little work as possible to get by, with no care as to what happened to the Nation.

When the public began to get back to common sense and get their feet on the ground, instead of turning to hard work, thrift, and saving, the hue was immediately raised against the farmer as being the profiteerer when, as a matter of fact, he could not profiteer if he wanted to, for the simple reason that he does not and can not fix the prices on his commodities. Whatever profiteering there has been on food has been done since it left the farmer's hands. It would appear that the people of the cities thought that if they could break the prices of farm products, then all their troubles would be over, but I warn you now that such a course leads to more difficulties in the future.

It is my judgment that the revival of the War Finance Corporation will not bring the relief that many of its champions expect. The solution of the marketing difficulty can only be solved when it is solved permanently, and for that purpose I have introduced H. R. 14906, which is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 14906) to establish cattle and farm products banks, in connection with the Federal farm loan banks, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That corporations known as joint stock cattle and products banks for carrying on the business of lending on cattle and agricultural products securities and issuing loan certificates of indebtedness may be formed by any number of natural persons not less than five. They shall be authorized to act under license issued by the Federal Farm Loan Board and shall not be authorized to do business until the capital stock to the amount of at least $50,000 has been subscribed and one-half thereof paid in cash, and shall not be permitted to issue certificates of indebtedness until its capital is fully paid.

SEC. 2. That each cattle and products bank organized under this act shall have authority to issue its certificates of indebtedness secured by warehouse receipts or first mortgages on agricultural products or cattle, as the case may be, taken by said bank in conformity with this act.

SEC. 3. That the applications for permission to issue certificates of indebtedness shall be made in writing to the said farm loan board through such agency as the said board shall prescribe, and said banks shall furnish full detailed information relative to the securities offered and such other information as shall be requested by the said board. The approval or rejection of the application for permission to issue certificates of indebtedness shall be in writing, and in all cases of rejection the reason for such action shall be set out and an appeal will lie from the decision of the board to the Secretary of the Treasury upon an adverse ruling.

SEC. 4. That said cattle and products banks shall make no loans upon agricultural products which are not stored in a warehouse licensed under the United States warehouse act and secured by warehouse receipts or first mortgage upon such agricultural products.

SEC. 5. That no loan shall be made upon agricultural products for a longer period than 12 months, and no loan shall be made upon cattle unless the same shall be secured by first morgage upon the cattle offered for security, and for a period of not more than two years.

SEC. 6. That no loans shall exceed 60 per cent of the value of any agricultural products or cattle offered as security for such loan at the time said loan is consummated.

SEC. 7. That said cattle and products banks organized under this act shall in no case demand or receive under any form or pretense, interest, commission, or charges in excess of 2 per cent more than the interest rate provided for the last series of the cattle and products certificates issued by the said banks.

SEC. 8. That the Secretary of the Treasury is directed to deposit with the cattle and products banks situated in the wheat-producing States all the profits that may remain on hand that are paid into the Treasury of the United States by the Grain Corporation, and said deposits shall be made in the same ratio as the amount of the wheat production of said States in 1918 shall bear to the aggregated production of wheat in the United States for said year.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby directed to deposit with the cattle and products banks, organized under this act for the temporary use of said banks, the sum of $100,000,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated. All of the sums thus temporarially advanced shall be returned to the Treasury of the United States with interest at the rate being paid by the United States upon its certificates of indebtedness at the time the temporary deposits are made.

SEC. 10. That the provisions of the Federal farm loan act, approved July 17, 1916, relating to joint-stock land banks, except in so far as they are in conflict with this act, shall, so far as applicable, be in effect in the administration of this act.

This system will take care of short-time loans for the farmer after he has harvested his crop and placed it in a licensed warehouse, enabling him to pay his loans contracted in the production of his crop, and the loans can only be made on products placed in the licensed warehouses. Under this bill relief can be granted to the cattle industry, and unless money is made available to enable cattlemen of the great Southwest to hold their stock cattle the beef supply of the United States will soon vanish. The farmer has great faith in mankind, because in the spring of the year he plants his crop without any knowledge as to what prices he will receive at harvest time, and as a result he has been made the victim of the speculators and demagogues, and at last he stands at bay and demands that political platforms be "to stand upon as well as to get in upon."

It is to be hoped that the continuance of the War Finance Corporation will at least give temporary relief to the present situation, and for one, I am willing to vote for any reasonable legislation that will help the farmer in his present distress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words. I am not a financial expert and, of course, am not competent to discuss the technicalities of this proposed legislation; but certain statements have been made by eminent gentlemen on this side of the aisle the effect of which I understood was that while perhaps this legislation would not accomplish very much of good, it certainly could do no harm. I think that one harmful effect which will follow the passage of this legislation would be that the Congress will hold out to the country the precedent that if a sufficient clamor can be stirred up we will not hesitate to continue in effect measures which were enacted as a part of our war program, and I have not yet heard any reason stated or any argument made which satisfies me as to the duty of the Federal Government to come forward when the exigencies of war have passed and embark upon a legislative program such as this. It is in my opinion very close to that sort of legislation which is condemned with great strength and vigor, namely, class legislation.

We appreciate, of course, that conditions in the country are unsettled, but I fail to see how we can pass a resolution such as this when its most ardent advocates say that it probably may not accomplish the good desired, but that it certainly would do no harm. I believe the time has come for the Government to take its hand out of business of this sort and to let the economic rules once more prevail. I believe that to do this will create an artificial stimulation of prices and stop the ordinary course which is now tending toward a reduction in the cost of commodities to the consumer. During the last campaign the party in majority in this Congress promised to do everything it could to lower the cost of living. We are met with industrial depression in the industrial sections of the country. That depression will not be set aside by legislation such as this, because the goods that are made over yonder across the seas are coming into the market, and we can not start our factories manufacturing goods with the raw materials here for export, because we can not compete with them. Neither can we compete with them in our own markets, and I fear that if we establish this precedent that as time goes on and the new administration comes into power we will be met with demands that will make this sort of legislation seem mild in comparison to the requests for legislation to put the Government either into business or behind business of all sorts in order that conditions may be artificially stimulated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto be now closed.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the committee amendment first have to be reported?

The CHAIRMAN. It has been reported.

Mr. WALSH. But as I understand it, we are reading the bill by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will again report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all of section 2.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be recognized against the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The resolution has been read in full and the motion has been made that all debate be closed, and it was agreed to, and the question now is on the committee amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. Why should there be objection to more debate?

The CHAIRMAN. The committee amendment has been read.

Mr. WALSH. Will the Chair advise the committee how, when the resolution is taken up for reading under the five-minute rule, two sections can be read and debated at the same time?

The CHAIRMAN. No one stopped the Clerk and asked for recognition at the conclusion of the reading of the first section, and, therefore, the Clerk proceeded and read the second section with the amendment thereto.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is just exactly what was done.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HARDY of Texas) there were—ayes 132, noes 20.

So the committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GARRETT. When is the proper time to move to strike out the preamble? After the resolution has gone into the House?

The CHAIRMAN. After the resolution has gone into the House, the Chair believes.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the joint resolution with an amendment to the House, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and the joint resolution as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SNELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration Senate joint resolution 212, had directed him to report the same back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the joint resolution as amended do pass.

Mr. STRONG of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution and amendment.

Mr. GARRETT. I believe that is ordered by the rule. The previous question is ordered by the rule on the resolution, but it is not on the preamble.

The SPEAKER. According to the rule the previous question is ordered on the joint resolution and amendments to final passage.

Mr. GARRETT. But not upon the preamble?

The SPEAKER. No; not upon the preamble.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The previous question having been ordered under the rule, if the House adjourns now would this matter come up on Monday?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn. I withdraw that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The question was taken, and the preamble was not agreed to.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

4629. Also, petition of the Marshall Field & Co., of Chicago, Ill., by W. H. Mann, general manager, urging that the great need of Alaska is the development of a constructive policy by our Government to make possible the utilization of her rich natural resources in creating local industries and developing a permanent population of home builders; to the Committee on the Territories.

4630. Also, the following petitions protesting against the Smith bill (H. R. 12466) and amending the Federal water power act: George R. Roberts, Chicago; Anna Jaderholm, Chicago; Miss Jessie R. Knowles, Chicago; and the River Forest Women's Club, of River Forest, all of the State of Illinois; to the Select Committee on Water Power.

SENATE.

MONDAY, December 20, 1920.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee after the sacred and hallowed influences of the Sabbath day as we begin our new week of work. We thank Thee that Thou didst give to us in Thy divine providence a day that is hallowed by such sacred memories, and that brings us back, week by week, to the old associations and the blessed influences of child life. We thank Thee for the emphasis that Thou dost put upon the ministry of the Sabbath Day by continuing it as a holy institution through the years, giving to us an opportunity to worship God and to serve our fellow men. We pray that we may bring to the service of this day the influences of the Sabbath, and that we may remember if we are to be right toward our fellow man we must first be right toward God. Grant us the holy influence of Thy presence as we address ourselves to the tasks of a new day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The reading clerk proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of the legislative day of Thursday, January 16, 1920, when, on request of Mr. CURTIS and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

PUBLICATIONS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, pursuant to law, a statement showing the number of publications issued by the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, which was referred to the Committee on Printing.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed, with amendments, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212), directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize association of producers of agricultural products, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. VOLSTEAD, Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, and Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4565) extending the time for the doing of annual assessment work on mining claims for the year 1920 to and including July 1, 1921.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 4526) to amend section 501 of the transportation act, 1920, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, the extreme condition, in fact, the crushing condition of the market, or almost no market for wool, sheep, beef, and mutton brings me a great many petitions in the form of telegrams and otherwise. I have in my hands 15 or 20 of the briefest, which I am going to ask to have noted in the RECORD, but not extended. I wish to quote a few words from one or two for the RECORD, as they will show the nature of the others. They not only come from Wyoming, but from other States as well. Here is one from one of the largest farmers' feeding associations in the country, located in Colorado, which says:

The Sheep Feeders' Association of Northern Colorado, representing the owners of nearly 2,000,000 head of sheep being fed for market in northern Colorado, urge that everything be done that possibly can be done to place an immediate embargo upon meats, wool, and grain now flooding our markets and threatening ruin to the farmers and stock men of this section. The situation is most acute. Many of our most substantial citizens face immediate ruin unless some immediate action is taken in their behalf.

They ask an answer to the association, and the officers of this association have signed the telegram.

Some of these petitions come from bankers as well as growers and feeders. Here is one from an individual grower of wool. I read a few words from it. He says:

A year ago I owned what I considered an equity of $50,000 in a bunch of sheep. To-day with wool unsold, following the condition of last winter, and now the terrible depreciation, I have practically no equity at all in the same number of sheep; and if this is followed up by another year with conditions like the past, the business will be at an end and entirely closed out.

I ask that all these petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Finance, as follows:

A petition of Ira B. Casteel, vice president Stock Yards National Bank, of Denver, Colo., favoring an embargo against importation of meats, wool, and wool products;

A petition of W. A. Wolford, H. A. Anderson, and Charles L. Vyvey, of Encampment, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the importation of farm and live-stock products;

A petition of Hunter, Casteel & Hunter Co., of Encampment, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of the live-stock business;

A petition of James E. Stewart, secretary Tri-State Wool Growers' Association of Bellefourche, S. Dak., praying for the enactment of legislation placing an embargo on wool;

A petition of Charles Terwilliger, of Encampment, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation placing a temporary embargo on farm and live-stock products and later enactment of a protective tariff thereon;

A petition of Charles H. Sanger, of Encampment, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation placing an embargo on farm and live-stock products;

A petition of the Stockgrowers' State Bank, Saratoga, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation placing an embargo on wool and live-stock products;

A petition of W. M. Toothaker, of Encampment, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of farming and live-stock industries;

A petition of W. T. Peryam & Sons, of Encampment, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation restoring a tariff on grain, meat (live or dead), hides, wool, and rags;

A petition of the Saratoga Valley Stockgrowers' Association, of Saratoga, Wyo., praying for the enactment of embargo legislation; and

A petition of C. A. Cook, of Encampment, Wyo., praying for the enactment of legislation placing an embargo on the importation of live stock.

Mr. WARREN presented a memorial adopted by the Chamber of Commerce, of Basin, Wyo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation commercializing national parks for power plants and other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CURTIS presented petitions of sundry citizens of the State of Kansas; the Chamber of Commerce of Topeka, Kans.; and the Chamber of Commerce of Manhattan, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the salaries of postal clerks, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Friends of Ireland of Topeka, Kans., remonstrating against the application of force by the British Government directly against the Irish people, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the board of directors of the Topeka Board of Trade, favoring the Federal law prohibiting the sale of grain for future delivery unless the individual has in his possession the actual amount of grain to be sold, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Wichita Board of Commerce, of Wichita, Kans., favoring the budget system, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of members of Parsons, Kans., Local No. 576, N. F. P. O. C., favoring a law that will exempt all postal clerks from examination after they have served a term of 20 years, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

He also presented memorials of the Topeka Typothetæ, of Topeka, Kans., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation imposing a tax on all advertising in newspapers and periodicals, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of sundry farmers of Cowley County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation extending credits at reasonable rates to farmers, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of disabled volunteer soldiers of the United States; a petition by members of the National Military Home for Disabled Soldiers (Volunteers), of Leavenworth, Kans.; and a petition of James W. Hamilton, Leavenworth County, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation for "outdoor reliefs," which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. KENDRICK presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Basin, Wyo., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation commercializing national parks for power plants and other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CAPPER presented a petition of the Kansas City branch of Railway Mail Association, of Kansas City, Mo., praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the salaries of postal clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I received the following brief telegram in the form of a petition, which I will read:

For Heaven's sake wake up the Senate and place embargo on all farm products from all foreign countries before the country goes to smash. Ruin faces every farmer as well as business man in the United States.

It is signed by hundreds of farmers.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of Chippewa Indians, Leech Lake Agency, of the State of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to amend the act of January 14, 1889, to permit those Indians to hunt and fish upon the lands ceded by that act, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. JONES of Washington presented memorials of the City Council of Camas, Wash., and the John R. Thompson Camp, No. 1, United Spanish War Veterans, Department of Washington and Alaska, remonstrating against the immigration of undesirable aliens, which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. FERNALD presented a petition of sundry citizens of the State of Maine, praying for the enactment of legislation increasing the salaries of postal clerks, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. POINDEXTER presented a telegram from the Associated Banks of Walla Walla, Wash., favoring an embargo upon wool, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, the special committee of the Senate which investigated the school system of the District of Columbia during the last session, in its report recommended an expert survey of the District schools. Having this recommendation in mind, a group of public-spirited women, about 250 in number, representing the mothers and parent-teachers' association, voluntarily and at a great sacrifice of time and energy undertook a personal survey of the physical condition of all the schools in the District.

These women having first prepared a plan of action and a questionnaire, which was submitted to the superintendent of schools, the board of education, and the supervising principals, and unanimously approved by them, personally visited the schools, made a very complete survey, and, without expense to the Government or the District of Columbia, prepared a report which very fully and exhaustively sets forth the average number of pupils in each schoolroom in the District, the physical condition of the classrooms, basement, lavatories, and the play stations, together with the conditions as to light, heat, and drinking-water facilities.

I accordingly offer this valuable report and ask to have it referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, with the suggestion that it be printed as a public document. I ask that careful consideration be given to its recommendations by that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The report will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SULPHUR RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 4588) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Bowie and Cass, State of Texas, for construction of a bridge across Sulphur River at or near Pettis Bridge on State Highway No. 8, in said counties and State, and I submit a report (No. 671) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 8, to strike out the word "Douglasville" and in lieu thereof insert the word "Douglassville," and on page 1, at the end of line 9, to insert the word "of," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Bowie and Cass, State of Texas, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Sulphur River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near the location of Pettis Bridge on Texas State Highway No. 8, as located between Douglassville, in Cass County, and the town of Maud, in Bowie County, State of Texas, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled, "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WITHLACOOCHEE RIVER BRIDGE, GEORGIA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4587) granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Brooks and Lowndes, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge over the Withlacoochee River, and submit a report (No. 670) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the counties of Brooks and Lowndes, in the State of Georgia, and their successors and assigns, to construct or rebuild, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Withlacoochee River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation at or near Ousley, Ga., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BRIDGE, PA.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with an amendment the bill (S. 4541) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Susquehanna River at Harrisburg, Pa., and I submit a report (No. 672) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 13, after the word "from," to strike out "October 19, 1919, the date of the expiration of the time limit for commencing the work," and to insert "the date of approval of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the times for commencing and completing the reconstruction of a bridge authorized by act of Congress approved October 19, 1918, to be reconstructed by the Philadelphia, Harrisburg & Pittsburgh Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, across the Susquehanna River at or about 4,250 feet west of Philadelphia, Harrisburg & Pittsburgh Junction, Harrisburg, Pa., to a point in the borough of Lemoyne, Cumberland County, State of Pennsylvania, in accordance with act of Congress approved March 23, 1906, are hereby extended one and three years, respectively, from the date of approval of this act.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ALABAMA RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 4519) to authorize the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, its successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River at or near a point approximately 4 miles from the city of Montgomery, Ala., and I submit a report (No. 669) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, its successors and assigns, be, and they are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Alabama River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, one end of said bridge to be in the county of Montgomery, Ala., and the other in the county of Elmore, Ala., at or near a point approximately 4 miles from the city of Montgomery, Ala., in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. HENDERSON:

A bill (S. 4678) to amend section 2324 of the Revised Statutes; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

By Mr. JONES of Washington:

A bill (S. 4679) for the relief of Albert C. West; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts:

A bill (S. 4680) granting a pension to Emily W. Marsh (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 4681) for the relief of J. M. Brown; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE:

A bill (S. 4682) to amend section 74 of the Judicial Code, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JOHNSON of California:

A bill (S. 4684) for the relief of Annie M. Lepley; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 4685) for the relief of George Emerson; and

A bill (S. 4686) to extend the provisions of section 2455, Revised Statutes, to the lands within the abandoned Fort Buford Military Reservation, in the States of North Dakota and Montana; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 4687) for the relief of Marion B. Patterson; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McCUMBER:

A bill (S. 4688) for the relief of A. W. Duckett & Co.;

A bill (S. 4689) for the relief of Eli N. Sonnenstrahl; and

A bill (S. 4690) for the relief of the North American Dredging Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CAPPER:

A bill (S. 4691) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ogden (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON:

A bill (S. 4692) for the relief of the heirs of Agnes Ingels, deceased (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 4693) fixing the compensation of United States inspectors of customs; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ROBINSON (for Mr. WALSH of Montana):

A bill (S. 4695) providing for the establishment of State boards of war risk appeals; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 4696) for the relief of William Mortensen; to the Committee on Claims.

FORCED SALE OF BONDS.

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I introduce the following bill, which is very brief and which I ask may be read:

The bill (S. 4683) to amend section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919, was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 11 (m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919, be further amended by striking out the words "December 31, 1920," at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "December 31, 1921."

Mr. McLEAN. Mr. President, I am informed by the Federal Reserve Board that there are large totals of Government bonds and certificates of indebtedness still held by the banks which are not yet wholly paid for by the owners, and that unless the proviso in section 11 in the Federal reserve act is amended as proposed the owners of the bonds will be compelled to throw them on the market, which in the opinion of the Federal Reserve Board is very unwise and entirely unnecessary.

I call attention to the bill at this time and ask to have it referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I desire to give notice that I shall ask for action on the part of the Senate some time this week, provided, of course, the Committee on Banking and Currency approve.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

SAMUEL H. DOLBEAR.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 4694) for the relief of Samuel H. Dolbear; to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask to have printed, for information of the committee, a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, at whose request I introduce the bill, which letter explains its purpose.

The letter was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 8, 1920.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
Chairman Committee on Mines and Mining,
United States Senate.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Upon December 22, 1919, the War Minerals Relief Commission recommended that an award of $10,955.15, less the sum of $833.12 due the United States on account of the Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture, be made to Samuel Dolbear, of San Francisco, Calif., under section 5 of the act of March 2, 1919 (40 Stat., 1272–1274). An award in harmony with the commission's recommendation was made by Secretary Lane January 14, 1920, and duly paid by the Treasury Department. Thereafter it was discovered that an error of $2,845.37 had been made against Mr. Dolbear, inasmuch as profits of that amount made in the buying and selling of chrome ores and not in the mining thereof had been improperly deducted. Accordingly, upon April 30, 1920, the commission recommended an additional award of $2,845.37, which was made by me May 18, 1920. This additional award was certified to the Auditor for the Interior Department May 20, 1920. Upon June 5, 1920, however, the auditor refused to allow payment, and I, June 25, 1920, requested a review of his action by the Comptroller of the Treasury. The acting comptroller's decision of November 6, 1920, sustained the action of the auditor.

The situation presented, therefore, is that the United States is justly indebted to Mr. Dolbear in the sum of $2,845.37, which can not be paid him under the rulings of the officers of the Treasury Department. Legislation is needed authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue the proper warrant payable from the appropriation made by the war minerals relief act (sec. 5, act of Mar. 2, 1919, 40 Stat., 1272–1274) in payment of the additional award of $2,845.37 made by the Secretary of the Interior May 18, 1920. A draft of a bill for such purpose is inclosed, and I request that you introduce it, provided that it meets with your approval.

Cordially, yours,

JOHN BARTON PAYNE, Secretary.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. ELKINS, it was Ordered, That the papers in the case of the bill (S. 2468) granting an increase of pension to George W. Johnson be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 15130) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.). If there is no further morning business, morning business is closed.

The Chair lays before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 2 strike out lines 9 to 16, inclusive, being section 2, as follows:

SEC. 2. That it is the opinion of the Congress that the Federal Reserve Board should take such action as may be necessary to permit the member banks of the Federal Reserve System to grant liberal extensions of credit to the farmers of the country upon the security of the agricultural products now held by them, by permitting the rediscounting of such notes of extension at a fair and reasonable rate of interest.

And strike out the preamble.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, before I proceed I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Is this a debatable question?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Ordinarily the question would be debatable, but, as the Chair remembers, to-day is Calendar Monday.

Mr. GRONNA. I know that quite a number of Senators are very much interested in the measure which the Chair has laid before the Senate and desire briefly to discuss it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. What does the Senator from North Dakota desire to discuss?

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to move that the joint resolution be taken up, in order that we may have a right to discuss it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks there is nothing to do except either to move to agree to the amendments of the House to the joint resolution or to ask for the appointment of conferees on the House amendments.

Mr. GRONNA. I ask unanimous consent that the members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry be given an opportunity to discuss the matter.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to know what the Senator desires to have discussed. What motion is he going to make? Is he going to make a motion to concur in the House amendments to the joint resolution, or is he going to make a motion for the appointment of conferees on the amendments? There is no motion now pending which the Senate may properly discuss.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I suggest that he permit some other Senator to move to concur in the amendments of the House. If he will allow me, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments which have been made to the joint resolution by the other House.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That motion is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Utah. Is there objection to discussion on the question? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I had hoped that Congress would finally pass the joint resolution in the form in which it passed the Senate. I have been reading the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and while I shall not refer to the proceedings in the other body, I desire to say that I frequently find the statement made that this proposed legislation will be of no benefit to the farmers; that it is merely a deception. We have also been told by Members of this body of the liberality which has been shown to the agricultural sections of the country by the Federal Reserve Board; and I think some of the Members of the Senate have pointed out the large amount of credit which has been extended to the farmers through the Federal Reserve System.

I wish to say—and I call the attention of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] especially to the statement—that it is my opinion that no one knows how much credit has been so extended and what amount of farm paper has been rediscounted in the Federal reserve banks. I repeat that I do not believe there is a Member of this body who knows, nor do I believe that anyone else knows, the amount or even approximately the amount of money which has been loaned to farmers through the 12 Federal reserve banks.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Is it not the Senator's impression that there have been statements made that the amount of paper discounted for agricultural purposes even this year has exceeded any amount heretofore discounted, and that it consists of enormous sums in the agricultural sections?

Mr. GRONNA. I have heard that statement made; I heard it made the other day by a certain Senator; but I do not believe that it is fair to the agricultural sections of the country to say that they have been treated with such liberality, when, as a matter of fact, no one knows what credit has been extended to that particular industry; how much money has been loaned upon farm paper.

Mr. President, I fully realize that the passage of this proposed resolution will not be a panacea for all our ills, nor will it fully relieve the terrible distress which is now facing the people not only in the agricultural sections of the country but throughout the land. However, I do believe that the passage of the measure—and I speak now of section 2 of the joint resolution as well as of section 1—would be helpful.

In the first place, we know that now more than at any time during the war we need a market for agricultural products. During the war there was so large a demand for farm products that we were unable to furnish to the people of Europe and to the people of other foreign lands the amount of such products for which there was a demand. For that reason the War Finance Corporation was not called upon to assist in financing the people who were engaged in producing grain, cotton, cattle, and wool.

Mr. President, I desire to be frank with the Senate. I have believed and still believe that the agricultural districts have been discriminated against. I do not believe that they have received at the hands of the administrative officers the consideration that the great farming industry is entitled to receive. To substantiate that statement, I am going to read a brief letter which I directed to Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, and I am going also to read his reply. I wish to call the attention of the junior Senator from Virginia, as well as the attention of other Members of the Senate, to these letters.

I first read my letter to Gov. Harding, as follows:

DECEMBER 14, 1920.

Hon. W. P. G. HARDING,
Governor of the Federal Reserve Board,
Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate to ask you for the following information:

What amount of securities rediscounted at the several reserve banks for 1920 to date is on actual agricultural paper, based on the agricultural productions and sales of 1920, not including the transfer of Government bonds to commercial accounts, nor the extension of credits carried over from 1919, also a like statement for 1919.

Yours, truly, A. J. GRONNA.

I have here Gov. Harding's reply. It bears directly upon the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] a few days ago. The letter is dated December 14, 1920, and is addressed to me, as follows:

I acknowledge receipt of your letter of this date, asking the board to advise your committee of the total amount of paper discounted by the 12 Federal reserve banks during the year 1920, based on production and sales of farm products during the year, exclusive of notes secured by Government obligations the proceeds of which may have been used for agricultural purposes, and also paper evidencing borrowings on account of production and sales during 1919, and requesting also similar information for the year 1919.

It has been necessary to wire the Federal reserve banks for this information, as it is not contained in the board's records here. As soon as replies to the board's telegram are received and the information compiled therefrom I will send you a memorandum on the subject.

Yours, truly,

W. P. G. HARDING, Governor.

Mr. President, that absolutely substantiates the statement made by the Senator from North Carolina and others in regard to the alleged liberality with which some Senators would have us believe the agricultural interests have been treated. It can not be proven that such liberality has been accorded those interests, because Gov. Harding states that no one knows how much money has been loaned upon that kind of paper.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that I did not assume to know just how much credit had been extended to the agricultural interests of the country. I simply cited the fact that the banks located in the cotton, grain, and cattle growing sections of the country had given greater extensions of credit than any of the other banks. If, however, the Senator will permit me, I hold in my hand the latest estimate of agricultural loans obtained by the governor of the Federal Reserve Board from the respective Federal reserve banks.

Mr. GRONNA. Before the Senator proceeds, may I ask him what is the date of the estimate?

Mr. GLASS. It is contained in a speech delivered by Gov. Harding, of the Federal Reserve Board, before the American Farm Bureau Federation at Indianapolis on December 7. Gov. Harding says:

Early in the season the Federal reserve banks in the various districts were asked to estimate the proportion of their total loans directly in support of the agricultural and live stock interests. The estimates for September 3, 1920, were as follows:

Federal reserve bank at Richmond, 27.3 per cent; Atlanta, 23.7 per cent; Chicago, 48.3 per cent; St. Louis, 22 per cent; Minneapolis, 65.6 per cent; Kansas City, 39.8 per cent; Dallas, 50 per cent; San Francisco, 58.7 per cent.

In some of these banks the proportion of agricultural paper held is much greater now than on September 3.

It is certain that there has been no curtailment of agricultural credits by the Federal reserve banks, and while, as I have stated, exact figures of member bank transactions are not yet available, it seems reasonable to assume that there has been a very large volume of credit extended by member and nonmember banks in support of the agricultural interests.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I believe that the letter written by the governor of the Federal Reserve Board to me under date of December 14 answers the statement of the Senator from Virginia. I might hazard a guess as to what amount of business has been transacted by these various banks and I might not get within gunshot of accuracy. It is evident that this was a political speech which the Senator has read from, and it is evident from the reply of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board—whom I hold in very high esteem—that he tells the absolute truth in his letter to me.

I was directed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, upon the motion of the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]—and I took no offense at being directed—to write this letter. In other words, I welcomed it, because I realized that I was only a humble servant of the people, trying to represent, in part at least, the people of my State and the entire country.

The Senator from Virginia would have the people of this Nation believe that he knew the other day, when he read from certain records, that there was no ground for any complaint; that he knew that the agricultural districts had been treated with such liberality that it is unbecoming for any Senator here even to say that it might be good business for the banks to be a little more liberal in the future and loan money to farmers at reasonable rates.

Mr. GLASS. Mr. President, I submit that the Senator from Virginia simply quoted the official figures of the Federal Reserve Board. I did not assume to say what parts of the credits were agricultural credits and what parts were strictly industrial credits, and the address of the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, from which I have just quoted, supplements the official figures I gave.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I have such a high regard and esteem for the Senator from Virginia—I have had the pleasure of serving with him both in the other body and in this—that I certainly would not even intimate that he would attempt to mislead the Senate or the country by any figures which he might present. I am sure that he would not. If I have said anything which even intimates such a thing as that, I certainly want to retract it. I have too high a regard for the Senator from Virginia to convey the impression that he would willfully make any statement that would misrepresent the true condition of the Federal reserve banks of the country.

I maintain, Mr. President, that those of us who insisted upon section 2 were not only within our rights, but it was our duty to do so; and Gov. Harding's letter not only indicates but proves beyond a question of doubt that there has not even been enough interest manifested in this great question for them to keep a record of how much paper has been actually rediscounted, based upon farm paper. I want the Senate to know, and I hope the country will know, that up until the 14th day of December no one knew how much paper had been discounted in the 12 Federal reserve banks, based upon agricultural paper.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry for information?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator assert that the Federal Reserve Board placed any prohibition upon the member banks against loaning their funds to agriculturists? My information is that the Federal Reserve Board, though it might have restricted such loans to 25 per cent of the assets of the various banks, permitted loans up to 99 per cent, and that if adequate credit has not been extended to the farmers it has not been the fault of the Federal Reserve Board, the central organization here, but it has been the fault of the member banks; that the member banks throughout the United States have loaned quite liberally; indeed, that the member banks have loaned to farmers and to their customers all they should have loaned, and in many instances have loaned so much that instability threatens many of these banks throughout the United States.

May I inquire of the Senator, furthermore, if the banks themselves, and his bank, and other banks, would not experience some difficulty in determining the amount to be loaned to farmers upon a falling market? If I may illustrate what I mean, I know that a number of banks in the West were perfectly willing to loan to the woolgrowers, but the price of wool was constantly falling, and it was impossible to determine how much should be loaned per pound on a safe margin. For instance, if the price of wool to-day were 30 cents, there was no certainty that it would be that to-morrow, and indeed it has fallen until perhaps it will not sell for more than 9 or 10 or 12 or 15 cents per pound. Now, I suggest to the Senator, How are the banks that are willing to loan to determine, upon a constantly shrinking market, the margin of safety which they must allow in making loans to agriculturists?

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I believe the able Senator from Utah has answered his own questions.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, does not the Senator's question suggest the very contention that the Senator from North Dakota is making? If these farm products, which are notoriously unprotected by any other form of resource on the part of the man that holds them, are falling and falling under the cry of deflation and contraction and freezing out uncertain and questionable loans, would it not be perfectly natural for the banks to withhold credit from such insecure paper as farm paper is usually looked upon as being and extend their credits to those who have more resources and could respond more easily to a demand for further collateral? Is it not proving just the Senator's contention that they did not get their share of the loans?

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me, my question really was for the purpose of exonerating the Federal Reserve System from the criticism which I understood the Senator from North Dakota was leveling against them, and particularly against Gov. Harding, on the ground that they had been unwilling to extend credit. My understanding was that they had authorized the member banks to loan as much as 90 per cent to agricultural interests, and that if loans were not made the responsibility did not rest at the door of the Federal Reserve System. I am asking the question for information.

Mr. GRONNA. Let me say to the able Senator from Utah that the governor of the Federal reserve bank and the board have no power according to law to say upon what class of paper the member banks shall loan their money; so I think the Senator from Utah has misunderstood my statement. I am only complaining of the treatment which the farmers as a class, whether they are stockmen, or sheepmen, or producers of grain, have received at the hands of those who are in control of the banking business. That includes State banks not members of the Federal Reserve System, I will say to the Senator, as well as the Federal reserve banks. I am simply making the statement, and I do it with all candor—if I am mistaken, I am honestly mistaken—that I do not believe enough attention has been paid to the conditions in the agricultural districts, because nobody has even seen fit to gather statistics and to know how liberally this class of paper has been treated. I say nobody knows. It is no answer to that statement to say that the St. Paul bank or the Kansas City bank has loaned so many millions of dollars. That may be money which has been loaned to people engaged in manufacture, or to other banks, or to people engaged in some other business, or to railroads. I am speaking of the agricultural conditions throughout the country, and I say that they have not received the attention that they should have received, because here is an acknowledgment by an official of the Federal Reserve System to the effect that nobody knows how much paper had been discounted up to that particular date, December 14, 1920; and it is of that that I complain.

Mr. President, I shall take but a few more moments of the time of the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], as I understood, said that the Federal reserve banks had placed no restriction upon loans to producers of agricultural products.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is a statement that is fundamental to this controversy; but that statement is not correct.

The Federal reserve banks did place especial restrictions upon loans upon crops. The farmer ordinarily does not need credit during the period when he is marketing his crop. If there is a market—that is, a demand which can be called a market— for the products, he sells his crop and obtains money. He does not need the same degree of credit that he does while he is making the crop. But if there is no market for his crop which can be called a market—and that is the condition which it is contended exists in certain sections of this country, at least, if not all through the country, as pertains to agriculture—if the price that is offered in such a market as we have is one-half the cost of production, the farmer hesitates in those conditions to sell; he ought to hesitate to sell. It is not in the public interest that the products of the farms of this country should be sold for one-half the cost of their production. If that is done, not only the farmer will suffer, but every other industry in the country will suffer.

We had exactly that condition beginning with September, and it has continued up to the present time. With reference to many of the products of the farmer there could not be said to be a market. When cotton sells for from 8 to 12 cents in the local market, when it costs 30 cents to produce it, it can not be said that there is any market for cotton. When wool costs twice as much to produce as is offered in the market, it can not be said that there is any market in this country for wool. And it can not be said, as a sound public policy, that the producers ought to be forced, under those conditions, to throw their products upon the market and sell them at this sacrifice, when they have a reasonable hope that that condition will be relieved if they hold their products temporarily.

The condition just described confronted the farmers in my section this fall with reference to cotton, and I think it is the same elsewhere, and with tobacco the situation was even worse, tobacco not bringing one-fourth of what it cost to produce it in certain localities, in many sections not bringing enough to pay for the fertilizer put on the land, and in many sections of the South not bringing one-half of the cost of production; and naturally the farmer desired, under those circumstances, to withhold his crop temporarily, until there was a market for it. It was for that reason that the farmers asked credit.

What was the response of the Federal reserve banks? It was that what we are trying to do in this country is to reduce prices, and in the interest of that policy of reducing prices banks should not do anything which will tend or is calculated to enhance the price of the farmers' products, although that price in such market as he has is one-half the cost of the production of the crops——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I noticed the other day that some bonds had been prepared by a farmers' association, being the form of obligation which it proposed to assume for the purpose of borrowing money upon wheat along the lines the Senator is now speaking of. That happens to be the product in this particular case. I noticed that those bonds had printed in them the rate of interest, which was 8 per cent. Suppose the relief the Senator from North Carolina is advocating were granted, and an extension of time were given to this association of farmers, or to cotton farmers in his section, at 8 per cent, we will say, or any other comparatively high rate of interest, what assurance has the Senator, or can any of us have, that that ultimately would be of any benefit to the farmers? The only way in the world that they can be benefited by it would be if in the outcome of the market, with all the uncertain contingencies which affect markets, they were able to get for their product at some future time a sufficiently higher price to pay this interest which is accumulating upon their obligation, and the other losses which they necessarily incur by this relief. I voted for this joint resolution because I was so anxious to get relief that I was ready to support any measure which does not seem to be seriously injurious, if it gives the hope, ever, of relief. But I see nothing in the measure which ultimately assures the farmers, or gives them a reasonable expectation, that they are going to be better off after they get this extension than they are now.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, one of the reasons why the farmer is not able to obtain a better price for his products is the export situation, the inability of Europe to buy our farm products as heretofore—cotton and wheat and tobacco—and the indisposition of bankers and financiers of this country, probably due to the unsettled conditions of exchange and other conditions in Europe, to finance these export transactions.

Some time ago we provided for the organization of what are known as Edge law corporations, for the purpose of providing for this situation with reference to our export trade. The object of those corporations is to bring together the farmers of the country and the bankers of the country into great export corporations for the purpose of lending money to foreign Governments and to foreign industries, to enable them to buy our products, especially our agricultural products. If those corporations are successfully organized and there is some place to which they can go and get credit in adequate amount in order to finance these exportations, it is reasonable to suppose that such relief as can come to agriculture through that source will be obtained.

While this scheme was in process of formation, to relieve just the situation which has tended largely to bring about this lack of markets in this country, the Federal Reserve Board promulgated these stringent rules of credit as applying to agriculture and made it impossible for the farmers of the country to hold their products until these corporations can be organized and this money can be raised for the purpose of affording them that relief.

Now, Mr. President, if it is necessary for the farmers of this country to hold their crops for a limited period of time, until this export situation can be relieved by being properly financed, it does not make much difference to the farmer if he has to pay 8 per cent interest upon his money or has to pay 10 per cent interest upon his money for this temporary period, because he would better pay that, or very much more than that, than to sell his crop for one-half the cost of production.

There can be no doubt, Mr. President, that when the farmer was confronted by a situation of having to sell his product, if he sold it at all, in a market which had been driven down and beaten down until it did not carry a price that would amount to one-half of the cost of production of the crop, that situation was further accentuated when the Federal Reserve Board indicated to the Federal reserve banks and to the member banks that it was undesirable that money should be lent for the purpose, as they phrased it, of withholding crops from the market.

Mr. GRONNA. They termed it speculation.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes; they termed it speculation. There is not any question about that order being issued. There is not a Senator here from the South who did not hear of it repeatedly from the banks themselves while he was home.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The flat statement was made by the officials that they would not favor any loan for the purpose of withholding commodities from the market.

Mr. SIMMONS. And the reason which they gave for that, Mr. President, was that we had just been going through an era of high prices, and that it was good policy that we should not do anything which would tend in any way to maintain prices, without any regard to the necessity, when you consider broadly the welfare of the people and the welfare of every industry in the country, of holding up the farmers' prices to a point where production hereafter would be remunerative.

I say, Mr. President, and I do not fear successful contradiction of the proposition, that if the reserve banks under this policy succeed in keeping the farmers from boosting the price of their product when it is down to the present low level and as a result the farmers are compelled to sacrifice the whole of their crops, as they have been already compelled to sacrifice a large part of them, at these unremunerative and ruinous prices, I say here that the effect of that upon agriculture will be greatly to the curtailment of the production of those crops next year. It will curtail production in this country to a point where we shall have, not a surplus to export abroad of these products, but we shall have to go into the markets of the world and buy food to feed the population of this country. That is a result, Mr. President, which I do not think we desire in this country.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if I may be allowed to direct a question or a suggestion to the Senator from North Carolina——

Mr. GRONNA. I yield to my colleague for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator realizes that the entire agricultural situation is in a state of collapse.

Mr. SIMMONS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. That affects the North and the South alike.

Mr. SIMMONS. Every section of the country.

Mr. McCUMBER. The crops affected, however, possibly are not the same. I vote for this proposition and support the Senator and my colleague in it because I think it does open up a hope of relief, and while my colleague says it is not expected to be a panacea for all the trouble, it is expected to be helpful. I think that is true. As the Senator has just said, his trouble lies in the fact that the farmers of the South can not export cotton, and I want to help them, under this bill, in every way to export their cotton. Our trouble is mainly that we are importing an enormous quantity of grain, and before we get through almost the entire surplus from Canada. I want to help the Senator in finding an export market for cotton, and I would really like to have him help us in keeping out this Canadian grain until we can begin to sell our own. I understand that a caucus was held on the other side of the Chamber this morning, which seems to indicate an opposition to the plan which, to me, is most feasible for the immediate relief of the grain growers. Why can not both sides of this Chamber unite, the one to help the exports, the other to stop the imports which are injuring us?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I think the Senator is entirely wrong in saying that a caucus was held. There has been nothing like a caucus. There has been a conference of the minority members of the Committee on Finance with the members of the minority steering committee, but there has been no caucus of the Democratic membership of the Senate.

If the Senator has in his part of the country or if any other Senator has in his part of the country an agricultural situation brought about by war conditions or as an aftermath of the war, such as we have now in the South, that situation will appeal to me very strongly for relief. But if a tariff bill, covering a large number of staple agricultural products as well as a number of manufactured products, some of which are not and can not be materially affected by tariff duties and others of which do not disclose conditions which entitle them to preferential treatment in emergency conditions, I see no reason for emergency action upon these things, and I think they should await the general tariff revision which the party in power has promised in the near future.

Mr. McCUMBER. I hope the Senator will join with us to support some provision that will take care of the things that are suffering.

Mr. SIMMONS. It may be that on investigation and discussion the wheat and the wool situation may disclose a condition with respect to importations similar to that of cotton with respect to exportation and equally disastrous—and if so, as I said, emergency action looking to quick relief will appeal very strongly to me. But, as stated before, the bill, as I understand it, which has been framed by the House Committee on Ways and Means, not only covers those two products but runs the gamut of agricultural products and includes some agricultural products which are not imported now as in the past but to a limited extent and, in addition, includes certain manufactured products which it is believed can present no reasonable claim for emergency consideration and treatment. If the bill comes to us in this form and contents, we certainly shall insist that it be treated as any other tariff measure is treated, and that after preliminary committee action it shall receive due consideration and discussion in the Senate.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I hope that no partisan politics will be injected into the discussion from either this side or the other. I know that my colleagues on the committee will bear testimony that, so far as I am personally concerned, I have not tried to favor any one section of the country as against another. If there ever was a time when the people of the United States ought to act as one, as a unit, and cooperate, it is now. There ought to be no "that side of the Chamber" or "this side of the Chamber" when it comes to the question of the rehabilitation and reconstruction of the terrible condition in which we have been placed—necessarily so, of course. It is a question that can not be dispensed with and will not be solved until the patriotic people of the country realize that there is no South and no North, no East and no West, but that we shall as one people cooperate for the best for all the people of our country.

I agree with my colleague as to the embargo on wheat. It would help us temporarily; at least, I believe it would. Possibly I am mistaken, but I believe it would. I believe that in the future, since my colleague has mentioned it, a protective tariff on farm products would be helpful to us, but that would not be as helpful to the people of the South, affecting cotton, as it would help us, because we are right in the jaws of a foreign country where we are competing every day with the products of that country.

We all know that our money is at a premium at the present time as compared with the money of the people of that country. Their wheat has brought the farmers of Canada a premium of from 15 to 40 cents a bushel above the price that the American farmer has been paid. Let me say to you that the Canadian farmer pays his debts just as easily with a Canadian dollar as does the American farmer with an American dollar.

That reverts right back to the statement made a few days ago by the able Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] that the effort to deflate the currency too rapidly means the destruction of certain industries. We can not destroy any industry without affecting them all. I would be just as careful about passing legislation which would destroy the great steel industry as I would legislation to destroy any other industry, because I know ultimately it would affect us all. But there is this difference. The people engaged in those industries are in control. They, to a certain extent at least, can hold off the rapid decline which has been evidenced and which is an actual fact. Cotton, wheat, wool, sheep, cattle—everything the farmer produces—has been reduced to ruinous prices. We only have to study the history of Rome and its downfall to know what it means to destroy an industry like agriculture.

I believe that one of the greatest mistakes the Congress could make would be not to make every possible agency function at this time. The War Finance Corporation is an agency through which a great deal of good can be accomplished. We know that it has at its disposal at least a billion dollars at any one time to place agricultural and other products in foreign countries. We know that its capital stock of $500,000,000, all subscribed to by the Government of the United States, can be multiplied six times or, in other words, $3,000,000,000 for this country. No man who has studied the condition and knows anything about it will deny the fact that it is a powerful agency for good at home and abroad.

So, Mr. President, all this talk that this is only camouflage to fool the American farmer is not true. Such statements are not founded upon facts.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. GRONNA. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. KING. As I understand the position of the Senator, and it seems to be the position of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the important thing is to find a market abroad for surplus products.

Mr. GRONNA. I believe that is true.

Mr. KING. The European nations require the surplus agricultural products of the United States.

Mr. GRONNA. I will say to the Senator that they are starving to death over there in many places, as the Senator knows better than I.

Mr. KING. The point is to extend to them credit or facilities for credit so that they may purchase the surplus products of our Government?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I do not say this by way of stirring up any controversy, but does not the Senator think that if we had entered into the League of Nations with proper reservations and stabilized Europe and gotten these new countries to functioning, their boundaries limited, there would have been no difficulty now, because these nations would have had credit with which to purchase the surplus products of the American farmer?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator from Utah address that question to the Senator from North Dakota or to our distinguished friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]?

Mr. KING. I saw the Senator from Idaho here, and I thought perhaps it would be interesting to hear his ideas on the subject.

Mr. GRONNA. So far as I am personally concerned, I wish to say, with all due respect to both Senators, that I have been trying to forget the question of the League of Nations.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I only desire to say that I understand it is planned to take a holiday recess, and I do not desire to enter upon a discussion of that question previous to the holidays.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I appreciate the observation made by the distinguished Senator from Utah, but I shall not enter into that question to-day. As the Senator knows, I was opposed to the League of Nations. I was one of the irreconcilables from the beginning. Perhaps I was wrong, but I have not yet changed my opinion. I believed I was right and still believe I am right on the question.

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] has expressed better than I could the true situation as to the money stringency affecting the farmer. The question of the able Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] directed to the Senator from North Carolina I believe can be easily answered. The farmers, especially the grain farmers, and I think it is true of the stock farmers and of the cotton farmers, can not market all their products at one time. I know from personal experience that I hustled night and day trying to get cars to ship my grain to market, and it was only with greatest difficulty that I secured a limited number of cars. As a result we were unable to bring our grain to the elevator. Unless we commenced to sell futures, which to the farmer means that he must deliver at a specific time and that he will be penalized if he does not deliver it, we were absolutely helpless. The Senator from Washington, as I understood the question, asked how could this help the farmer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My question was whether or not there was any reasonable prospect to get a better price after the interval than he could get now, and the query was whether he would be any better off or if he would not be worse off in case he did not get a better price.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not believe the farmer would be worse off, because I stated, upon my own information, of course, and I have strived to make a study of the question, that there is a shortage of wheat throughout the world to-day. If the people of the entire world were permitted to eat three square meals a day and eat bread to the amount that we generally consume in the United States, about 5 bushels per capita, there would be a great shortage of wheat throughout the world.

Here is a crop or here are crops, because I do not wish to speak only of wheat, produced at great cost; in fact, at a cost which will only pay the labor. Then the question is asked, Why do they not sell and pay their debts? Why, the only debt that could be paid would in the majority of cases be labor. I know that is true as to grain. There has not been a bushel of wheat produced in the United States in the year 1920 which, on the average, has not cost the farmers more than $3 a bushel, and he has to sell it to-day for from $1.25 to possibly $1.40.

The consumers of the cities are all the time being told, "It is the outrageously high prices of the natural products which compel you to pay such high prices for what you consume." Have Senators recently noticed any tremendous reduction in the prices of what they buy?

Mr. President, only the other night a person addressed that question to me. I saw in a store some puffed wheat on a shelf for sale. I asked the storekeeper, "What does that cost?" He told me. I bought a package and weighed it, and the price I paid for it amounted to $56 per bushel for the wheat of which it was made. I said to him, "I sold some wheat just before I left home for $1.44 per bushel. Now, if I should furnish the wheat for nothing and pay for transporting it to the manufacturer, how much would it reduce to the consumer the price of this food? It would still be more than $54 a bushel, would it not?" That is exactly the way these things work out.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an interruption, though I apologize to him for it?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. KING. May I inquire of the Senator whether or not it is his purpose and the purpose of other members of the committee to antagonize the motion which I have made to concur in the amendment of the other House to the joint resolution? The reason I ask the question is that a number of Senators desire to leave the Chamber, but they will remain here if there is going to be a record vote, for they are in favor of concurring in the amendment which has been made to the joint resolution by the other House. I do not want to disturb the Senator, but I merely wish to give information to other Senators.

Mr. GRONNA. I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that it has been a difficult matter for me to make up my mind what to do. I am going to do just whatever the spirit moves me to do. When I shall have finished my few remarks—and I should have done so long ago had not other Senators, to whom, of course, I was very glad to yield, interrupted me.

Mr. KING. Then I may inform other Senators that the conduct of the committee depends upon how the spirit moves the chairman of the committee?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know how it will move the other members of the committee, for they have not as yet spoken.

Mr. President, further answering the question of the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], as directed to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], I believe that it is not only proper but that it is the duty and the function of Congress at this particular time to do everything it possibly can to help bridge over the situation, and to help all the people of the country, whether they are engaged in agricultural pursuits or in any other industry, to find a market for their products.

This joint resolution will do that to a limited extent—at least to the extent of a billion dollars at any one time. The Senator knows that the fund will be paid back, and that it will not be limited to a billion dollars. We may thereby do a tremendous amount of business with foreign nations. It is not only possible but it is probable that through the agency of the War Finance Corporation billions of dollars' worth of products may be exported, but it is, of course, required that the money shall be paid back at certain intervals or at stated times.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am in hearty accord with the objects which the Senator has in view; I know his good faith and the good services that he is rendering the country; and I hope that the result will be as he suggests. The inquiry I made was only to elicit information.

Mr. GRONNA. I am sure of that. I know of no Senator who has been more willing to help the industry of agriculture and all other industries than has the Senator from Washington. We do not all see through the same glasses; we look at matters from a different angle at times; but I know that the Senate has not been recreant to its duties. During the present session the Senate has passed the Capper-Hersman bill, to permit farm associations to cooperate and organize for the purpose of bringing about better marketing conditions, a question which has been debated a great deal among the farmers of the country. I think the present Members of the United States Senate may say that we have done our duty. We have passed that measure, and I believe it is now in conference.

Let me say to the Senator from Washington that he wrote me a letter—I do not suppose he has as yet received my reply—in reference to the special matter referred to. The Senator from Washington, the Senator from North Carolina, and other Senators are ready to cooperate to help the farmers. We have felt that we were willing to amend the Sherman antitrust law. We are willing to say that it shall not be unlawful for the farmers throughout the United States to get together and organize and cooperate for the betterment of their conditions and ultimately for the betterment of the condition of the consumers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. For the benefit of the whole country.

Mr. GRONNA. For the benefit of the whole country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that the Senator from North Dakota has rendered a great service, in his capacity as chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, by promoting the consideration and forwarding the passage of the measure to which he has just referred. I have not the slightest doubt that enormous benefits will come to the agricultural classes of this country from the Capper bill. There has been some reference made to the charge that it gives especial exemption to the agricultural classes from the effects of the Sherman antitrust law. As I have examined the bill and listened to the debates on the subject, it seems to me that the only thing in that respect which the measure does is more specifically to define the limitations upon the formation of combinations in the case of farmers' cooperative societies than did the Sherman antitrust law. The Sherman antitrust law, as construed by the Supreme Court, applied the rule that there should be no undue or unreasonable restraint of commerce. The Capper bill, which was passed in the Senate the other day, applies a more definite and specific rule to farmers' cooperative associations in that it provides that they shall not be unlawful unless they enhance the price of the commodity.

Mr. KING. Or lessen competition.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding was that it was confined to the enhancement of the prices; but even if the additional phrase is incorporated in some parts of the measure that still will be more specific than the general rule of reasonable or undue restraint of trade, which is a matter that varies with every tribunal which has to define it.

Passing from that matter, I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question with regard to that feature of the pending legislation to which he has just now alluded, namely, reviving the War Finance Corporation. Can the Senator point out anything in the act creating the War Finance Corporation giving them any powers that they could utilize in the present emergency? My understanding of the act creating that corporation is that it was a war measure; that the powers conferred upon the corporation, certainly in so far as any individual was concerned, were limited to the aid of an industry which was essential to the carrying on of the war. If there is anything other than that in the law that would enable them in time of peace to come to the aid of the farmers I have not been able to discover it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that is true so far as the original act is concerned, but the act of March 3, 1919, provides specifically that the War Finance Board may sell bonds not exceeding a billion dollars at any one time to be used to aid the sale of products in foreign countries; and, being a farmer, there is not any doubt in my mind that the War Finance Corporation will absolutely have such power up to the time that the war period shall have expired; and it is specifically stated in the law that it shall not expire until 12 months from the time that the President of the United States shall officially announce that we are at peace. So there can be no question about the power of the War Finance Corporation.

Mr. President, the War Finance Corporation act was passed as an emergency measure. It was passed for the purpose of aiding anyone engaged in the industries necessary to successfully prosecute the war. When Congress passed this law it had in mind the necessity of permitting it to function not only during the period of the war but 12 months after peace had actually been declared, and it is specifically stated in the law that this time should begin after the termination of the war, and that the date of such termination should be fixed by proclamation of the President of the United States.

Everyone knows that the services of the War Finance Corporation could be more helpful in the crisis which would necessarily follow the termination of a tremendous war, and at the beginning of the rehabilitation period it could do more and better service in helping all the industries in disposing of surplus stocks of products, thereby substantially stabilizing the markets. We know that during the period of actual war there was demand for all of our products, and it was not as important for this board to function then as it is now, when there are no funds for the purchase of any of our products, and I might say when there is no market except a very demoralized market.

To say that the setting aside of $500,000,000 by the Government of the United States will unduly burden the Treasury of the United States, when it is possible for this corporation to function and give relief in a small way at least to every industry, can not be substantiated by facts. Outside of this half a billion dollars, the law specifically provides in section 17 "that the United States shall not be liable for the payment of any bond or other obligation or the interest thereon issued or incurred by the corporation, nor shall it incur any liability in respect of any act or omission of the corporation."

So that the United States is not legally liable for the payment of any of these bonds. We only grant the privilege to this corporation to issue its bonds without being taxed, which makes the bonds attractive, and this was absolutely necessary in order to dispose of them to the people of our own country.

If there ever was an emergency existing, it exists to-day, and we can not accept the argument that the joint resolution should not pass because this is not a complete remedy. We all know that it will not give complete relief to those who are in financial distress, but it is a measure which will give some relief; it is an instrumentality through which relief can and will be given to those who need financial aid; it is one of the bricks to be used in the structure, and it is the foundation brick. Those who make objection to this measure because it will inflate the currency should remember that we are practically the only nation on this globe whose currency is at par, and we must not overlook the fact that it is as important to protect the people who are engaged in our industries as it is to jealously guard the parity of the American dollar.

This is only the beginning of a great reconstruction scheme, and if we are ever to do business with the people of middle Europe we are in a position to extend credit, and if the Allies of Europe want us to extend that credit it is for them to say so; but America, in order to extend that credit, must have a first lien or a first mortgage upon the assets and revenues of the people of those countries.

I realize that the passage of this joint resolution is no cure-all for all the financial ills confronting us at the present time. However, I believe that if this resolution is passed, so that the War Finance Corporation may begin to function, it will be helpful in many ways, and especially can it be helpful in disposing of our surplus products in the markets of foreign countries.

I trust that no Senator will consider that the reviving of the Finance Corporation will add any additional burdens upon the Treasury of the United States, because that is one of the things we are seeking to avoid in passing this joint resolution.

I assume that we are all familiar with the provisions of the War Finance Corporation act. Section 2 of that act provides that the capital stock of the corporation shall be $500,000,000, all of which shall be subscribed by the United States of America. It can issue certificates of indebtedness to six times its capital stock. The management of the corporation is vested in a board of directors consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall be chairman of the board, and four other persons to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The corporation is given a wide latitude in the transaction of its business.

I shall not take the time of the Senate to enumerate the powers of this corporation, because the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] gave a most complete analysis of its powers and its operations. I will simply say that it would be an agency or an instrumentality through which business transactions touching all kinds of business could and should be transacted. I think we all realize that an injury done to any industry, whether it is the manufacturing industry, agricultural industry, or any other industry, will seriously affect all industries. I think, therefore, it is our duty to do what we can to meet this financial crisis, which can be met, but which can only be overcome by the patriotic cooperation of all the American people. We are all jealous of maintaining the American dollar at par, but a too rapid deflation at a time when our Government, as well as individual citizens, are burdened with tremendous debts is destructive of all business. We should and must realize that we should make haste slowly, so that it will not too seriously affect the orderly marketing of our products.

We have listened to the statements of high-class representative men engaged in the leading industries of agriculture in our country. All these industries are in a deplorable financial condition, and the least thing we can do is to be helpful in any and every possible way to give to those engaged in any American industry all the relief at our command.

There are countries in Europe to-day where the people are starving for the want of food. There are people in foreign lands who are not properly fed and not properly clothed. We have plenty of all these products; not only have we plenty, but we have a large surplus; and it seems to me that there ought to be enough American genius to devise some method whereby these people who are suffering from hunger and cold may be supplied with the necessities which we possess in such great abundance, and thereby give relief to those unfortunate people, and at the same time remedy the financial distress which exists among our own people.

Mr. President, this is no time for any American citizen who wants to be known as a patriot to transact business simply to fill his own pockets. The day of quick returns and large profits has passed. The values of certain commodities have shrunk from an abnormally high value to almost nothing. Let me say, Mr. President, that it has been estimated—it is, of course, only an estimate—that the values of agricultural products have shrunk since the beginning of this year more than $5,000,000,000. In the face of that, how can we expect anything else than that a deplorable condition should exist in the rural sections of the country? This is especially true with reference to products of the farm, and the products of those who are unorganized; and it is the duty of every true American to help to the utmost of his ability to rehabilitate and to stabilize market values in all lines of industries without attempting to force abnormal gains or profits. It is as important to-day as it was when our boys were on the fields of France to sacrifice our own interests and to work for the benefit of the people of our country. In that way only can we escape the dangers and the difficulties which we must face.

This is no time for any true American to work for himself alone. This is no time for any true American citizen to bear upon the prejudice of the American people, but we must frankly and fearlessly face the situation as it is. The ship of state can not escape passing through this financial Charybdis and Scylla, but we must have pilots who both know how and are willing to save the ship. If we remain true patriots we can weather the storm, and we can overcome the difficulties staring us in our faces to-day, but it can only be done through cooperation.

CONFIRMATION OF HON. JOHN F. NUGENT.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I move, as in open executive session, that the nomination of my colleague, Hon. JOHN F. NUGENT, be laid before the Senate for confirmation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho moves, as in open executive session, that the Senate consider the following nomination from the President of the United States, which the Chair lays before the Senate. Is there objection to the procedure?

Mr. GRONNA. Let the nomination be read.

The reading clerk read as follows:

JOHN F. NUGENT, of Boise, Idaho, to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission for a term of seven years, vice William B. Colver, term expired.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the nomination? There being none, Shall the nomination be confirmed? If there be no objection, the nomination will be confirmed. It is so ordered, in the absence of objection, and the President will be notified.

FINANCING OF AGRICULTURAL OPERATIONS.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the amendments of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I am somewhat disappointed that the action of the other part of our legislative machinery did not see fit to incorporate section 2 in the joint resolution. I did not look for any great change of policy of the Federal Reserve Board in its announced intention to contract and deflate the currency, but I did look for a reestablishment of confidence among the business people and the people at large if Congress should serve notice on those charged with the administration of the laws that we passed that they should be so administered as to conserve the best interests of this country, and that the great agricultural industry of this country, upon which everything else rests, should be the first consideration of this body.

We speak about our export trade being restricted. Why should it not be restricted? Why should not our domestic commerce be restricted? In fact, Mr. President, the collapse that has come is the natural, logical result of the action of our officials in charge of the Federal Reserve Board and of the Treasury.

Now, just let me put a common-sense statement to this body. If you were engaged in the export business, or if you were engaged in a domestic business, and those having charge of the machinery of exchange, those whom the Federal reserve act has made responsible for the banking conditions of this country, were to let it be known that rigid restriction and deflation was what they were going to insist upon and demand as far as the law allowed them to demand it—and let me say just here that a careful reading of that act will show that practically the banking interests of America are in the hands of the board of governors—what would this exporter do; what would your domestic merchant or your domestic business man do? Why, knowing that there was to be this curtailment and restriction, he would begin to get out of the market, in order that he might not be caught with a thing of inflated value as compared with the deflation that would immediately and subsequently follow.

Everybody knows that everything moves along the line of least resistance; and when this order went out to the banks that there must be a curtailment, there must be a restriction of credit, the local banks, both the members of the Federal Reserve System and the State banks, would naturally restrict on those things that were weakest; and what paper is the most notoriously weak from a banker's standpoint?

It is the paper held by the farmer, who has no other resources than the commodity he has hypothecated; and the result was that this great, unorganized, heterogeneous mass, the aggregate of whose efforts means the bread and meat that you and I eat and the clothes that we wear, were necessarily those who felt the radical and destructive precipitation of a drop in price. We sit here and discuss the farmers of this country, but only the smallest number of us have any realizing sense of the conditions under which they must labor and the conditions under which they sell their products.

I want to repeat that the condition existing now is practically altogether the result of the word that was sent forth that there must be deflation and there must be contraction. If you will take the exports that ran along, even in farm products, up until the time that it came to be assured that this deflation and contraction and withholding of credit was going to be a fact, you will find that there was scarcely any diminution whatever in the export of these articles; but when it was found to be a fact that there was a rigid attempt to restrict these credits, as a matter of course it began to affect the exports. Are we to assume that the business men of the Old World, warworn and demoralized as they are, would not take advantage of a falling market in America to withhold their purchases as an American would withhold them? Is it not reasonable to assume that those who have been importing our goods into the Old World, having understood that the policy of this Government was to reduce prices, would order no further imports until the bottom was touched, or at least would only put in their orders for such things as absolute necessity required them to order? So the dearth of orders for export naturally comes from the same thing that has destroyed the American market—that those who hold the lifeblood of commerce in their hands are crying "deflation, contraction," and as a result we have collapse.

The facilities for transportation and communication in modern business are so perfect that the European importer of American products is as thoroughly posted minute by minute, as to the conditions existing here, as we are ourselves, and the consequence of this unfortunate attitude has been to destroy the foreign market, as well as the domestic market, and my hope was that if the Congress of the United States, recognizing the conditions, as we must recognize them, would, by an act on its part, without amending the law, serve notice on these officials that these drastic measures were not in keeping with the sentiments of this body, it would tend to restore confidence. For that reason I hoped that the second section of the joint resolution would be agreed to.

Mr. President, it is useless for me to stand here and reiterate what I have said about the conditions under which the farmer produces and sells, as compared with the conditions under which the manufacturer produces and sells.

I took occasion the other day in a speech to analyze that difference, and it seems as if the press and—I see by an article appearing in one of my own State papers—my colleague misapprehended the position I took. I said, in effect, that the manufacturers of cotton goods, both North and South, have not reduced the price of their finished product, according to the information I had, commensurate with the drop in the price of the raw material out of which they made the finished product; and that if they had not, then they were making the same percentage of profit, or perhaps greater, than they did when they were paying the peak prices for the raw material; going upon this process of reasoning, that if I buy a given product at 40 cents a pound and make two to three hundred per cent, and the raw product drops to 20 cents a pound, or 50 per cent of its value, and the manufactured article drops 33⅓ per cent, I make a greater profit than I did when I was paying 40 cents.

But let us grant for the sake of the argument that the price of the finished product drops the same as the raw material did, and both of them were standing relatively the same, then the profit that was made was just as great as it was before. I was not adversely criticizing the manufacturer; I was simply showing that the conditions under which he produced and sold put him in a position where he could protect himself, while the farmer was in no such position.

I am just as proud of the development of the cotton-manufacturing industries in my State as any man may be; but I am not, because of that, going to lose sight of the fact that the manufacturer is an artificial body, producing its own artificial laws and governing its own market to a large extent, while the farmer is a natural producer, the natural man using the natural soil, subject to the law of nature, over which he has no control and can have no control.

And just here I want to use an illustration. When the cotton manufacturer sells a bill of goods he figures out what his profits will be on those goods at that day's market. Under the system of what is known as "hedging" on the cotton exchange he is insured against loss. I sell a bill of goods, agree with the purchaser at a certain price based on the price of cotton then quoted on the board—let us say 15 cents. I figure a profit to myself, as the manufacturer, based on that current price to-day of 15 cents a pound. I immediately buy a contract that would call for as much cotton as would be used in the manufacture of the goods. Suppose cotton goes up a cent a pound before I get ready to buy the actual cotton to convert it into cloth, or $5 a bale. The raw material out of which I am to manufacture these goods likewise has gone up a cent a pound. I have made 1 cent on the board, because I bought at 15 and it is now 16, and the party selling me that contract is indebted to me $5 a bale more on every bale than he was when I bought.

I do not call him for the cotton but cancel my contract—buy the cotton in the open market at the price of 16 cents. I pay 15, and he owes me 1, the margin, so that the cotton costs me 15 cents. New York paid 1, I bought it for 16, discounted it, and therefore I got my cotton at 15 and get the profit I had on the original bargain.

Let us suppose it goes down a cent a pound, or is 14 cents. Then I have lost $5 in New York. But I get my cotton a cent cheaper, and in buying it a cent cheaper I have discounted the loss of the $5, and it has just cost me 15 cents. I pay New York a cent a pound; I pay the other man 14; 14 plus 1 is 15; so that if it goes up or goes down I am absolutely protected in the profits that I have in goods. I hope that those who are here understand what they call a hedge. It is an insurance against loss.

When I have bought this contract and sold these goods for some future day's delivery, I am then absolutely indifferent, in a manner, to what the market price of such cotton is, because I have hedged my spot purchases, and whatever day I see fit to go and buy the raw material I am protected by the hedge. Therefore a manufacturer of goods out of the raw material is in a position to protect and guarantee his profits or shut down his mill and quit, whereas where would the man who plants a crop hedge, and what would he hedge on? The ordinary farmer would not dare sell a bill for the delivery of cotton of any grade or any quantity, because, when he puts the seed in the ground and begins the cultivation of it, the quantity and the quality of it are beyond him. If seasons are bad and he makes a half crop, he can not fill the order. If the seasons are good, so far as production is concerned, it is subject to the weather, and he can not guarantee the quality. So that he is absolutely without any protection whatever.

Not only that; he has no reserve capital by which he can combine with his fellows and tide over a disaster such as now confronts us. Sixty per cent of the American cotton crop is made by the tenant who works on the share system, and whose bread and meat from day to day is gotten by his promise to deliver what cotton he produces, or a sufficient amount to meet his living expenses of that year. And to stand here and talk about the farmer taking his medicine along with other people, with a deflated and contracted currency, is the same as tying the fodder at the top of a tree and telling the mule to come and get it.

I had hoped that this body, recognizing the radical difference between the natural producer, the farmer producer, and the artificial producer, the manufacturer, would serve notice that we propose that the Federal Reserve Board, and every other agency that could, should aid and assist him in getting at least the cost of production.

Now, to refer once again to the misapprehension as to my position, I see by the article of my colleague, to which I referred, that he claims that no such percentage of profit was made, and explains that stock dividends are not in the form of profits, but a distribution of the liabilities of the concern. Some people very close to me have been the beneficiaries of stock dividends, and they now own about twice as much stock as they did before without paying a dollar for it, and that stock is at par, so that if you had $1 of stock before you have $2 now. If that is not profit, I would like for some one who is well versed in what stock dividends mean to explain. I will say that this individual is very close to me. Under the decision of the court stock dividends, being a liability on the part of the concern issuing them, do not come under certain forms of taxation.

If the courts of my land say that is all right and the manufacturer says it is all right, I say amen, let it be all right. But I say the farmer does not have any stock dividends. He is not an unnatural or an artificial corporate body. He is bone and sinew, the man with the hoe, out in the field, struggling to get to a point where he can live decently and have some hope and aspiration for the future. He does not need any law of incorporation; he does not have to come to his Government and ask for the privilege of going out and tilling the field. That is recognized as his birthright. It is also recognized as his birthright that he must bear the burden of the whole superstructure of organized society without enjoying the wealth he helps produce.

I drew no insidious distinction; I had no criticism to make of the mills of my country, either North or South. But I was showing how those who have been converting the raw material of cotton could protect themselves and did protect themselves against such a cataclysm as has now occurred, while the defenseless individual in the field was without any means of retrenchment. I do claim and do reiterate that declaring stock dividends is tantamount to passing on to the stockholders their profits in another form.

Mr. President, I hope that the cotton manufacturers of my State and of the East can make all the money they desire to make; but in making it I hope they will cooperate with the man upon whom they are dependent for the raw material, helping him to make his legitimate profit. I believe the mills of my State have largely sympathized with the conditions under which the farmers have had to produce, and I have almost come to the conclusion, Mr. President, that our exchanges, stock, grain, and textile, will have to be more rigidly governed, or taxed out of existence—dealing in what they never own and never produce, taking advantage of unfortunate conditions to make fortunes out of a depressed market, or in other unfortunate conditions to make fortunes out of a market that is too inflated.

Now, my attention was called to another misapprehension or another erroneous report which went out. I want it distinctly understood that I am not apologizing in any way, shape, or form for the speech I made. It was simply a comparison of conditions under which the natural producers produce and the artificial producers produce. But I wish to call attention to another statement that was involved in the report that went to the press, which was that I said that the manufacturers had not reduced the prices of their finished product nor wages.

I never mentioned wages. That is a question for them to decide. The question of lowering their prices was a question for them to decide. I referred to the prices as the reports were given me, but I did not refer to the wages which they were paying.

I have asked the departments of the Government to furnish me an official statement of the profits which the mills, North and South, made during the years 1917, 1918, 1919, and as far in 1920 as it is possible for them to obtain them, and they are now in process of being formulated so I may use them. Then there will be no guesswork about it. It will be an official statement as to what profits they did make.

In referring to the resolution that is now before us, I think, in view of the exigencies of the case and the necessity for some action, that perhaps it would be better for us to accept the matter as it comes over from the House. I am sorry that the direction could not have been given to the Federal Reserve Board that we, the Congress of the United States, desire to reinspire confidence in a demoralized business world; that we recognize that there are resources enough in this country and wealth enough for us to furnish a market to consume that which we produce at a proper and reasonable profit to those of us who produce it; and that there is no rhyme or reason in this condition of affairs existing with the bountiful crops that we have made and the demand that is evident in the Old World and the new.

I sincerely hope that if the passage of the joint resolution directing the rehabilitation of the War Finance Corporation does nothing else it will serve notice on the public that the American Congress is in sympathy with those who produce the wealth of the country and does not propose to sit idly by and see them sacrificed. We are still the lawmaking body, thank God, and it is our duty to enforce the laws we have made.

The Federal reserve act, if the joint resolution is passed, will have the effect of meeting conditions right now that exist. But we have made a Frankenstein which has destroyed us up to the present. Just to reverse the order of things, I say that the great, wonderful system that financed the world during the greatest war the world ever saw, that financed Europe, and caused our business to proceed without there being a single bank failure in America in 1919, while in 1920 they have multiplied beyond what the public is aware of—I say to-day that the system which could withstand the shock of war and the drafts upon the resources of the country such as were never dreamed of, certainly can withstand the strain necessary to give a profitable price to those who have produced actual wealth and now offer it to a starving and naked world.

Is it not peculiar that in the spring when the farmer comes to make his crop he can get all the credit he wants to make the crop, a thing that is not in existence, a thing dependent upon season; but when he gets the crop, when he has an actual commercial asset in his hands, he is denied credit when he has something that is actually tangible and salable. Why should we then, when his crop is made, deny him credit, destroy his profit, and perhaps ruin him? Of course, this is done because he is unable to protect himself. They can make money more easily out of him than they can out of anybody else, and that is the situation.

So far as I am concerned, as a member of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, with great reluctance I shall vote to accept the action of the House upon the joint resolution.

During the speech of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will kindly suspend at this point while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. A bill (S. 3390) to provide further for the national defense; to establish a self-sustaining Federal agency for the manufacture, production, and development of the products of atmospheric nitrogen for military, experimental, and other purposes; to provide research laboratories and experimental plants for the development of fixed-nitrogen production; and for other purposes.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I ask that the bill be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection? There being none, it is so ordered.

After the speech of Mr. SMITH of South Carolina,

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall vote to accept the amendments of the House, not because I think the Federal Reserve Board has met in the proper way the responsibilities that have rested upon it during the past few months. On the contrary, I do not. I vote to accept it because it is so important that at once the War Finance Corporation should resume operations.

The value of the operations of that corporation will depend upon the character of men the President appoints to take charge of the work and the spirit in which they perform their duties. If the President gives us broad-minded men, with vision, with knowledge of foreign conditions, and with a desire to really serve their own country, that board can do much toward furnishing markets for our raw materials absolutely necessary to the rehabilitation of central Europe.

As I said when the resolution was considered before in this body, I regard the rehabilitation industrially of central Europe essential to a sound financial and economical condition the world over. There are people willing to work in central Europe who are without the raw material, and industries without the finances necessary to buy that raw material. The reparations commission is preparing to fix the indemnity for Germany, and I hope it will soon reach a conclusion. I hope also that, recognizing the necessity for the acquirement of raw material in middle Europe to produce something with which to meet the indemnity Germany must pay, a concession will be made, and a privilege given to make purchases of raw material, with an obligation to pay for raw material superior to the obligation carried by the indemnity. With this done, a broad field at once is opened for the sale of our raw material into middle Europe, but it must be on long time, time longer than exporters are prepared to give, time longer than banks normally give.

The War Finance Corporation was furnished, under section 23 of the act adopted March 3, 1919, with power to meet this situation in the interest of our own country, and some who supported it were moved by a desire to serve those in distress who had been but a short time ago our opponents in battle. The war being over, there were some even who were willing to aid a fallen foe.

So I have great hope for what the War Finance Corporation can accomplish. I do not mean that it can relieve the entire economic troubles in our country, but it can substantially help if men with vision and a proper spirit take charge of and handle the work. There can be a set of men put in charge who could nullify its powers and do nothing. Its usefulness will depend solely upon the character of men charged with the execution of its responsibilities, and if it fails to do substantial good it will fail on account of the lack of proper men in charge of its work.

I wish to come to the second section, which I agreed to abandon, it having been stricken out by the House. In voting to abandon it I do not mean to express an approval of the course which has been pursued by the Federal Reserve Board. I do not approve it. I do not think it has been wise. I think in a number of ways it has been unwise. Instead of moving aggressively last year to check soaring prices, in my opinion they have waited until the peak was reached and prices were going downhill, and then the action of the board was such that they might go more rapidly downhill. The kick should have been against soaring prices. The help should have been to check the downhill progress.

It has been said that they have done nothing to depress prices upon farm products. Everything that has come from the Treasury and from this board has been hostile in spirit to credits upon staple agricultural products. The spirit which should have gone from that board has not encouraged member banks to aid. I will name one particular thing that they did, injurious to the handling of farm and other products.

Since the organization of the Federal Reserve Board, until this fall, factors' papers have been subject to rediscount in the regional banks. But this year the Federal Reserve Board formally decided that factors' paper could not be rediscounted under the Federal reserve act and forbade the further discounting in the regional banks of factors' paper. I submit that the opinion rendered holding that under the act factors' paper could not be rediscounted in regional banks adds no credit to the legal acumen of whoever advised them. If I had had a law clerk in my office when I practiced law who rendered that opinion I would have advised him to go back to law school.

What is a factor? There are woolen factors; there are factors handling various classes of manufactured products; there are cotton factors. I am perhaps more familiar with the cotton factor than I am with any other class of factors, but to an extent they all largely engage in the same general line of work. I will describe the cotton factor very briefly. The cotton factor is a man, as a rule, who is located at some distributing point, to whom the farmers ship their cotton. This is usually done by the small farmers, the quantity shipped by each producer being usually quite small. The cotton factor frequently advances money to the farmer to pick his cotton and to gin it, and he usually pays the freight on the cotton to the warehouse, where it is accumulated. There he has it classified and put into better shape for the market.

The advances which he makes are a mere incident to his business, in order to help prepare the cotton for the market. He makes his profit from the sale of the product. His business is that of a salesman; his advances are not merely investments, but are principally an incident to his business.

The paper of cotton factors is for advances made to men who raise cotton, to help gather the crop, to gin the cotton, and usually to help ship the cotton into the distributing point, and there to classify it and put it in shape, where an order for 100 bales, say, of a particular kind of cotton may be taken from the various characters of cotton shipped into the warehouse. By this means the cotton can be furnished to spinners of the exact character they require, and a market is thus readily obtained. The Federal Reserve Board held that the note of such a factor, given for money advanced to his clients, the raisers of cotton for the production and preparation of the crop, and secured by warehouse receipts for cotton, was not eligible for rediscount in a regional bank. In order to render this decision they violated three provisions of the act; they twice interpolated words, and in the third instance struck out a word; otherwise they could not have given such a meaning to the act. They did it after for five years they had allowed the rediscount of such paper; but this fall they discontinued doing so.

Now, let us see what the act says. The language is:

> Any Federal reserve bank may discount notes, drafts, and bills of exchange arising out of actual commercial transactions—

That is the most restrictive language in the act, but lest the transaction should be entirely limited to commercial transactions there is further language of explanation. The act continues:

> That is, notes, drafts, and bills of exchanges, issued or drawn for agricultural, industrial, or commercial purposes, or the proceeds of which have been used, or are to be used, for such purposes—

Admitting that the proceeds of the notes of cotton factors were used for agricultural purposes, what has the board done? They say that the act means that only the farmer himself who uses the money can discount his note, but that the factor who advances the money for agricultural purposes, where the money is used for agricultural purposes, can not do it. They interpolate words that are not in the statute and limit it to the original farmer when the language does not at all limit it to the man who cultivated the soil. Again the act goes on to say:

> Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise, from being eligible for such discount.

Lest the language could be misunderstood, the act goes further, as I have just read, and states that nothing in the act must be construed to prevent the rediscount of paper secured by staple agricultural products, and so forth. The factors' paper was secured by agricultural products, and the money went to help make the crop and to put the crop in shape for the market.

What did the Federal Reserve Board say? They said the word "such" related back to commercial and required the transaction to be a commercial one; that the language of amplification was nullified by the word "such," when the act said:

> Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit such notes, drafts, and bills of exchange, secured by staple agricultural products, or other goods, wares, or merchandise.

They held that it did not mean what it said, because the word "such" related back to "commercial," and although secured as required by staple agricultural products, the board did not consider it a commercial transaction and decided that the paper could not be rediscounted. Let me read the next clause, which they misconstrued:

> But such definition shall not include notes, drafts, or bills covering merely investments.

When they came to that they said it was an investment; they eliminated the word "merely"; they said it was investment paper; they struck out the word "merely" in their construction and said, as there was an element of investment, the paper could not be rediscounted.

I say, Mr. President, that the opinion rendered by the board was not creditable to it, especially in view of the fact that for five years they had been rediscounting factors' paper.

I do not know whether or not they have applied their ruling to woolen factors. I have recently heard evidence about the wool business which indicates that factors handle wool; factors certainly handle manufactured products, but, so far as I know, the board has only applied the ruling to cotton factors. They have simply utterly misinterpreted the act to carry out, I will not say a forced construction, but an impossible construction, to cut off the rediscount privilege of a particular class of men who handle at least one-third of the entire cotton crop, gathering it at New Orleans, Memphis, Savannah, Galveston, and other places, putting it in warehouses, and classifying it so that it becomes suited for market and so that an order for a hundred bales of a specific character of cotton can be filled, although no one individual farmer could fill it. The individual farmer's cotton is of different grades, yet by collecting a large amount of cotton in their warehouses any particular grade can be selected by the factors out of their clients' goods in their control and put upon the market.

I only rose to say that I shall agree to the House amendment, because I think it very important at once to put in operation the War Finance Corporation and give it a chance properly to operate. I was unwilling, however, to cast my vote accepting the House amendment without expressing myself briefly with regard to the Federal Reserve Board. I think that the Federal Reserve Board ought to reduce the rate of interest. The Senator from North Dakota referred to 8 per cent charged on farmers' notes. In many sections the rate of rediscount in the regional banks is 7 per cent, so that 8 per cent is as little as it was possible to charge in handling paper going out from the member banks. I believe if they would reduce the rate of interest to 4 or 5 per cent it would have a most wholesome effect. I think they ought to change their policy, let the member banks understand that the spirit of the Federal reserve act is not to-day being properly executed, and liberalize their credit to help the agricultural interests of this country at this time to enable farmers to sell in an orderly way, but not to aid them to hoard. I utterly repudiate the suggestion that a farmer who raises wheat that must be eaten during a 12 months' period, and who undertakes to hold his wheat and sell it by degrees is hoarding. What would the speculator do if the farmer were obliged to sell it all at once? He would keep it and sell it along through the 12 months' period. How much better it is for the man who produces it to be able to keep it and sell it month by month as the consumer needs it. It is better for the consumer as well as for the farmer. The suggestion that for a farmer to hold a crop maturing only once a year and sell it along during the year as the ultimate consumer needs it is hoarding or speculating is a suggestion which I utterly resent. It lacks intelligence; it lacks vision. May the time come, in part as a result of the bill we agreed to last week, when by farm organizations and farm cooperation the tiller of the soil shall be in a position to market his crop slowly, to market it to the consumer in order that the consumer as well as the producer may avoid the speculative treatment of farm products by middlemen. Such a condition will bring down the price to the consumer, while it will improve the price to the producer, and anyone with a proper knowledge of conditions should be glad to contribute to bring about so desirable a result.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I shall consume only a very short time. I am very anxious to have this joint resolution voted upon.

I am heartily in favor of the legislation proposed. I regret the fact that the House has seen fit to strike out section 2, but I believe that so much good will come from the reinstatement of the War Finance Corporation that I am willing to go ahead with this legislation and wait until after the holidays, when, if necessary, we can introduce another joint resolution directing the Federal Reserve Board to do just what we desire done in regard to giving aid to agriculture.

Mr. President, the Federal Reserve Board is not the only board that deserves criticism with regard to its conduct toward agriculture. I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate a matter of great interest to the cotton-growing States and to the public generally.

Last week in this city the Board of Crop Estimates made public its estimate of the cotton crop of the United States for 1920. Knowing, as I do, that the present cotton crop is the fifth successive small crop produced in the United States, I was utterly astounded at the crop board's estimate of the cotton crop of 1920. The board estimated this year's cotton crop to be 12,987,000 bales. These figures do such violence to the facts, and are so at variance with the truth as to the amount of cotton produced this year, that I felt it my duty to challenge their correctness, and to give to the Senate and the country facts and figures that sustain my contention.

Mr. President, I contend that the Board of Crop Estimates has overestimated the present cotton crop by at least 1,250,000 bales. We had ginned to December 1 of this year 10,144,000 bales. In two other crop years within the last ten—to wit, 1910 and 1916—we ginned approximately the same amount as that ginned to December 1, 1920. In 1910 we had ginned to December 1 10,139,000 bales, and there remained of that crop to be ginned after that date 1,428,000 bales. The amount of cotton produced that year was 11,567,000 bales. In 1916 we had ginned to December 1 10,352,000 bales, and there remained to be ginned after that date 1,011,000 bales. The amount of cotton produced that year was 11,363,000 bales.

It will be seen from these figures that in the other two crop years in which the amount ginned to December 1 was around 10,000,000 bales, the amount remaining to be ginned in both of those years after December 1 was less than 1,500,000 bales.

If we should add to the amount of 10,144,000 bales ginned to December 1 of this year 1,500,000 bales—the amount, we will say, that remained to be ginned after December 1—we will have a crop of 11,644,000 bales. This amount falls short of the crop board's estimate of this year's cotton crop by 1,343,000 bales.

In 1914, when we produced 16,000,000 bales of cotton, the largest crop ever produced in the United States, we had ginned to December 1 of that year 3,024,000 bales more than we ginned to December 1 this year, and there remained to be ginned of that bumper crop after December 1, 1914, 2,832,000 bales. These figures constitute the largest number of bales ever gathered and ginned during that period in any one year; and yet, in order to reach the crop board's estimate of the cotton crop for this year, we would have to gin more cotton between December 1 and the end of the season than we did for the same period in 1914, when we produced the largest crop of cotton ever produced in the United States.

The average amount of cotton ginned for the last five years after December 1 was 1,745,000 bales. If we should add that amount to the 10,144,000 bales ginned to December 1 of this year, we have 11,889,000 bales. This amount is 1,098,000 bales less than the crop board's estimate of this year's cotton crop.

The warm and dry fall season of 1920 has been more favorable for the early opening and gathering of cotton than any year within the last 10, and the present crop was more nearly gathered and ginned by December 1 of this year than has been the case in any other crop year within my knowledge.

I am confident that the final ginners' report will show that the Board of Crop Estimates has overestimated the 1920 cotton crop by between 1,250,000 and 1,500,000 bales.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, I am going to vote to concur in the House amendment for two reasons.

UMI

In the first place the distressed condition of the farmers of the country is such that if we are going to give them help we ought to do it without delay.

In the second place, the second section suggests to the Federal Reserve Board that they help the farmers in a certain way. The record of the Federal Reserve Board, as made in the past few months, in regard to farmers shows that they are not going to help the farmers, but they are in the exercise of their powers going to do everything in their power to hurt the farmers.

The other day, when this joint resolution was before the Senate, I offered an amendment making the rate of rediscount 5 per cent on agricultural paper, but the Senate saw fit to vote that down. I had previously introduced in the Senate a bill to reduce the rediscount rate on agricultural paper to 5 per cent. Since that time it seems that the Federal Reserve Board has inspired two statements which have been given to the papers and have gone all over the country. One was that if Congress made any suggestions like this the members of the Federal Reserve Board would resign; and the other was that the rediscount rate had nothing to do with helping the farmers of the country at this time.

Now, Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, if some of the members of that board who have been giving statements to the press that depressed the price of cotton and wheat and doing everything they could to injure the farmers of this country would resign I would be very thankful.

I will go beyond that, and say that if the friends of the farmers in this body will join with me, we will not allow to be confirmed any member of that board who has been against helping the farming interests of this country in times of such distress, and we will not wait for their resignation.

The Federal reserve bank act is one of the greatest in our history; there is nothing that has accomplished greater good. The New York bankers, the international bankers, as the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] said the other day, seem to have the ear of some of the Federal reserve bank officials more than the farmers of this country, and I agree with him fully in that. The bankers who are opposed to this legislation can destroy it by getting the ear of men on that board who will listen to them instead of the appeals of the representatives of the farmers of this country. That is the best way for the international bankers of this country to have the Federal reserve act repealed or amended so as to destroy its usefulness to the people of this country and to the agricultural masses who are so much in need of assistance at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate but a moment.

Although I have not been present all the time, I have not observed in the discussion of this measure any word of commendation of the action of the House. I desire, therefore, before the vote is taken to express my unqualified approval of its action, first, in eliminating a preamble which I do not think is warranted by the facts; and, second, in eliminating the second section of the bill.

I shall, therefore, vote for it most heartily.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, when this bill was before the Senate a few days ago I did not detain the Senate by any discussion of its provisions, nor is it my intention to discuss it at any length at this time. I am prompted to make a few remarks because of the statements just made by the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I can not assent to the wholesale criticism which he has directed against the members of the Federal Reserve Board, nor do I think he has properly appraised the limitations placed upon them by the Federal reserve act. During the war, and since, there have been many eulogies pronounced upon the Federal reserve act. Senators as well as bankers and students of fiscal affairs have declared it to be a wise and sound banking measure. The financial legislation enacted during the Civil War was inadequate to meet the business requirements of the American people. The imperfections of the national banking act were so manifold that there was a unanimous opinion that Federal legislation was required which would provide a broad, scientific, and comprehensive banking system.

I think the American people are in practical accord that the Federal reserve act measured up to the requirements of our country and approximated a very high standard of perfection. That it will require modification as our country expands is quite likely; but in its operations it has proven of incalculable benefit, not only to the Nation, but to all forms of business and to the people generally, and I believe that it has been administered wisely and in such a manner as to call for commendation in behalf of those charged with this great responsibility. It is possible the Federal Reserve Board have made mistakes in their interpretation of the law and in its execution, but I do submit that all candid and fair-minded men, considering the conditions of our country since the law was enacted, and, indeed, the condition of the world, must reach the conclusion that those who have administered it have manifested ability of the very highest order and a patriotism which can not be challenged. Indeed, it must be a matter of surprise that this act, called upon to endure the stress and burdens of a world war, functioned so efficiently and achieved such beneficent results, vital alike to the American people and to the world.

During the consideration of this measure and before it went to the House, a number of distinguished Senators severely criticized the Federal board because of their effort to arrest the orgy of speculation through which the country was passing and to restrict the use of credits to legitimate and proper business enterprises and activities. Some Senators charged, and that is the criticism of the Senator from Georgia, that the Federal board sought deflation and proceeded in such a manner as to produce widespread disaster in our country. It has been the opinion of many thoughtful men and students of sound finance that the Federal board was subject to criticism because it had adopted too liberal a policy in extending credits, and had thereby contributed to the inflation from which, unquestionably, our financial and credit fabric has suffered.

Mr. HARRIS. Mr. President, does the Senator yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. HARRIS. The Senator does not state that that inflation is caused by loaning money to the farmers of the country to market their products because their products have only been on the market for about 30 or 60 or 90 days.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the board has rediscounted paper to the extent, I was about to say, of billions of dollars, although the Senator in his remarks stated, as I understood him to state, that the policy of the board had resulted in deflation and destructive contraction. I venture to assert, with all due regard to my distinguished friend, that his position is not quite tenable or accurate. As a matter of fact, there has been rediscounted by the Federal reserve banks several hundred million dollars in excess of the rediscounts for the year 1919.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Apropos of what the Senator is just now saying, permit me to call attention to the fact that the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] the other day showed the very increases in rediscounts in those sections in the West and in the South where the agricultural interests predominate, and it was in the districts where industrial conditions prevail largely that they were loaning money to these various banks.

I agree entirely with the Senator from Utah that this criticism is, it seems to me, entirely unjust. I came into contact with this same question when some of the builders in our section of the State wanted further accommodations by way of rediscount, and it is enough almost to make one tremble when you think that the per capita circulation has increased as rapidly as it has during the last few years.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] intimates that there has been no money loaned to farmers for the purpose of marketing their products. I respectfully dissent from that view. My understanding is that there has been no refusal by the Federal banks to give credit for the purposes of moving and marketing crops. Complaints have been made that credits have not been sufficiently liberal to agriculturists to enable them to "hold their crops." I am sure the Senator will find that abundant credit has been and is available for those who desire to market their crops. I do not desire to convey the impression by the remarks just made that agriculturists should not obtain loans to enable them, in a proper and legitimate way, to conserve their agricultural products and to enable them to obtain fair and reasonable markets for the same. I appreciate the fact that if farmers are compelled to dispose of their products as soon as they are harvested, a great injustice is done to them, and no corresponding advantage results to the public. There is no question but that the farmers of our country have suffered because of the unsatisfactory methods under which they have been compelled to dispose of their crops.

All that has been said, not only in the discussion to-day but when this bill was under consideration a few days ago, concerning the farmers of our country and their vital importance to the well-being of the Nation must be conceded by all.

The prosperity of our country rests largely upon those engaged in agriculture. Prosperity comes from trade and commerce, and our foreign trade has been largely developed through the energies and toil and sacrifices of the farmers of the United States. If prosperity smiles upon the farmers and the producers of live stock it will come to the homes of all the people of our land. The welfare and the happiness of the American people are indissolubly connected with the agricultural classes of our country. I should welcome business and economic conditions that would give increasing prosperity to our great agricultural interests. It is highly important that improved methods of marketing be adopted and that some plan shall be found by which those who produce shall not be deprived of the result of their toil and that speculators and middlemen shall not profit at the expense of the producer and of the consuming public.

It has been so often reiterated that a policy of deflation was suddenly forced upon the country that the accuracy of the statement seems to be accepted by most of the people. The fact is that, following the armistice, there was inflation rather than deflation. There was a period of inflation. Prudence and wisdom should have dictated a different policy to the American people.

With practical unanimity there should have been an agreement upon the part of all of our citizens to return to the paths of peace and of safety and of rational and sane economic and financial conditions. We should have recognized that war conditions ought not to be perpetuated and that the era of high prices produced by the war was a menace to our industrial and economic life, if not to our political institutions. We seem to learn nothing from the lessons of the past nor to heed the danger signs exhibited in Europe which inflation and high prices produced. There were many evidences of a concerted purpose upon the part of all the people not only to maintain high prices but to raise them to higher and therefore to more dangerous levels. For a very brief period after the armistice there was a slight recession in the price level. But this was followed by an upward tendency, which continued without interruption until far along into the present year. It has been charged that manufacturers and retailers conspired to maintain and increase prices. Certain it is that the results would seem to justify the charge. These conditions were not wholesome and could not be continued indefinitely. Manufacturers, retailers, and others seemed unwilling to dispose of their products and commodities except at prices which were constantly mounting. These conditions, as stated, could not persist, and it was inevitable that a decline in prices must result. It would have been wiser, and certainly in the interest of the people, if we had earnestly directed our attention to a gradual reduction of prices immediately following the armistice.

Instead of pursuing this course, speculation was rampant, and the high prices and the profits obtained only led to additional purchases and to still higher prices. The farmers, as well as all other classes, have too often unwisely employed their profits or the moneys obtained from the sale of their products.

Mr. L. A. Andrews, president of the Iowa Bankers' Association, recently stated that the bank statements of Iowa show loans to the farmers of not only "the local percentage of deposits but also their capital and surplus profits, and besides all this, they have borrowed and reloaned many millions of dollars, the Federal reserve bank of Chicago alone showing that Iowa banks have borrowed over twice what they are entitled to under the basic rule." He further states that "the report of the superintendent of the banks of Iowa shows that the loans of Iowa State and savings banks have increased $72,600,000 during the past year, that their bills payable have increased $20,000,000. It also shows that in the past 20 months their deposits have decreased $16,200,000."

Mr. Andrews referred to the fever of speculation and reckless buying prevalent in the country and attributed the present critical situation largely to this fact.

I believe the banks have attempted to meet the demands of the agriculturists, and in November the Federal reserve banks of Cleveland, Philadelphia, and Boston had loaned more than $200,000,000 to seven other Federal reserve banks, of which $38,000,000 was to the New York bank and the remainder to reserve banks in the West and South, where the demands were mainly from the agricultural districts, and I am told that the Federal reserve bank of Cleveland has loaned more credit to the reserve banks in agricultural districts than to the banks of its own district. The report of the Comptroller of the Currency shows that the national banks of New York City had lost $486,162,000 in deposits since July 30 last, the greater part of this amount having been drawn by banks in the agricultural sections of our country.

A full inquiry into the conduct of the banks may modify the views of some who are charging that the banks are attempting to depress prices or are withholding credits from agricultural interests. I have stated that the Federal Reserve Board, according to the view of some, is subject to criticism because it has been too liberal in its extension of credit.

The Financial and Commercial Chronicle in its issue of November 13 states:

> By availing of the apparently limitless resources of the Federal reserve banks, an after-the-war speculation was built up which has no parallel in history. Prices, wages, and everything else moved up in seemingly endless procession. The Federal reserve banking system, if it had been scientifically constructed and administered, should have operated to prevent the wild orgy of the two years that have elapsed since the conclusion of the armistice. Instead, it has fostered and encouraged the movement, the whole mercantile and financial community proceeding upon the theory that we possessed a financial mechanism that could be depended upon to provide credit to whoever might apply for it and in uncontrolled quantities out of a bounteous horn of plenty.
> The reserve authorities saw the danger to which this delusion was leading about 16 or 17 months ago and sought to apply the brakes. But it was then too late. The movement had gained too much momentum. Besides, the reserve officials were themselves largely victims of the delusion. They hold the notion that the paper money issues they are putting out in the shape of Federal reserve notes are such beneficent creations that they can never be in excessive supply—that a sort of self-regulatory process exists within the reserve system itself which will guard against there ever being an excessive supply of these notes. So they have been emitting more and more of the notes, until now there are over three and one-third billions of them in circulation. They allowed the volume of notes to expand even while they were raising interest rates and insisting that credit demands must be sharply curtailed. Now the price structure, so enormously inflated, has collapsed. Yet the credit demands are more urgent than before, with the result that now there is deflation everywhere except within the reserve banks. Last Saturday they held no less than $3,126,594,000 of bills under discount, or the very largest amount on record. Their strength is impregnable, but what an amount of misery and trouble would have been avoided if with the signing of the armistice they had stopped emitting further issues of notes. The speculation supported by these notes could then never have occurred, and the corrective process now nearing its end would never have been necessary.

By calling attention to this article, I do not mean to be understood as indorsing all that is therein stated, but it is clear that in certain circles there is a strong feeling that the Federal Reserve Board has been too liberal in extending credits to the people.

Gov. Harding, in his address before the American Farm Bureau Federation, at Indianapolis, Ind., on the 7th of this month, states that on September 19 of last year the total earning assets of all Federal reserve banks were over $2,350,000,000, and on January 27 of this year the total was nearly $3,300,000,000. He calls attention to the fact that no banking system is strong enough to sustain itself for any length of time at so rapid a rate of expansion of credit. We know that there was no drastic deflation attempted, notwithstanding its precarious condition. The slight advance in discount rates resulted in a gradual liquidation, and this continued for only about 60 days, and the reduction in credits amounted to only approximately $100,000,000:

> In May the loans and investments of the Federal banks were again at the high level, and on July 23 of this year there had been a decline in the total loans and investments of only $150,000,000 from the high point. On December 3 of this year, the loans and investments had reached the limit of $3,333,792,000. On December 3, 1919, the loans and investments of the Federal reserve banks were only $2,933,082,000 The Federal reserve notes in circulation on December 3, 1920, amounted to $3,312,039,000 as against $2,881,359,000 on December 5, 1919.

Gov. Harding further states that "as far as the Federal reserve banks are concerned, no contraction of credit or currency has been had during the past 12 months, but, on the other hand, there has been an increase in Federal reserve bank credit of $400,000,000 and in currency of $430,000,000."

During the past year business has expanded in many lines and many incorporations have been formed, which have absorbed hundreds of millions of dollars of the earnings of the people. Of course, large sums have gone into existing corporations, but many new corporations have been formed which have called for extensive investments. Bradstreet's issue for November 20, 1920, states that during the first 10 months of this year there were, in the Eastern States alone, corporations organized with $12,242,577,700 capital, as against corporations with $10,359,249,100 in 1919. The same issue also states that the new "domestic capital" issues in the first 10 months of 1920 were $2,693,022,300, as against $2,544,349,100 for 1919. The New York Journal of Commerce shortly after the 1st of each month gives a tabulation of new enterprises. Statistics for each preceding month of incorporations under the laws of the principal States show that the authorized capital of the corporations referred to for the first 11 months of 1920 aggregate $13,138,140,800. The same authority states that the authorized capital for 1919 was $12,677,229,600; for 1918, $2,599,752,600; in 1917, $4,607,094,100. These figures, and many more which I have before me, show the great expansion of business since the armistice and the great volume of credit which has been employed in the United States.

No one, Mr. President, can be oblivious to the unsatisfactory condition of business not only in the United States but in the world to-day. The proponents of this legislation hope to secure European markets for surplus agricultural products. I stated upon a number of occasions during the debate upon the Versailles treaty that unless Europe were stabilized and means devised by which commodities, and particularly raw materials, could be obtained by the people of Europe we would suffer a great decline in prices and the stability of our financial system would be threatened. There were many who sought to isolate the United States and to deny her the opportunity of participating in the affairs of the world. We are a part of the world, and our fortunes are more or less linked with the fate of the world. With Europe unhappy and bankrupt, we can not expect the tide of prosperity to mount high in our land. If Europe purchases our products, we must take in return some of Europe's products. Moreover, while Europe is recovering from the chaos into which she was thrown by the war, we may be compelled, if we trade with her, to make capital investments in Europe. When we were a debtor Nation, Europe was making capital investments in the United States. She helped finance our railroads, construct our factories, and develop industries which brought profit to America and gave employment to American workingmen.

We are a creditor Nation and the nations of Europe are our debtors. We will be compelled to accept payment for many of our surplus products in capital investments in European nations, and through the medium of banks and corporations, organized and to be organized, the transactions must be effectuated, which will result in the export of our surplus commodities and the payment to our agriculturists and other producers whose products are marketed beyond the seas.

Recurring to the criticism of the Senator from Georgia, I desire to state that the members of the Federal Reserve Board are entitled to the thanks of the American people for their wisdom and for the ability and devotion with which they have discharged the great responsibilities resting upon them. The Federal reserve act has been vindicated under their wise administration. The credit of our country has not been impaired, and during this world's struggle, which has destroyed nations and brought financial ruin to the proudest, the financial strength of this Republic has resisted all assaults, and it has emerged from the storm wearing the crown of financial leadership amongst the nations of the earth.

The Senator from Georgia says he will not vote for the confirmation of the members of the present Federal Reserve Board. I shall be happy to support them, and am glad to bear testimony to the patriotic and faithful services of the present members of the board, as well as those whose terms have expired and who are no longer associated with that important body.

Mr. President, I fear that this measure will fail to give the relief which some who have enthusiastically supported it believed that it would. However, I shall support it, hoping that the farmers and live-stock interests particularly will be benefited by its passage.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. GRONNA. I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, a good deal has been said here recently about deflation in this country. We know that inflation was brought about, not in a day, in a week, in a month, or in a year. It took nearly three years' time, and now if we bring about deflation as rapidly as has been suggested and undertaken, it will not be deflation, but destruction. It will require two years' time to get the country back to its normal state in this matter. Unless we make haste slowly in the matter of deflation we are going to bring disaster to the agricultural interests of the country.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask just what the Senator understands by deflation?

Mr. HEFLIN. Reducing the available money supply and credit.

Mr. THOMAS. Does not the Senator know that the supply of money has not been reduced at all?

Mr. HEFLIN. Sure; there is more money in the country to-day than ever before, and it is the duty of this Government to do what is necessary to bring that money out of its hiding place. It ought not permit anybody to get control of the money supply at a time like this and hold it to the detriment and ruin of the producing class of America. This Government owes it to the men whose sons it took out of their homes to go to war to see to it that those who control the money supply shall not let their dollars become slackers now, when the produce of these men is selling in the markets of the country at a price below the cost of production.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has spoken of these dollars being in hiding. Does he think they can be brought out of hiding by continuing rediscounting at the rates in effect in the past?

Mr. HEFLIN. Whether they come out of hiding or not, it is the duty of the Government to supply the money necessary to reach the emergency that is upon us, because this emergency came not by any act of the farmer, but it came as the result of the war, and the Government owes it to the farmers of this country to see that they are not made to suffer the tremendous losses that the present ruinous prices would entail.

If the big banks will not let their money come out of its hiding place, then let the War Finance Corporation issue six times its capital of $500,000,000, which will be $3,000,000,000. That is necessary to relieve a very distressing situation, and we must not let a few people, who want to corner the money supply, produce a feast out of the misfortune of the farmers of America.

A gentleman told me Saturday night that a banker said to him, "This is the harvest time of the bankers, and they must be permitted to make big stakes. There are periods when they do not make much money." I do not think a majority of the bankers have such a view as that, but if they have will the Government permit them to hold back the money which should now be given in exchange for that which represents the capital and labor of the farmer until his business is wrecked? Such a course would be a shortsighted and dangerous course and the Government should not permit it.

Mr. SMOOT. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know of a single bank which has opposed this measure?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not. I think most of them are in favor of it.

Mr. SMOOT. Then why does the Senator talk about the money power and the banks? I do not know of a bank that has opposed it or even written a letter in relation to it.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator has misunderstood my remarks. I was replying to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] regarding the Federal Reserve Board and the banking system. I think their policy in recent months has been a mistake. I think that if rediscounts are not continued a serious mistake will be made. I think, too, that the Congress ought soon after Christmas direct the Federal Reserve Board, if necessary at that time, as to what it shall do in going to the rescue of the farmer.

Mr. SMOOT. What did the Senator mean when he said this was the day of the banker's harvest?

Mr. HEFLIN. I said that a gentleman told me that a banker had said, "The banks must be permitted to make a killing now. Times like this constitute their harvest time."

Let me say, further, that I have heard that other bankers have said that the time to make your money is when the people are hard up and money hard to get. The Senator knows that there is a good deal of truth in that.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to say to the Senator that if there ever was a time in the history of the United States, from the beginning of it down to the present time, when the bankers have had a hard time, even to pull through, it is to-day.

Mr. KING. Some of them are failing.

Mr. HEFLIN. A great many of them are doing all they can, and I blame the Federal Reserve Board and some of its member banks for not backing them to the limit. That is my criticism.

Mr. SMOOT. That is a different proposition; but I want to say to the Senator that never in our history have the banks loaned so closely—I mean as a whole, not here and there a bank, but when every bank in the United States has loaned so closely to the line of safety in loans as they are right at the present time.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not dispute that. But the Federal Reserve System was instituted for the purpose of meeting any and every emergency, and it tided us over the greatest war of the world, and there was not a ripple upon the surface of the great sea of finance in this country during all that time, and now, when the war is over and millions of people have gone back to work, if the Federal Reserve Board does not function properly, so as to take care of the situation in the aftermath of that war, it seems to me it is time for Congress to pass a resolution instructing that board what to do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I will detain the Senate but a moment. The Federal Reserve Board, or the system of banking which is under its control, was the result of experiences gleaned from the banking systems of the past, and those prevailing in modern commercial countries, by a commission appointed for that purpose, under the leadership of the late Senator Aldrich, of Rhode Island. The report of that commission forms the basis of the act introduced by its chairman, as it also formed the basis for the Federal reserve act. It was said, and I think correctly, to be the best banking system that had ever been enacted into law in this country, and probably the best extant in any country.

Fundamentally it was designed, and must have been designed, first, to prevent the systems controlled by private interest; and, second, to provide for a nonpolitical administration of its board, and consequently of the policy of the banking system of the country.

We may differ as to the manner in which the law has been applied and construed, but we must recognize the fact that the Federal Reserve Board have had placed upon them great responsibilities, and have been compelled to act not only in times of the greatest crises which ever confronted mankind, but also during those periods of depression which are as unavoidable as are the recessions of the tides, once they have reached high water.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] very justly inveighs, if the fact be so, against those who are hoarding money at the present time, when it is needed in the channels of trade and industry. But I think it is everywhere the fact, not only with this, but with preceding generations, that times of depression, falling prices, and stagnation in business affairs are always attended by a diminution in the circulating medium. Men with money keep it out of the channels of trade and commerce. Banks begin to hold money because of the fact that the margin of safety requires it absolutely.

Those who are clamoring against what they call a conspiracy of the banks seem to me to forget that a bank's first duty is to its depositor. The money which the banks use for business, for the meeting of the obligations of the various communities, is only in very small part the money of the banks. It is in large part the money of the depositors, and the security and solidity of the bank is the one and only guaranty to the depositor of his money. The banks which are conservative and which do not fail very properly recognize it as their supreme and fundamental duty to safeguard the depositor and invest his money so as to bring a return both for him and for the bank. I think the banking interests of the country, as was said by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], are subject to criticism only because they have transgressed the period of safety in the interests of the producer, and they are in a situation quite as hazardous to-day, if their loans are to be expanded, as are the interests which are clamoring here for legislative relief.

The New York Times of yesterday or the day before stated that millions of dollars—I think a billion in all—of taxes due the Government had been defaulted because the taxpayer had been unable to borrow the money with which to meet the last payment upon his income and excess profits assessments. It is to be presumed that men and institutions with such enormous incomes, in consequence of which their income taxes are so great, could, if anyone, be able to secure the needed funds for the purpose of meeting the exactions of the Government. Failing to meet them, failing to obtain the needed funds, the penalties of the statute operate, and they are now in operation against a billion dollars' worth of taxes in that city alone—perhaps that is too broad a statement; in the country at least—because of this monetary stringency which the Senator would relieve, and he would relieve it by the compulsory issue by the Federal reserve banks of five or six billion dollars of bonds. All the criticism that seems to me to be necessary to direct to that statement is to speak for a moment of the financial condition of those countries which have themselves met or attempted to meet the conditions. Take France, Italy, Germany, and to some degree Great Britain. Upon that principle we would cure delirium tremens by repeating the doses of intoxicating material which the patient is required to take. I can conceive of no greater calamity to the people of the country than to meet present conditions by resorting to such a remedy. It is hopeless, not to be thought of, and in the end only plunges us far more deeply in the slough of despond which many people seem to feel is just ahead of us. People ultimately must realize that there is no royal road, legislative or otherwise, that will relieve us from the operation of the fundamental economic laws of trade and of industry.

We must go through this ordeal as those in other times have been compelled to do, realizing that the reaction is universal, that it can no more be stayed than a law of nature, and that the good old ways of suffering, of economizing, and being as thrifty as possible, buying only that which is necessary, and contributing all the savings that can possibly be realized to the general fund of capital—that, and that alone, will restore conditions and enable us to return to what may be called a fair and prosperous condition.

Our legislation, I predict, and with that statement I conclude, whatever it may be, will prove so utterly disappointing that the would-be beneficiaries, in their disappointment and resentment, will in the end turn against the men who have proposed and enacted it.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I do not wish to prolong the discussion. I simply wish to be permitted to say that I can not agree with the conclusions of the Senator from Colorado. I think he misunderstood the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] with reference to the amount of bonds issued. The joint resolution, when it becomes a law, will not burden the Treasury with any additional bonds whatever. As I said a moment ago, the law specifically provides that the Federal Government shall not be responsible for the bonds. They are debenture bonds which will be sold in the markets.

We find no trouble to get money for Liberty bonds. I do not wish to be personal, but I wish to say that within the last month I have sold nearly $20,000 of my own Liberty bonds, some of them at a discount of about 13 per cent, and all at an average of about 10½ per cent. If there is plenty of money in the country to buy these bonds at this enormous discount, why is it not fair to suppose that the debentures issued by the War Finance Corporation, exempt from taxation, will find a ready market? As I said, they would not be a burden upon the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. GRONNA. If I may just finish this statement, I will yield to the Senator.

It is not literally correct to say that there has been no deflation. In order to have the RECORD show the actual condition, I wish to be permitted to read from a statement of the Treasury, taken from the circulation statement of December 1, 1920. I find that on November 1, 1920, the circulation per capita was $59.48, and on December 1, or 30 days later, it was $59.41, a difference of 7 cents per capita only, but on the basis of 100,000,000 people it amounts, if my calculation is correct, to $7,000,000. So it is not accurate to say that there has been no deflation.

Mr. POMERENE. Is the Senator able to give the per capita circulation on the first day of each month, let us say, for six months preceding November 1?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not happen to have that statement before me, but I shall be very glad to have it put in the RECORD if the Senator desires it.

Mr. POMERENE. I think the Senator will find that there was a gradual increase.

Mr. GRONNA. I do not doubt that.

Mr. KING. May I now ask the Senator the question which I proposed to ask a moment ago?

Mr. GRONNA. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator stated that he was compelled to dispose of some several thousand dollars of his Liberty bonds quite recently.

Mr. GRONNA. I did not say compelled. I said I did dispose of them.

Mr. KING. Yes; and sold them at a discount of some 15 or 17 per cent.

Mr. GRONNA. On an average, I think, of about 10½ per cent. They were of different issues.

Mr. KING. Let me ask the Senator this question: If the War Finance Corporation shall function under the bill and shall issue, as the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] indicated they might, and, as I understood him, he wished they would, some three or four or five billion dollars of bonds, is it not obvious that they must come in competition with Government bonds and still further force down the value in the market of the Government bonds?

Mr. GRONNA. I do not know. I take it that the more bonds there are in the country the greater the advantage will be to make a reasonable or a large discount.

This morning when the joint resolution was laid before the Senate I had been unable to confer with the friends of the measure. I was therefore unable to make the proper motion to concur. Many of them have now given their views on the floor and I have talked with others privately, and while they, like myself, reluctantly yield, yet we believe that half a loaf is better than no bread. Therefore I consent to the motion made by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to concur in the amendments of the House and that the Senate agree to the same.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have heard to-day, as I have upon other days when this matter was before the Senate, a vast deal said about the embarrassing position of the agricultural sections of the country. My belief is that in most respects that condition has not been overstated. I am quite as anxious for the relief of the agricultural interests as anyone can be. The only exception I have taken to the debate is the attempt to point out that the agricultural interests have been discriminated against when compared with the other great industrial activities of the country. I am quite sure that Senators make those statements because they have not advised themselves as to conditions in the industrial centers.

It is true that one section has wheat or cotton which has declined in value. In an industrial center they have stocks, perhaps, or bonds that have declined in value. In the large manufacturing plants of the country the stock bins are filled with their products made out of the highest-priced materials and at the highest wages that were ever paid in the history of the country. In industrial centers manufacturing plants have been closed down because there is no demand for the products. I fear that in some of these places there is going to be distress, and it will not be a question of marketing products so much as it is going to be a question of bread and meat for those who are thrown out of employment.

I was very glad that the Senate saw fit to change the joint resolution so as to provide that the relief should be not only for the benefit of the agricultural interests but for the producers of other products as well. I think the Senate did right when it adopted that amendment. But again I wish to say to those who are in the industrial centers, as well as those who are in the agricultural centers, that when we talk about the inflation of our circulation we are playing with fire. Just think of it; in 1896 the per capita circulation was $23, and on December 1, 1920, $59.41. Oh, this can go on, perhaps. It can go on by unlimited rediscounting. Aye, it can go on in another way. We can have our State Department enter into negotiations with Lenin and Trotski for their printing presses. I was told the other day that some public man made the statement that Germany was not printing money now, she was publishing money.

Oh, we can do it. We are in a better financial condition today because we have not followed in the footsteps of Lenin and Trotski and Germany. I am jealous of our financial system. I want to help to the limit of safety, but I never will be willing consciously to go beyond it. We can postpone the pay day, perhaps, by operating the printing presses, but it will come just as sure as we continue to an unnecessary degree.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the Senator think it would be wise to put the farmers and merchants and bankers of the country on notice that the deflation is going to begin at a certain time, in order that they may make their arrangements accordingly? The farmer had no notice at all this year that any such conditions would confront him. He went along and produced his present crop, which cost him more than any crop he has ever produced, and just as he reached the market place he was met with talk of deflation. Money was hard to get. Now, does not the Senator think he ought to have an opportunity to arrange his affairs so as to be ready for such an occasion as the one that is upon him now?

Mr. POMERENE. I fear my very good friend is not accurately informed on this subject. I do not think—and I say this with all due respect—that the Senator speaks accurately when he speaks of deflation. As a general proposition there has been no deflation. The Federal Reserve Board has simply arrested inflation in the great degree in which it was advancing during the past months.

Let me suggest this to my good friends from the South and the West, and the East as well: True, you can get additional money; true, you can extend these loans for a while. I think many of them could be extended if all the member banks would do their duty, for it is not a question so much as to the reserve banks.

Let me suggest to some of my friends in the South and in the West, where they allow their banks to charge 10 and 12 per cent interest, that if they will go before their legislatures and have the legal rate, the contractual rate, of interest cut down, they will enable the farmers to extend their loans for a good while.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. But the Federal Reserve Board sanctioned the raising of the rate of interest in the case of a bank at Kansas City to 15 per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. In one of the Federal reserve banks I think that rate was allowed at one time; I think that is true; and the Federal reserve banks in some of the other districts have been accommodating the banks of the West and the South.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The rate in my State by law is 6 per cent, but in one instance, to which I referred some days ago, the Federal reserve bank charged a bank in my State 12½ per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. If Senators want to reduce the rate they can reduce it to 2 per cent, and they will enable their local banks to get the difference between the rediscount rate and the loaning rate.

Mr. GLASS. Will the Senator submit to an interruption?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. The Senators do not tell the whole story when they point to these exceptional rediscount rates.

Mr. POMERENE. No.

Mr. GLASS. They are rates which have been extended to banks who have outraged all sound conceptions of banking, and have so far extended themselves as to jeopardize the interests of their stockholders and depositors.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from Virginia is right.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me for just a moment. Of course, the reserve banks could have continued their rediscounting to an unlimited extent, but conditions would be worse in the future.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator allow me to make a brief explanation in answer to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Virginia is entirely correct in saying that the instance to which I have referred, where 12½ per cent was charged, was an exceptional case; but the Senator is mistaken in saying that such rates are imposed in cases where money ought not to be loaned to such banks. The bank which I have in mind, a bank in my own State, is one of the most solvent concerns in the whole country, and it has had to pay, according to the graduated scale that we permitted under the law last year, as high as 12½ per cent. I repeat, that bank is just as solid as any bank in the country.

Mr. GLASS. It paid the rate according to the graduated scale.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. GLASS. Under the law adopted by Congress, based upon sound banking considerations, it is simply required that when a bank has extended its credit beyond a certain point the graduated scale shall apply.

Mr. POMERENE. In other words, it gives to the Federal reserve banks the same power over the member banks that the member bank has over its customer when he tries to borrow beyond the line of safety.

Mr. President, the difficulty is not here in the United States. Let me say to my friends from the South and West, as well as in other sections of the country, that the difficulty lies in the fact that the financial conditions over in Germany and central Europe are such that the people there can not buy that which they need. While we may arrange matters so that we can, perhaps, keep the surplus stock in this country a little while longer, the time will come when we must dispose of it. Then the South and the whole country will wake up to the fact that the problem is, Can we, who have a surplus, sell to Europe, which needs our surplus, and get good money from them, who have not any good money, in exchange for our products? That is the whole situation. Until we can improve credit conditions in Europe, all the United States is going to suffer, more or less.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. Allow me to make a further suggestion. I believed that the revival of the activities of the War Finance Corporation might help in the present situation. It was for that reason that I voted for the joint resolution. I only hesitated when it came to Congress attempting to give direction to the Federal reserve banks. With all due respect to my colleagues on that subject, I desire to say that I have more confidence in the Federal reserve banks and their experience than I have in the Congress of the United States. Now I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to ask the Senator if it is not a fact that our export trade this year up to this time is larger than it was last year?

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean larger in the number of dollars that we have received or larger in the quantity?

Mr. HEFLIN. In the number of dollars.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that is, perhaps, true.

Mr. HEFLIN. If that is true, it shows that the purchasing power of the Old World is yet in pretty good shape, does it not?

I wish to say further to the Senator, in reference to his suggestion that the trouble is not here but yonder across the sea, that last year the banks obtained money in the cotton-growing districts at 4½ per cent, while this year the rate of interest was raised to 7 per cent. The legal rate of interest in my State is 8 per cent; so the Senator can see what a small margin of profit the banks have in helping to move the cotton crop. Call money in New York, I understand, has gone up to 12 per cent. Money goes where it can earn the most interest, as a rule. We have that condition to confront us here; and there are a number of instances of which I know in connection with loans where the farmer has been unable to get money to handle his crop as he did in 1919.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on concurring in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President, I was absent last week for a day or two. On my return I noticed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that my good friend and colleague [Mr. SMITH of South Carolina] made a speech, in which he referred, amongst other things, to the profits of cotton mills. I merely desire to make some corrections of mistakes into which I believe my colleague inadvertently fell.

For instance, I notice that he says that New England and southern mills made on an average 300 per cent in profits. Mr. President, I am not here to defend profiteering; I believe there has been too much profiteering carried on in the United States; but as to that statement I desire to say that I never heard of a mill making 300 per cent per annum, and I doubt very much whether any mill made any such amount on an average.

The cotton-mill industry is a great one in my section of the country, and our people are very much interested in it. Sometimes, of course, mills make greater dividends than at other times, as is the case in all industrial enterprises.

My colleague also stated that the cotton mills reduced the price of goods only 33⅓ per cent. In that statement I think he is in error. I have investigated that question. Goods which last summer were selling at 26 cents a yard to-day are selling at 8 cents a yard. So it is plain that that great industry has been very hard hit, and there is very little, if any, sale for many of the goods it produces. I know of mills in the community where my home is located which, when I was home about six weeks ago—I have not heard from them in the last month—had not sold a yard of goods for five or six months. They are piling up their goods in the warehouses; they can not find a market for them at any price, but are merely trying to operate in order to give employment to their labor.

In reference to the statement of the senior Senator from South Carolina that cotton mills had been declaring dividends upon which they paid no taxes, I desire to say that it is true that certain enterprises have paid very large dividends, but mostly they have been in the shape of stock dividends. There is a misapprehension in the country in regard to the object of paying stock dividends. A stockholder is no better off with a stock dividend than he was before. A stock dividend merely divides up the unit of the ownership of the property. The Government is not defrauded, and the stockholders, perhaps, are not benefited. It would make no difference to a stockholder whether he could sell one share of stock for $200 or wait until there was a stock dividend declared and sell two shares at $100 each. So I think there is a misconception along that line. The dividends which have been declared are not from earnings made recently, perhaps, but from accumulated earnings of many years.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will my colleague allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Do I understand my colleague to say that whenever a mill declares a dividend in the form of stock and the stockholder receives double the par value of his original holding of stock—and I know of a case where such a dividend was paid—that the two shares are worth no more than the one share was worth?

Mr. DIAL. Very probably the two shares are not worth any more than the one was. The value of the property has not been increased, but the units of ownership have merely been increased and divided.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I understand as to that; but the earnings that the mill has made are paid in the form of a stock dividend, and therefore if a given property on its replacement value, so to speak, is earning 300 per cent, it is certainly a going concern and is worth that much more than it was when the original investment was made. If, instead of paying a cash dividend, they pay a stock dividend, the value of the property is enhanced by its creative power, which is evidenced by the stock dividend. When my colleague shall have concluded I shall read a communication from the Federal Trade Commission on this identical point, touching these very mills.

Mr. DIAL. Very well, Mr. President. There is a great, big question about replacement values. We can deceive ourselves and imagine that we are well off, when really disaster will soon catch us. We thought last summer that our stock was really worth more than it was, because it was based upon the idea of replacement value; but when things became more normal and this decline came, the price of the stock declined perhaps one-half. It was the same way with land in our country. We thought we were better off than we were. Our land that used to bring $40 an acre got up to $200 and $250 an acre. Now it has gone away back down again.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, may I ask my colleague another question?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Speaking about this stock dividend, when the directors of the concern ordered this division they could have, had they seen fit to do so, declared a cash dividend to that amount; but they decided to issue a stock dividend, and therefore the dividend was made. It was left to their option as to whether they would declare it in cash or in the form of a stock dividend. Now, my colleague does not say that they did not earn that amount of cash, but they transformed it into stock at their own will.

Mr. DIAL. They should not have issued any more dividends, cash or stock, than they had earned.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Exactly.

Mr. DIAL. That is true; but they would avoid no taxes by issuing a stock dividend. Now, there were stock dividends that some of the mills issued this year that were not made recently, but were the accumulation of profits for many years past. I happen to know a mill in which I am somewhat interested, I am sorry to say, that paid no dividends for about 15 years. It is about 20 years old. It has never paid dividends until recently, and its stock to-day is selling around $100 a share only, and sometime ago it could have been bought for a few cents a share. I know of many other mills in our section that never paid dividends for many years after they were started.

Unfortunately, Mr. President, in the South we begin enterprises upon too meager a capital. We start them in debt, and it takes a long time to accumulate enough profits to get the enterprise out of debt. So that the industry in our country is not a very prosperous industry; it never has been; but since the war it did prosper and made tremendous dividends temporarily, or at least they thought they made dividends; but by the time we convert those goods into cash it is a question whether we did or did not. I say it is one of these inflated feelings, and the point I am trying to make is that these enterprises are great friends of the community. They create a market for our people to sell their cotton to, and their vegetables, and in my section stock in a great many mills are owned by the farmers of those communities. My good colleague lives in a most magnificent agricultural country. His own is in the best, or one of the best, cotton-producing countries in the world, but they have not many mills in that section of the State.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I will state to my colleague that the State of South Carolina is not so large but that a mill located inside the State is almost in a man's immediate community, and that so far as the mill interests of my State are concerned I am just as jealous of their prosperity and progress as my colleague is. I do not own any mill stock, and therefore have not that intimate and vital feeling, perhaps, that I should if I owned a good, big block of it; but I do not. I am a farmer, and farmers do not indulge in stock ownership very often.

Mr. DIAL. My friend is badly mistaken about that, because I happen to know a mill the nucleus of which was 200 stockholders, nearly every one of whom was a farmer.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes; but most of them had a side line other than farming. I do not want my colleague to convey the impression, however, nor can he convey the impression without my opposition, that I in my speech, or here now, am trying in any way to disparage the mills of my State or bring them into criticism. The whole purpose of my speech was to show that the men who produced the raw material out of which the mill gets its finished product did not, by the very nature of the case, have the same facilities for protecting their profits that the mill people had, and that is all there was to it.

Mr. DIAL. Yes; I am not criticizing my colleague at all, and I will say that no one in the world sympathizes with the man who produces any more than I do, and there is nobody who works for his interests any harder than I have tried to work since I have been here. I say the conduct of the Secretary of the Treasury this summer in not letting the War Finance Corporation function so that our people could have had a market for their surplus cotton is little short of a crime; and it is a shame now that the price has gone so low, away down where it does not sell for half what it cost to produce it. If I had my way I would advise every man who owns a bale of cotton not to sell a bit of it for 3 months or 60 days at least, until the world becomes normal again and the people want cotton at a reasonable price.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Does my colleague restrict that criticism to the Secretary of the Treasury alone?

Mr. DIAL. Principally.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I should like to have all the sinners included.

Mr. DIAL. I do not agree with some of the statements and interviews given out by the Federal Reserve Board, but I will state that upon the whole I am a friend of the Federal Reserve Bank System and its officers. I think they talked a little too much and they produced a panicky feeling in the country, and I feel that that is one of the troubles now.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for just one moment?

Mr. DIAL. Certainly.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not want to be understood as criticizing the Federal Reserve Banking System. I think it is the greatest banking system ever devised; but my criticism goes to the administration of the system. I think mistakes have been made there; but I agree with the Senator that it is a great system.

Mr. DIAL. I do not say that they have not made mistakes. It is certainly a very great system, and I know intimately some of the men on the board, and I know they have the good of this country and the prosperity of the people at heart, and I know they are willing to do everything that is reasonably consistent with good banking; and I must say that some of the criticisms on the floor of the Senate against that board, especially about the increased rate of interest, have been unjust. We, the Congress, authorized them to increase the rate of interest on a graduated schedule; and the banks, instead of complaining about the increased rate, ought to be thankful that they can borrow at all. The trouble is they borrowed too much, at least a good many of them. When they pay such a great rate of interest it is no exception in the case of a particular bank. Every other bank in the same district would have to pay the same rate, provided it borrowed in the same proportion to its capital and surplus. Before the Federal Reserve Banking System was adopted a national bank could only borrow an amount equal to its capital and surplus, but when this law was passed the top was taken off, and they have been authorized and allowed to borrow an unlimited amount during the war.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, will my colleague allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DIAL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. My colleague is referring to the law of 1863, the national bank act, until——

Mr. DIAL. Until the Federal reserve bank act was passed.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I say, until the Federal reserve law was put into effect. Does he not agree that the very point he is now making, that a bank should be restricted to a certain percentage of its capital and surplus——

Mr. DIAL. No; I do not say it should be restricted to that amount.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Well, I say, here is the point, it amounts to the same thing: Under the section introduced here at the last session, and passed just before we adjourned—the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], for the Banking and Currency Committee, brought it in here—we so amended the present law as to penalize any bank that exceeded a certain per cent of its capital and surplus, which percentage was to be decided by the board of governors, and that when they exceeded in their rediscount privileges a certain per cent of their capital and surplus then the rate of interest on the excess should be so graduated and progressed as to prohibit them from borrowing above the limit that the Federal Reserve Board of Governors saw fit to put.

Now, the question I want to ask my colleague is this: If you restrict the rediscounting privilege of a member bank to a certain per cent of its capital and surplus, what difference is there between the Federal reserve law and the old law of 1863, which was so rigidly inflexible that we could not do business in this country?

Mr. DIAL. No, Mr. President; I do not say it should be restricted to that amount. I said the provision heretofore was that that was a reasonable amount. I do not think it should be restricted to that. I want to say that I am glad the Federal Reserve Board can do more than that. I do not look upon a graduated rate of interest as a penalty at all. I look on it as an accommodation to the bank.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. If my colleague will allow me, was not the object of that graduated and progressive tax to prohibit the bank in a nice way from overdrawing or overrediscounting a certain amount of its capital and surplus?

Mr. DIAL. It was to tell the bank to put on the brakes, and not to borrow too much.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Precisely.

Mr. DIAL. Now, I think it is a very good thing that we go back to precedent and look back to what is considered good banking and not allow them to borrow ad libitum. There is no telling what they will borrow if no limit is placed. Some of them would borrow until they could not pay their depositors, and would possibly fail, and the stockholders would lose their money. I think it is well that there is some supervision of the banks.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, does not the Senator think any of the banks are well managed by intelligent business men? Does he not think that as a rule the banks are managed by intelligent business men? And does he think that the average bank would overdiscount and overdiscount until it would destroy its depositors' fund?

Mr. DIAL. The statistics show that such things do occur.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Occasionally.

Mr. DIAL. I have a very high regard for the bankers of this country. There is no finer set of men than the bankers of the United States. In the words of Pete Hildebrand——

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to know what is before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. The Senator from South Carolina, my colleague, is before the Senate.

Mr. DIAL. I am just coming to what I was going to tell you.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment. There is not anything pending before the Senate. Senators have been debating without a thing before the Senate.

Mr. DIAL. I am simply correcting some errors which I think my colleague unintentionally made in his speech. I was going to say about the bankers what my friend Pete Hildebrand said when he referred to a fine class of people, "One of which I am whom." So there is no better class of men than the bankers of this country, but some of them do borrow too much, and now some of the bankers in this country wish they had not borrowed so much.

The remedy, in all seriousness, is for more banks to join the system, and thereby they will be enabled to borrow more money and help the farmers of this country and the people generally to market their crops and their produce gradually. I am not certain of the exact number, but I think the Comptroller of the Currency said that perhaps there were only 25 per cent of the banks in this country that had borrowed a short time ago. So I am a friend of the system, and I think the banks ought not to be limited to the original amount, but they ought to be allowed to borrow any reasonable amount, and I think a gradual schedule of interest is a very wise way to limit that amount. It has the advantage that in times of distress they can be accommodated, and it helps the people to market their crops by degrees, and not all at one time.

Now, Mr. President, further in regard to the cotton mills of this country: They are like other enterprises. They have to buy their cotton in the open market, and of course they buy it as cheaply as possible. As I said before, I think it is a crime that cotton has gone down to such an extent as it has, away below the cost of production; but the mills buy that cotton in competition with mills of the world, and so far as the mills of the South are concerned they do not consume any very great quantity when it is considered among the consumption of the world. In the South we only have about 18,000,000 spindles, and in the whole United States there are only about 34,000,000 spindles. In Great Britain alone there are some 69,000,000 spindles, and in the whole world there are about 154,000,000 spindles. Therefore the mills buy their cotton in competition with the exporters and the mills of the world, and they sell their goods in the same way.

Not only that; the Government tax on mills has been enormous. They sometimes take as much as 80 per cent out of the profits in taxes. Furthermore, if the mills should declare an unreasonable amount in stock dividends, under section 220 of the act, a tax can be imposed on that stock dividend.

Now, Mr. President, I merely want to keep the record straight on these matters. I do not want mills to be put in any mistaken position, and, of course, I know my colleague did not intend to do it; I know that he and I both are particularly anxious about trying to get a better price for what our people raise. But there should be greater cooperation between all industries in this country. I want the mills to make a return upon their investment, as I want the farmer to make a good return upon his investment, and I want every honest dollar in this country to earn a fair return upon itself. The management of our mills are amongst our best business men who have the interest of their communities and employees, as well as their stockholders, at heart. Mills would prefer to pay a higher price for cotton if world affairs and conditions could be stabilized. Fluctuation injures all.

Senator SMITH had read a letter from the Federal Trade Board in his remarks made before the Senate a day or two ago, which quoted an editorial from Commerce and Finance of June 20, 1920; conditions have changed disastrously since that time. He and I are most anxious that all our people may be happy and prosperous, and both are cooperating earnestly and wholeheartedly to secure a better price for what our people raise.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Mr. President, I do not know but what I should rise to a question of personal privilege.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I think that would be something before the Senate.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I do not mean that really seriously, but in part I do, for the reason that the accuracy of certain statements I made here on the floor have been questioned. They were in a way inaccurate, and therefore I am going to read a communication from the Federal Trade Commission sent to me this morning in response to a request on my part, showing just the facts in regard to the dividends claimed to be made, and I shall read this so that the whole matter can be put clearly. I shall not read the names of certain corporations mentioned in this communication, but will reserve them for any question as to my further accuracy. The communication is as follows:

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION,
Washington, December 20, 1920.

Senator E. B. SMITH,
325 Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The following notes regarding stock dividends declared by certain cotton manufacturing companies may be of interest to you. These stock dividends are isolated cases that occurred in 1920 following the decision of United States courts that stock dividends are not taxable. Many others occurred which were not noted in financial and trade papers or of which I made no note at the time:

1. Commerce and Finance (New York) of March 27, 1920, stated that the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court declaring stock dividends not taxable was resulting in great activity in textile mill stocks. Stated that many New England mills were capitalized at about $10 per spindle, while the replacement cost was estimated at $50 per spindle. Reserves piled up during the war and were not distributed, because it was felt that such dividends would be taxable. With this bar removed by the United States Supreme Court decision it was stated that boards of directors who had been contemplating stock dividends would probably make distribution of surplus in the form of stock dividends.

2. Commercial and Financial Chronicle, May 8, 1920, page 1923, stated the following mills had declared stock dividends since the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

——— ———, 100 per cent, 172,000 shares, no par value.
——— ———, 66⅔ per cent, $4,000,000.
——— ———, 100 per cent, $2,500,000.
——— ———, 100 per cent, $2,400,000.
——— ———, 100 per cent, $750,000.
——— ———, 100 per cent, $600,000.

3. Journal of Commerce, June 7, 1920, states ——— ——— had decided on a 400 per cent stock dividend, consisting of a 300 per cent dividend in common and 100 per cent in preferred. Stated this to be the largest stock dividend paid up to that time by a southern mill.

Also that stockholders of the ——— ——— ratified the action of the directors in declaring a stock dividend of 200 per cent.

Also stated that the ——— ——— had paid the largest cash dividend yet paid, amounting to 60 per cent.

Also that many mills in addition to paying stock dividends have been paying 10 to 20 per cent cash dividends annually.

Mr. President, I made no other comment, other than to say that if the decline in the price of manufactured goods was not equal to the decline in the raw material, then the dividends which were made after such a decline were just as great as those before the decline. If it be true that they have declined in a ratio equal to the price of the raw material, I maintain that the conditions under which these organizations and other organizations may protect their profits, both in fixing the price of the raw material and in fixing the price of the finished product, and protecting their surplus and their profits, put them clear out of the class in which the agriculturist finds himself; and that is all I have to say about it.

Mr. DIAL. I would like to ask my colleague if that statement referred to was the June 20 statement.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I believe the last one was.

Mr. DIAL. June 20, 1920?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. DIAL. That is nearly six months ago?

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. DIAL. Since that time the bottom has dropped out of the mills' stock and the mills' products, and a great many of the mills which paid a dividend wish that they had never done it. They find themselves in the strange condition the rest of us are in, with our products on hand, cotton on hand, and other things on hand.

Mr. SMITH of South Carolina. I think there is no doubt about the fact that the mills suffered in this situation, as every other business in the country has suffered. But they are still in a position to better take care of themselves in their operations than the man who makes the raw material.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I understand that the Senate will adjourn in a few moments, and before it adjourns I desire to express myself on one question.

I did not desire to detain the Senate in the consideration of the resolution to revive the War Finance Corporation, although I was heartily in favor of section 2 of that joint resolution; I believed that it was best to accept the House amendment in order that the legislation might be passed immediately so that it might be placed upon the statute books.

I believe that that is the way we can render some real and substantial service to the people of the country, by creating credit so that they can seek markets and sell their products, wares, and goods. It was so broad that it applied in the end not only to agricultural products, but to every other kind of product. That is sensible and reasonable and sane legislation.

But I understand that there will be pending to-morrow or the next day in the House, and is now under consideration in the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, a bill which, upon its face, is supposed to be for the protection of the farmers of the country, but that is not its sole intent and purpose. It is a bill designed to place a high protection, or an embargo, I know not which——

Mr. THOMAS. Both.

Mr. HARRISON. Both, I presume, upon certain agricultural products coming into this country. It picks out and places in the list, I believe, corn, wheat, wool, live stock, some by-products of soy bean, and a great many other things.

Mr. President, I am opposed to that legislation. I do not propose, as a matter of emergency, to vote for a piece of temporary legislation that gives protection as high as that embodied in that resolution. I am opposed now, and have always been, to protection of any kind whatsoever. If my record and the record of most Democrats in the House and in the Senate has been consistent on one proposition, it has been on the tariff. We have believed in a tariff for revenue only, and have fought the Republican cry for protection for a very, very long time, and I would dislike very much to see any of our Democratic brethren in the House or Democratic brethren in the Senate vote now for legislation which would place a tariff on wool higher than was embodied in Schedule K of the iniquitous Payne-Aldrich tariff law.

The country will not be fooled by it. There is no cry from the farmers of the country for that kind of legislation. It is merely a forerunner, intended only to beat a path through which the Republican Party might travel in the coming session of Congress when a full tariff measure, with still higher protection, probably will be presented to the House and Senate. I doubt whether there is a single farmer organization in the country that has asked for this legislation. Certainly it was not promised in the recent campaign, because the tariff question was hardly heard of in the turmoil of that political battle. But the reason for the legislation is plain. It is clearly discernible.

The manufacturers of the country, the special interests of America, desire, in the writing of the new tariff law, to obtain as high a protection as is possible and are now lending aid ostensibly and giving sop to the farmers in the country, through their Representatives here in Congress, of a protective tariff on agricultural products, high, yes, absolutely indefensible, so that they can demand at the coming session that they be treated likewise.

The Democratic Party can not afford to stultify itself by going back at this time on a principle touching the tariff for which it has always stood and in which it has always believed. Its traditions are too dear, the rights of the people too great for that, and for one I pass the cup from my lips, and if the legislation ever passes the House and comes to the Senate I shall steadfastly oppose it and record my vote against it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the Senator's speech is a source of great encouragement to me. That is the position I occupied at the last session of the Senate. I feel now that, with the stimulus of my young friend behind me, perhaps he and I will be able to keep a part of the Democratic Party in line upon its traditional policy, if that bill comes over to the Senate.

RECOGNITION OF THE SOVIET GOVERNMENT.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to offer a resolution for reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I have noticed during the past few days statements in a number of newspapers to the effect that our Government entertains the thought of recognizing the bolsheviki government of Russia. In one newspaper these words are found:

At a meeting of the Cabinet to-day one member stated it would be necessary to work officially through the soviets to carry out President Wilson's plan for the relief of Armenia.

Mr. President, I can not believe that the administration contemplates recognizing the Lenin-Trotski government, either as a de facto or as a de jure government.

The American people do not attempt to dictate the form of government which the people may establish in other lands. While we are solicitous for the welfare of the people of other nations, and are desirous that liberty and freedom shall be enjoyed by all, and that progressive and enlightened policies and governments shall be established, we have never sought to force any form of government upon the peoples of other countries.

The people of the United States have always entertained a friendly feeling toward the inhabitants of Russia. The relations between our Government and the Government of Russia for many years were of the most cordial character. There is no question but that we are deeply interested in Russia and solicitous for the peace and happiness of the people of that distracted and unhappy land. I am sure that our Nation would do everything within its power to aid the people of Russia and to help them in establishing a liberal and enlightened government under which peace and prosperity would come to all classes.

However, it is the right of our Government to determine when and under what circumstances it will accord recognition to any other government. There have been times in our history when we have for long periods denied recognition to governments which were exercising power and authority and were supported, if not by all at least by a portion of the people, subject to their control. It has been the policy of our Government not to intimidate other nations or, by refusing to accord recognition, to compel the adoption of a form of government which would more nearly accord with the views of the American people. We have insisted, as it was the right of this Nation to do, that those with whom we have held diplomatic and official relations should observe the recognized principles of international law and that code of morals and honor which should obtain between civilized sovereign nations.

The United States refused to recognize Huerta's government in Mexico. Huerta had risen to a position of power by methods abhorrent to civilized people. In the end, another President was selected, and recognition was accorded the Carranza government. When the Czar was overthrown Kerensky organized a government in Russia. As I recall, his government was promptly recognized by the United States.

It is quite likely that if the bolsheviki government, notwithstanding its destructive political and economic views, had observed the rules governing the relations of civilized people, and had acknowledged its obligations to other nations, it would have been recognized by the United States. But the soviet government, when it seized authority in Russia, announced its purpose to destroy not only the United States but all other Governments, and to level all lines of nationalism and precipitate the people of the world into one colloidal mass. It engaged in atrocious and sanguinary crimes at home, and inflicted the most horrible and brutal cruelties upon the Russian people themselves. It sought to destroy the intellectuals and to prevent the majority of the people from establishing a stable government, one in which the forms of law would be observed, and under which Russia might assume her proper station among the civilized nations of the world.

Lenin and Trotski sent their agents into our country, as well as into other countries, for the purpose of fomenting international and domestic strife and to bring about disorder and revolution. The hand of the bolshevists was raised against all nations and against law and order everywhere. The United States was regarded as an enemy of the sinister and destructive forces represented by the soviet government, and it was therefore the particular object of enmity and hatred. The bolsheviki government has ruled in a brutal and tyrannous manner over the Russian people and has denied to them the free expression of their will. The Russian people do not desire bolshevist rule. The overwhelming majority of the people of that unhappy land desire freedom and emancipation from brutal and unbearable conditions under which they are now compelled to exist.

A recognition of Lenin and Trotski would not be a recognition of the Russian people; it would be an act hostile to the great mass of Russia's inhabitants, one which, in my opinion, would militate against their interests and the early establishment of a government in Russia which will represent the wishes of the people and give them opportunity for industrial and economic freedom as well as political and religious liberty. It would be, as I regard it, a frightful mistake for this great, free Nation to accept the bloody hand extended by Lenin and Trotski. We know that while they would stretch forth one hand, professedly in friendship, the other would carry a dagger with which they would destroy this Republic. A recognition of the soviet government of Russia would be a repudiation of our past policy and would give moral support to the bloody and brutal autocracy which is crushing the unfortunate people of Russia.

Senators will recall that for nearly two years a representative of the soviet government has been in our midst, and in a brazen and audacious manner he has pretended to be the ambassador of the Russian Government. He has sought to spread seditious doctrines and to inculcate the destructive creed of the third internationale congress. His mission seems rather to have been to create disunion among the American people, and to alienate them from their Government and undermine their faith and confidence in republican institutions.

More than a year ago I urged the deportation of Mr. Martens. I called the attention of the Labor Department to the fact that under existing law he was subject to deportation and that he should immediately be arrested and expelled from the United States. Fortunately, the Secretary of Labor at last appreciated his duty in the premises, and he has within the past few days ordered the deportation of this undesirable alien.

Before the resolution which I submit is read, I desire to call attention to the attitude of Mr. John Spargo, the well-known American socialist. Mr. Spargo has investigated the soviet government, and has reached definite conclusions concerning its purposes as well as the consequences of its operations. Those who know Mr. Spargo will be compelled to admit his liberal tendencies and his natural disposition to support an economic or political creed which would give to the masses of the people greater control in the affairs of government as well as greater power in industrial concerns. I have no doubt that he approached the investigation of the bolshevik government in a sympathetic manner, and with a desire to find in the new régime a panacea for what he conceived to be the evils of capitalistic government. Mr. Spargo is an honest and conscientious American, and his investigations have compelled him to condemn bolshevism and to unmask its false pretenses and reveal its hideous and misshapen form to the world.

In a recent address at the Cleveland Chamber of Commerce, where Mr. Spargo analyzed the statements of Mr. H. G. Wells, the noted English socialist, and dissented from some of the views which that writer expressed, he declared that bolshevism is responsible not only for the plight of Russia but for a great deal of the tragic misery and suffering now rampant in Europe. He further states that the most important question of international policy confronting the incoming administration is that of determining what our policy with respect to Russia is to be. Mr. Spargo alludes to the fact that our industrial and commercial life is necessarily linked with the restoration of commercial and industrial life in Russia, and states that it is a fact "known to every statesman that there may be no real restoration of Europe, no solution of the great problem of reconstruction, until Russia is brought into wholesome and normal relations with the life of the rest of the world."

Notwithstanding the necessity of commercial relations with Russia, Mr. Spargo does not advocate a recognition of the Lenin-Trotski government, but, upon the contrary, advises against that course. Let me read what he says upon this matter:

Impressed by these facts, a good many people have surrendered to a shrewdly conducted bolshevist propaganda in this country and are demanding the revision of the policy announced by Secretary of State Colby in August last. They are demanding the recognition of the bolsheviki as a demand of extensive trade relations.

Concerning these demands I have only to say that, in my judgment, anything more disastrous, and more certain to lead to economic anarchy and ruin, imperiling the whole fabric of civilization, it would be impossible to conceive. That is not my opinion only, but I know it to be the conviction of the best minds of Europe, regardless of nationality or political partisanship.

Not only do bolsheviki not represent the will of the Russian people, but what is more important, they do not propose to hold honorable relations with us. Their major purpose is not the realization of their Communist program in Russia, but the destruction of the economic and political systems of the great commercial and industrial nations, especially the United States.

We gave our recognition immediately and without reservation to the government which was set up in Russia after the revolution, which honestly sought to base its rule upon the will and interests of the Russian people. We can not now in good faith give it to this unscrupulous power, which exists by brute force and has repudiated the very idea of responsibility to the people.

Mr. President, there are some further aspects of this question which I should like to discuss, but I shall not at this time further detain the Senate.

In conclusion, let me add that, in my opinion, this Government can never afford to recognize, in any manner, a faction or dictatorship or government which adheres to the doctrines announced in the third internationale congress, and attempts to carry them into effect and overthrow by force our institutions and by revolutionary propaganda our Nation, as well as all other civilized nations in the world. It is said that Lenin wrote that political creed. Whether he did or not, it is the emanation of the bolshevist government and Lenin and Trotski and the organization of which they are representatives are committed to its execution. This creed calls for the overthrow of all nations and pledges the soviet government to unrelenting war to the accomplishment of that end. Bolshevism, therefore, is at war with our Nation and all civilized nations; it seeks the destruction of the finest and the best there is in the world, the overthrow of our Christian civilization and the plunging of humanity into an abyss from which there is no escape.

Mr. President, I ask that the following resolution be read and then referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The resolution (S. Res. 408) was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Whereas the so-called soviet socialist dictatorship in Russia pretends to be the successor of the former legal and recognized Government of Russia and is seeking political and diplomatic recognition from the Government of the United States; and

Whereas said soviet socialist dictatorship has repudiated the acknowledged and legal obligations of the former Government of Russia to other governments and to the nationals of other governments with whom it was in contract relations; and

Whereas said soviet socialist dictatorship has ignored and refuses to recognize the duties and obligations of nations under international law, including the obligation of honor and good faith in the keeping and performance of international treaties; and

Whereas the professions and acts of said soviet socialist dictatorship in Russia are incompatible with the principles of public order, and the liberty, rights, and property of individuals as established in the law of all civilized States; and

Whereas said soviet socialist dictatorship has carried on a propaganda in the United States for the destruction of public order and private rights, which propaganda is inimical to the interests of the United States, and constitutes an offense against the Government and people of the United States; and

Whereas said soviet socialist dictatorship acknowledges no common ground of international law or honor to sustain political and diplomatic relations between the Government of the United States and said soviet socialist dictatorship pretending to be the Government of Russia: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That it is the sense of the Senate that the Government of the United States do not recognize the present soviet socialist dictatorship in Russia as either a de facto or de jure government, and that the Government of the United States do not enter into political or diplomatic relations with said dictatorship or with any persons claiming authority under the same.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, before a motion is made to adjourn, I would like to remind Senators on the other side that quite a few nominations have been sent in, which can not be referred to the appropriate committees or acted upon until we have an executive session in order that they may be laid down and appropriately referred. I, therefore, suggest that the motion take the form of an executive session for the purpose of having the nominations referred to proper committees in the hope that they will be promptly acted upon and duly confirmed.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, the majority is not ready to have an executive session just at this time.

INTERFERENCE WITH COMMERCE.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a few days ago the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] made a motion to reconsider the vote of the Senate by which the bill (S. 4204) to prohibit interference with commerce was passed. Some days have elapsed since that motion was made. Under very common procedure in the Senate a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table might have been made, but a motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table is not debatable, so that I have refrained from making that motion, because the motion to reconsider, as I understand it, is debatable and would give an opportunity for those who desire to be heard upon the bill to express their views.

I desire to say, however, that unless it is brought up within a reasonable time by those who proposed it, and presented to the Senate, so the Senate may have an opportunity of completing the business which it has begun, I shall be very much disposed to make a motion to lay on the table, after waiting a sufficient length of time which seems to be reasonable for those who are interested in the discussion of the bill to do so.

The bill simply seeks to apply to a great agency of the Government—transportation—the same protection of the law which every individual citizen now has.

Mr. KENYON. I ask the Senator from Washington if he would object to an interruption to suggest the absence of a quorum? There are a number of Senators who are interested in the measure who are not here. I think if it is to be discussed it might be well to have them here.

The VICE PRESIDENT. I think it will be well to get the opinion of the Chair. The bill was passed under a call of the calendar under Rule VIII. The Chair will hold that the motion to reconsider is still a part of the procedure under Rule VIII, and as that rule provides that a Senator may speak but once and for no more than five minutes, the Chair thinks it advisable to call attention to that fact in this matter.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Is the motion to reconsider now before the Senate?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; it is not up for reconsideration, but the Chair thinks that the situation is as explained by the Chair, that the bill having been passed when reached on the calendar under Rule VIII, the motion to reconsider must be governed by Rule VIII.

Mr. KENYON. That is, limiting discussion to five minutes?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Five minutes and one speech.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very glad that the Chair has announced his view. That clarifies the situation somewhat. If those who were opposed to the bill are satisfied with five minutes discussion of it, I am sure that those who are in favor of it will be satisfied with that amount of time. However——

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator, Does that mean that a motion to table it is not in order?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I must refer that to the Chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Perhaps it was not good practice, but the Chair has been inquired of as to whether, if the motion to reconsider prevails, an objection may then be entered to the further consideration of the bill. The Chair has expressed the opinion that it can be objected to, and it thereupon would have to go back to the calendar unless some Senator moved to proceed to the consideration of the bill and it was so ordered by the Senate. In other words, the bill having been considered under Rule VIII and passed under Rule VIII, the motion to reconsider comes under Rule VIII. If the bill be reconsidered any Senator may object to the further consideration of the bill and it goes to the calendar, unless there be a motion made to proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the rule. The Chair is therefore of the opinion that if Rule VIII applies in one particular it must apply in all, and that the debate is limited to five minutes.

Mr. ROBINSON. If the Senator from Washington will yield to me, I should like to make a brief statement, not in his time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will conclude in just a moment and yield the floor.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is nothing before the Senate.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that, but I do not care to raise that point of order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I only desire to occupy the floor a moment. There has been a great deal said, so I am informed, about the manner in which the bill was passed. I desire to say in that connection that it passed in the ordinary course of business of the Senate. It was not taken up upon special motion, but was passed upon call of the calendar.

I am referring to certain objections as to its passage that I have heard on the part of some of those who are opposed to the bill. I call attention to the fact that I was present at the time the bill passed, but made no motion or statement in regard to it. It passed upon the machinery of the consideration of the calendar of the Senate.

I beg leave to say this further in regard to the nature of the bill——

Mr. KENYON. May I ask the Senator before he proceeds, because so much has been said about the method in which the bill was passed, how many Senators were present in the Chamber at the time it was passed?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no idea how many Senators were present. I was present myself.

UMI

Mr. KENYON. I have heard it stated there were only three Senators present. I had been in the Chamber previous to that, but was called out, and when I got back the bill had been passed.

Mr. SMOOT. There was the usual number present.

Mr. KENYON. The usual number? There must have been five here then. I had hoped that regardless of anyone's feelings about the bill and its merits and the final passage the motion to reconsider could be agreed to so there might be a discussion of the bill before it was passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, I will say, so far as my interest in the bill is concerned, if we can have a date fixed for the vote upon the bill directly, that I would consent, and I hope the Senate would consent, to a reconsideration, upon the condition that the date for a vote upon the bill be fixed. If that is agreeable to the opponents of the bill, I shall be very glad if they will suggest it. Then there would be such time for debate as would be agreed upon by the Senate by unanimous consent, if there should be a unanimous-consent agreement.

I wish to say, as I was proceeding to say a moment ago, that there is nothing in the bill which imposes any penalty upon anyone for quitting his employment. That is true whether he quits as an individual or as a member of an organization; whether employees quit singly or quit all together. There is no language in the bill that imposes any penalty on anyone for quitting his employment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a moment. There is, however, a penalty provided in the bill against those who interfere with others who are employed in interstate commerce with the purpose and intent of impeding or obstructing such commerce, or who, by threats or intimidation or by force or violence, interfere with others who are engaged in interstate commerce, or who agree or conspire together with the intent and purpose of impeding or obstructing interstate commerce. Those are the acts which are penalized by this measure, and not the mere quitting of employment.

When the proper time comes for the discussion of the bill I hope to have an opportunity of briefly stating to the Senate the importance of imposing penalties for acts of that kind, with the view of setting up the same method of decision or administration of economic disputes between classes in the country that is now set up for the settlement of disputes between individuals in the community, who are not allowed to fight out their differences upon the street, to the inconvenience and the suffering of the community as a result. The purpose is to substitute the law for force and violence, and I assume that that is the central principle upon which this Government is founded.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not care at this time to enter into a discussion of the merits of the bill, but to point out the fact that I think, in view of the history of procedure in the Senate under Rule VIII, the motion to reconsider ought to prevail as a matter of right and fairness. It ought to be confessed. In saying that I do not intend to criticise the author of the bill or anyone else for not making the objection which any Senator under Rule VIII could have made when the Poindexter bill was reached on the call of the calendar; but we all know, Senators, that bills of this character are not usually passed by unanimous consent. This subject and related subjects were discussed for days when the Senate had under consideration what we now know as the "transportation act." The Senate by a small majority adopted a provision analogous but not identical with that which is contained in the bill of the Senator from Washington; but it receded from that position in conference. There is not a Senator who does not know that an objection would have been made to this bill if Senators who are opposed to it had been informed that it was going to be called up.

This is an important measure; it is a contested measure; and proceedings under Rule VIII for the consideration of unobjected bills on the calendar during my service in the Senate have never recorded the passage of a bill of this character.

There are bills on the calendar that involve the claims of injured soldiers that have been objected to month after month. This bill relates to an issue of very great importance, and the Senate, if it wants to pass the bill, ought to fight it out. We should discuss it and take a vote on it. Those who are opposed to the bill should have the opportunity to give the reasons for their opposition.

I know that it can be answered that every Senator ought to be here at his post when the calendar is called and that therefore anyone opposed failed to do his duty when he was not here ready to object when this bill was reached on the calendar; but we know the procedure of the Senate when we are considering the calendar, and we know that Senators have a multiplicity of duties outside this Chamber that make it impossible for them to stay here all the time.

To insist upon a denial of the motion to reconsider does not mean that the end of the Senator from Washington likely will be accomplished or the enactment of the legislation that is contemplated in his bill will be expedited by one day. Speaking quite frankly on the subject, I desire to say there is not a possibility that the bill will pass both Houses of Congress and become a law during the present session of Congress.

The body at the other end of the Capitol declined to accept a similar provision during the last session of Congress. A compromise was effected in the transportation act by which Government tribunals were created to adjust controversies arising between railroads and their employees. Those tribunals have proven not completely satisfactory, but effective. What is the advantage to this body; what is the advantage accruing to the country to insist upon a snap judgment in a question of this importance; a question that is contested and that every Senator here knows is contested? Why renew agitation of antistrike legislation when no strike is impending? Why not try out further the system of adjustment now employed?

I neither express nor imply criticism of any Senator who was present and failed to raise an objection; technically speaking, it was the duty of those who were opposed to the bill to exercise their privilege and make the objection; but the Senate spends days and even weeks in discussing unobjected bills; it has consumed this entire day in the discussion of a measure for which every Senator voted, and I do not propose to put myself in the attitude of insisting upon the right of discussion in the Senate upon bills that are not objected to and of denying that right upon bills that are objected to.

So far as I am concerned, I shall vote and fight for the motion to reconsider, and it will not make me friendly to the measure to see its advocates insist that those who are opposed to it shall be denied an opportunity of either expressing or registering their opposition merely because they had no actual notice that the bill would be called up.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not at this time either an advocate or an opponent of this bill. I attend the sessions of the Senate with reasonable consistency, and I recall that when the calendar was up for consideration a few days ago there were very few Senators present. I know that a great many bills were objected to, and quite a number were disposed of. I myself was not in the Chamber when this bill was reached, and I do not know whether I would have objected to it or not at the time. However, I fully agree with the Senator from Arkansas that a bill of this importance, which is known to be controverted, should be enacted into law only after the fullest discussion. Hence the motion to reconsider should, in my judgment, be carried, thus giving to every Senator, both those who advocate and those who oppose the measure, the opportunity to inform the Senate as to the reasons for their respective positions. So, under the circumstances, I think the motion for reconsideration should prevail.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I was present in the Chamber when the bill passed, but my attention was diverted in one way or another, and I did not follow the bill closely; but even if I were for the bill, and knew that I would vote for it, if a motion were made to reconsider the bill I should vote for the motion.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate adjourn until Thursday next at 12 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, December 23, 1920, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate December 20, 1920.

MEMBER OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

JOHN F. NUGENT, of Boise, Idaho, to be a member of the Federal Trade Commission for a term of seven years, vice William B. Colver, term expired.

CONFIRMATION.

Executive nomination confirmed by the Senate December 20, 1920.

MEMBER OF THE FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION.

JOHN F. NUGENT, of Boise, Idaho.

UMI

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, December 20, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, let Thy protecting arms go out to the innocent and unwary, now that an unprecedented wave of crime is going on throughout the length and breadth of our land. Many hearts are broken and many homes are left desolate. Strengthen, we beseech Thee, the arm of the law, that it may reach out to the culprits and place them where they can do no harm; that they may be taught the sanctity of life and the value of property; that the unrest throughout our country may cease, and peace and order maintained, to the honor and glory of Thy holy name. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, December 18, 1920, was read and approved.

PROTECTING DEPOSITS IN NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes on the subject of banking legislation.

The SPEAKER. When?

Mr. McCLINTIC. Now.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes now on the subject of banking legislation. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCLINTIC. Mr. Speaker, I wish to address myself briefly to the subject of protecting depositors in national banks. I am fully cognizant of the fact that there may be some who will disagree with me relative to my ideas on this subject. However, I am thoroughly convinced that it will only be a short while before it will be necessary for the great Banking Committee and this House to consider legislation of this kind in order to keep step with the progress that is being made by civilization.

I am thoroughly of the opinion that the great Federal reserve act is sufficient to protect this country against any kind of a financial panic. However, I am in favor of providing additional legislation which will be of service to the banking institutions and those who deposit money in the same. The Federal reserve banks in 1918 made over $55,000,000 in profits, and in 1919 the enormous sum of $88,000,000 was likewise made in profits. In my opinion a portion of this money should be placed into a fund each year for the purpose of protecting depositors in national banks.

Bankers, as a rule, are honest. However, their business is always coupled with certain kinds of risk. In the wheat and cotton growing sections of the United States it is necessary for banks to furnish the capital that is needed to move the crops. During the past year market situations have, indeed, been very bad, and for months at a time it was practically impossible for owners of cotton to dispose of the same. Conditions of this kind bring about serious hardships on banking institutions, and in some cases where markets could not be found the financial conditions of banks extending this kind of aid have been seriously impaired.

If there is any one thing that will disturb and disrupt a peaceful community, it is the crash of a bank failure. In many cases occurrences of this kind are responsible for suicides and the mental unbalancing of individuals.

Recently in the South a banker sent a bullet crashing into his brain, when, if he had only known it, in a few days he would have received sufficient help to have enabled his bank to continue business. This banker preferred to take his life rather than face his friends who had intrusted him with their funds. If the depositors in his bank could have been protected by a depositors' guaranty law, then the chances are he would not have taken his life, as it is more than probable that there could have been found some way to tide the institution over this crisis.

A few days ago I heard a Member of Congress make a most remarkable statement in this connection, and I am sure that I will violate no confidence when I state the facts in the case. He and five others were elected as directors of a large business institution, and the manager of the same in order to hedge certain contracts became a speculator on the stock markets, which resulted in a loss of over a million dollars. All of the directors, except this Member of Congress and one other party, preferred to commit suicide rather than face the humiliation of confronting those who had intrusted this business into their care. It is to the credit of this Member of Congress that he assumed his proportion of the liability and paid off the same in after years.

It is no wonder that his people have rewarded him by his election to this body, as his record is such as to entitle him to the commendation and the praise of all who know him. [Applause.]

Several States have already provided adequate bank guaranty laws. These are working successfully and the depositors in banks having this protection have never lost any money because of a bank failure. When a national bank fails a receiver, an attorney, and other kinds of professional help are employed to wind up its affairs. As a rule these are imported from some other section of the country and they do not have definite information as to the kind of paper that is subject to collection. In many cases the assets are disposed of at a loss, when, if the same could have been handled through the instrumentality of a depositors' guaranty law, more money could be derived for the depositors, and the expense could be reduced to a very low minimum. As a rule in States where the depositors of banks are guaranteed by law, when a bank fails instead of the public being embarrassed and the financial conditions being disturbed, the institution is sold to some other person, and the assets of the same are handled in such a way as to provide the greatest amount of money without the people being disturbed by reason of the change. To my mind it is far better to protect depositors of banks in this manner than to follow the old system, which has always brought about a great deal of sadness and misfortune to the community in which the institution was located.

The member banks of any Federal reserve district are not entitled to participate in the profits made by the Federal reserve banks, yet they are indirectly responsible for the success of the institution.

I can see no good reason why it would not be fair and right to set aside into a fund 10 per cent of the net profits of each Federal reserve bank annually for the purpose of protecting deposits in national banks, and I am hoping that the banking committee of this House will feel warranted in the interest of right, humanity, and justice to immediately allow a hearing to be held so that those interested in this subject may have the opportunity of presenting their ideas.

I have prepared a bill which I do not claim to be perfect, yet it provides the machinery which, in my opinion, will greatly improve the present plan of taking care of defunct banking institutions:

A bill (H. R. 15012) to provide for the creating of a national depositors' guaranty fund in each Federal reserve district, to be used for the protection of depositors in national banks and trust companies, and authorizing the Comptroller of the Currency to have supervision over the same.

Be it enacted, etc., That wherever the word "bank" is used in the act, the word shall be held to refer to any national bank or trust company which has complied with the provisions of the Federal reserve act and has been designated as a member bank.

Wherever the word "comptroller" is used in the act, the word shall be held to refer to the Comptroller of the Currency.

SEC. 2. That the comptroller is hereby authorized upon the passage and approval of this act to have full supervision over the national depositors' guaranty fund, which is hereby created and established for the purpose of protecting depositors in banks having a full membership and enjoying all the privileges granted under the provisions of the Federal reserve law: Provided, That the term "depositors" shall be held to include only individuals or institutions that have money on deposit in banks and do not draw or receive interest from any source for the use of same.

SEC. 3. That the act of March 3, 1919, relating to the disposition of profits of Federal reserve banks is hereby amended to read as follows:

"After the aforesaid dividend claims have been fully met, 10 per cent of the net earnings of each Federal reserve bank each year shall be deposited to the credit of the national depositors' guaranty fund in said bank, subject to be disbursed by the comptroller in paying off depositors of defunct banks. The balance of the net earnings shall be paid to the United States as a franchise tax except that the whole of such earnings, including those for the year ending December 31, 1918, shall be paid into a surplus fund until it shall amount to 100 per cent of the subscribed capital stock of such bank, and that thereafter 10 per cent of such net earnings shall be paid into the surplus."

SEC. 4. That the comptroller is hereby authorized and directed to levy against the capital stock of each bank coming under the provisions of this act an annual assessment of one-half of 1 per cent of the average daily deposits, less the deposits of the United States and State funds if otherwise secured, for the preceding year, and he may direct the same to be deposited in the bank assessed, to the credit of the national depositors' guaranty fund, or to the credit of this fund in the Federal reserve bank of the district in which the member bank is located: Provided, That deposits to the credit of the national depositors' guaranty fund, in member banks assessed for this purpose, shall not be subject to draw interest, and the comptroller is hereby authorized to withdraw any part or all of this fund at any time the same is needed to pay off depositors of any bank.

SEC. 5. That banks hereafter organized which are entitled to the protection authorized by the national depositors' guaranty act shall pay into the national depositors' guaranty fund at the direction of the comptroller 2 per cent of the amount of their capital stock, which amount shall constitute a credit fund subject to adjustment on the basis of its deposits at the end of the first year's business, and thereafter assessments shall be made as is provided for in section 4 of this act: Provided, That the said 2 per cent payment shall not be required of new banks formed by the reorganization or consolidation of banks which have been previously assessed for this purpose.

SEC. 6. That 60 days after the passage and approval of this act the comptroller shall notify each bank entitled to receive protection through the national depositors' guaranty fund that the assessments authorized have been made and he shall designate the bank where the deposit shall be placed. As soon as a bank has complied with the provisions of this section, the comptroller shall furnish to said bank a certificate which shall recite that said institution has complied with the provisions of the national depositors' guaranty act, and the bank receiving the same shall be permitted to advertise that its depositors are protected by the national depositors' guaranty law.

SEC. 7. That the comptroller is hereby authorized to increase the assessment made against banks in any Federal reserve district when it becomes necessary to provide funds to take care of an emergency: Provided, That the assessment made shall be used for no other purpose than is provided for in this act, and that the same shall not exceed the sum of 1 per cent of the average daily deposits based on the preceding year's business: Provided further, That if the assessment hereby authorized does not provide sufficient funds to pay off depositors in defunct banks, the comptroller is hereby authorized to borrow from the national depositors' guaranty fund of any Federal reserve district an amount sufficient to take care of any emergency situation, and the Federal reserve bank loaning such funds shall be entitled to receive interest at a rate not to exced 6 per cent per annum.

SEC. 8. That the comptroller is hereby authorized and empowered to issue certificates of deposit to depositors of defunct banks, drawn on the national depositors' guaranty fund of any Federal reserve district, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed 6 per cent per annum in case the amount to the credit of the national depositors' guaranty fund is not sufficient to pay off the depositors and loans can not be obtained from other Federal reserve banks.

SEC. 9. That whenever the financial condition of a bank becomes impaired to the extent it becomes necessary for the same to be closed, the comptroller shall as soon as possible thereafter issue checks drawn on the national depositors' guaranty fund in the Federal reserve district where the bank is located to the depositors entitled to receive the same: Provided, That nothing in this act shall exempt stockholders of defunct banks from any individual liability other than that which is already provided for, and the comptroller is hereby authorized to place to the credit of the national depositors' guaranty fund any moneys that may be collected from stockholders of defunct banks and to use the same in paying off depositors.

SEC. 10. That the comptroller is hereby authorized to provide necessary rules and regulations covering all assessments, payments of claims to depositors, transferring of funds from one bank to another, borrowing funds from Federal reserve banks, issuing of certificates of deposit, and to provide any additional regulations that will be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 11. That any bank failing or refusing to comply with the provisions of this act shall be subject to a fine of $100 per day, and at the end of 30 days, if the bank fails or refuses to pay the accrued amount, the comptroller is authorized to cancel its charter and to liquidate the business of said institution: Provided, That any moneys collected under the provisions of this section shall be deposited to the credit of the national depositors' guaranty fund.

I have never talked with a national banker but what was in favor of legislation of this kind. I know that the depositors who patronize national banks will welcome this kind of a law, and I am sure that any legislation which will improve the financial conditions of our Nation in the future will be welcomed by all of the people. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) extending until January 31, 1921, the time within which the special joint committee created by the naval appropriation act approved June 4, 1920, is required to make its report to the Congress of the United States, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3259. An act for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States.

PRODUCERS OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13931) to authorize the association of producers of agricultural products, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 13931, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked for by the Senate. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 13931) entitled an act to authorize the association of producers of agricultural products.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, is this the so-called Capper-Hersman bill, with the Hersman part stricken out and the Volstead part substituted last June?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes. This is a substitute for it.

Mr. GARD. I understand it was passed by the Senate.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It was passed by the Senate with a number of amendments, and one amendment especially is clearly an error.

Mr. GARD. What are the remaining objectionable amendments?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I am not prepared to say just what will be objectionable. Of course, I assume that the House bill is what the House would want, but the last amendment is clearly erroneous. It refers to one act, the Clayton Antitrust Act, as the one that punishes unfair methods of competition. The Clayton Antitrust Act does not do that. It is the Federal Trade Commission act that does that, and that error ought to be corrected.

Mr. GARD. Does the gentleman think the bill should go to conference?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It will have to go to conference for that purpose.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. VOLSTEAD, Mr. GRAHAM of Pennsylvania, and Mr. SUMNERS of Texas.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER. To-day is unanimous-consent day. The Clerk will call the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

FEDERAL BUILDING, CORDOVA, ALASKA.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12437) to authorize the expenditure of the sum of $100,000, heretofore appropriated for the erection of a United States post office, courthouse, and jail at Cordova, Alaska, by the act approved March 4, 1913, for the erection of a United States courthouse and jail at Cordova, Alaska.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT. When was that bill reported?

The SPEAKER. April 20.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, is there anyone here from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds to answer some questions?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I suggest that this bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. GARD. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

THE STATUTES.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, I move that the bill (H. R. 9389) to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919, a bill of 10,747 sections, now on the Clerk's desk, be considered by the House, that the rules be suspended, and that it be passed, being read by title only.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill referred to, to be read by title only. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill (H. R. 9389) to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. LITTLE. I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] has 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE] has 20 minutes.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I shall only detain the House for but a minute, because I think it is obvious that this bill is generally approved. We all know, of course, that one feature that has marked the development of Government for a long time has been the great increase in the enactment of statute law. I recall that Campbell, in his Lives of the Lord Chancellors, speaks of a session of the English Parliament held at Yarmouth that enacted but a single statute, which was designed to protect the Yarmouth fisheries. Now, of course, Parliament turns out annually a very large body of statute law. The other day the gentleman from Kansas showed us a volume containing the statutes enacted at the first session of Congress—a very thin volume. But we are in a new time, and every legislative body in the civilized world now produces a large number of statutes at each session. That is notably the case here, and that fact emphasizes the need for a periodical codification or compilation of our statute law. The need is extremely urgent now, and, as I tried to state the other day, the demand for what we are endeavoring to do proceeds from many sources. Now, one of two things is necessary—this is the alternative—either that we shall now adopt no codification revealing the living statute law of the country to the public in a convenient form, or else that we shall pass a bill in the manner in which it is proposed to put this bill through. If we decline to pass this bill, there will be postponed to some very indefinite future date the execution of a most important work. If the bill is passed now and without detailed discussion, I realize fully that the House trusts a great deal to the committee that is responsible for this compilation.

Mr. HUDSPETH. If the gentleman will yield, I want to state to my friend from Virginia I think if every Member of the House had observed the work of this committee as I have they would not feel any question about the correctness of this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I am much obliged to my friend. I must, however, say that none of us can claim to have done as much in this connection as the chairman of the committee [Mr. LITTLE]. He has addressed himself to the task with unsparing diligence. I might have competed with him except that for a part of the period I was engaged in trying to avoid the consequences of a possibly altogether fatal landslide. [Laughter.] Now, with reference as to how the committee has carried on its enterprise, whether it has done its duty satisfactorily, I can only testify that we have used every possible precaution to avoid error. Coupled with the fact that the utmost care has been exercised, consider the saving clauses that are appended to the compilation which quite comprehensively guard against the effect of any error which may have been committed, I believe the House may regard the compilation as being just about as accurate as it could have been made under any circumstances whatever.

Mr. BEE. The committee having gone over the codification carefully, I supposed it was possible to put it in alphabetical order—A, B, C. I notice, for example, however, that the Internal Revenue is close to the end of the codification. There is no way by which it could be alphabetically arranged as to the different subjects?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It was hardly possible to do that. It may be assumed that a full and analytical index, such as will be provided, will avoid any such difficulty as the gentleman has in mind.

Mr. BEE. I am satisfied that the gentleman has the right idea in mind.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. GARD. How is the index made, may I inquire?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The index of the Statutes at Large, as I understand, is made under the supervision of the Joint Committee on Printing, and is by extremely competent men. We can take it for granted that the index to this volume will be made similarly, and that it will undoubtedly afford the easy opportunity of quickly ascertaining exactly where any particular provision can be found.

Mr. GARD. Of course, the index is extremely important.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; the index is of extreme importance, and I think my friend will acknowledge that the indexing of the Statutes at Large is thoroughly well done.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. In the preparation of this code will the indexing clerk also place under the sections the various citations to the decisions of the Federal courts in construing those sections?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No; it is not contemplated that there will be any reference to judicial decisions.

Mr. RAKER. The committee has prepared such citations to decisions, has it not?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No; the committee has not prepared any citations of decisions. The expediency of doing that was considered, and we laid aside that idea for the reason that it was thought it would involve labor that would interfere with the early completion of the work and unnecessarily add to the size of the volume.

Mr. RAKER. The index of the statutes which have been amended in the final enactment will be considered as well?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. PARRISH. Has the gentleman any idea as to when the indexing will be completed?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] is better prepared than I to answer that question.

Mr. LITTLE. This bill, when it passes, will be published in one volume, just as the Statutes at Large are published, and indexed just as any other Statutes at Large are indexed, at the close of this Congress on the 4th of March, if they follow the general custom. Possibly they may get it done sooner.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I may say that we design to expedite the indexing as rapidly as possible and also the printing of the volume and its circulation.

Mr. PARRISH. One of the reasons why I asked that question is the fact that a number of Members are binding their volumes of the statutes now. I thought perhaps we could bind the index along with the volume.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Just as soon as the bill becomes law the preparation and printing of the index will go forward and be finished at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. LARSEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. LARSEN. Is it contemplated that the index will be in a separate volume or bound in the same volume?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It will be bound in the same volume. And, further, the suggestion has been made that Congress in providing for the printing should consider whether it would not be advisable to authorize a large number of copies to be printed on thin paper, so as to greatly reduce the bulk of the copies so printed.

Mr. REED of West Virginia. The plates, as I understand, will be preserved by the Public Printer. I understand they will not have to be reset.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand that when the bill becomes a law plates will be made from the type already set and the number of copies desired will be printed without delay.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I agree with the gentleman that the index will be a valuable part of the work when completed. Is it not also true that the committee has prepared a very complete table of contents that will be found in the first part of the book?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That is true. There is such a table of contents, which facilitates the use of the compilation, just as it now is.

Mr. BRAND. I would like to know if these experts who are preparing the index have ever had any experience in indexing law books?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I understand they have had long experience in indexing the Statutes at Large that are annually published. I have not heard of any fault being found up to this time by officials of the Government, the bench and bar, or the general public, with the indexing as it has been done from year to year.

Mr. BRIGGS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does this bill provide that the codification shall be indexed in an exhaustive way?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. There is no provision of that sort, and I suppose there has never been any provision of that kind with respect to any individual volume of the Statutes at Large.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does not the gentleman think it ought to be incorporated in the bill?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not think it should be incorporated in the bill. If it is deemed advisable to indicate in a specific way how the indexing should be done, that is a matter that should be taken care of by a separate measure.

Mr. BRIGGS. The gentleman does not think it ought to be done as a part of the adoption of this report?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. No. In my opinion, if there is any necessity for a specific requirement as to indexing, it should not be incorporated in this bill.

Mr. GARRETT. The index is not a part of the law, anyhow.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The index is not a part of the law. It must be made after the law is enacted.

Mr. BRIGGS. I want to ask the gentleman whether the same arrangement as that in the old Revised Statutes will be followed in this compilation?

UMI

Mr. LITTLE. We followed the Revised Statutes as far as the immense amount of new law would permit.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman will understand that there has been such a multiplication of statutes since the date of the Revised Statutes that strict adherence to the arrangement then observed was not possible. Since that date a great number of new subjects have been drawn within the legislative activity.

Mr. BRIGGS. I understand that. I meant so far as they related, of course.

Another question, when there was a doubt as to whether a statute had been repealed or not, was such a statute incorporated in this codification, or was it left out?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I do not recall any case in which we had any misgiving as to whether a statute had been repealed or not. If there had been such cases I think we would have set out all the statutes relative to the particular subject and not assumed the responsibility of construing any statute.

Mr. BRIGGS. Was there any endeavor to reconcile the vast amount of pension legislation and to coordinate it so that it might be made available in a way more accessible than it is under present conditions?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I believe the pension legislation is contained under one title. But arrangement or coordination has not gone to the point of amending any statute or series of statutes. To use the language of an old law writer we have not used "the amending hand."

Mr. BRIGGS. It has not been a revision, but simply a codification?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The gentleman is correct. We have tried to make it strictly a compilation or codification and not a revision. I for one would not have been willing, in the time available to a Member of Congress for this sort of work, to engage in an effort to revise. I do not think it would have been practicable, nor do I think it would have been safe.

Mr. BRIGGS. Does the codification bring down to date all of the laws passed by this Congress to the end of the last session?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. It brings all the laws down to the 4th of March of last year.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask this question of the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DENISON. Is it within the limit of possibility either here or in the Senate for codification of the interstate commerce law that was embodied in the transportation act to be put into this volume without endangering its passage?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. That would, of course, involve an amendment of the bill and interfere with the general plan. It would take in enactments after the 4th of March, 1919.

Mr. DENISON. Of course, the transportation act——

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. But let me say this to the gentleman, there are compilations issued by the Interstate Commerce Commission at short intervals containing all the laws bearing upon transportation, and they are pretty widely distributed without charge.

Mr. DENISON. The transportation act itself is a codification of the transportation law.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; and the Interstate Commerce Commission every now and then, quite frequently, issues a compilation which is very full and in very convenient form.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Does not the gentleman think it far better to have that in a separate compilation than to enlarge this volume?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes; transportation is a subject with respect to which there will probably be a great deal of legislation as time goes on, and the method employed by the Interstate Commerce Commission of keeping all who are interested informed as to what its law is at any given time meets every necessity. Of course, this compilation contains all the statutes effective on March 4, 1919.

Mr. ALMON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Certainly.

Mr. ALMON. Do I understand from the gentleman that the committee have read this bill and made the comparison, or have they had to intrust that to the revisers and codifiers in the employ of the committee?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. I will say this frankly to my friend, for myself I can not claim to have examined every section of this bill. That would have been impossible. But I have examined many sections with a view to ascertaining their correctness, and I have not found any inaccuracies. Other members of the committee have done the same thing. I believe the chairman of the committee [Mr. LITTLE] has gone beyond that. Perhaps he can say that he has looked at every section.

Mr. ALMON. Another question. Then in the event that mistakes have been made in codifying, thereby making a change in the law, what effect, in the opinion of the gentleman, would that have upon the law? Would the passage of this bill, in other words, have the effect of changing the law, and will the law be as it is in this bill or as it previously was, if there has been a mistake?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If we have invented a provision, or if we have so misapprehended the existing law as to put something in a section that is not the law, a court might hold what appears in the compilation to be the law. The very question we have here is as to how the work has been done, and whether it has been done in such a way that the House is entitled to rely upon the compilation as being accurate. I think it hardly within the range of possibility that any such error as my friend suggests will ever be discovered.

Mr. ALMON. My only purpose in asking these questions was to get further information, so that we might better determine whether we could rely on what has been done by the committee voting for the bill.

Mr. BURROUGHS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. BURROUGHS. I understand from what the gentleman says that he has examined the work sufficiently, and is sufficiently acquainted with the methods pursued by the committee so that he is satisfied, as I myself am satisfied, that the factor of error in the preparation of this work has been reduced to a minimum?

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Yes. There is no sort of question about that. I do not believe we can get a more accurate compilation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a parliamentary inquiry, and in order to present it intelligibly I shall have to ask leave to make a statement. I have examined the form of the motion made by the gentleman from Kansas, as I understand it is to be journalized, to suspend the rules and pass House bill 9389, with the reading of the title. Now, the question in my mind is whether that motion should not be somewhat elaborated. Here is the situation: The bill by the number referred to was reported to the House on March 4, 1919. Subsequently a joint resolution passed the House and the Senate which received the signature of the Executive authority.

Mr. LITTLE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. The motion was elaborated; it was considerable longer than that stated by the gentleman.

Mr. GARRETT. I conferred with the Clerk of the House, and he stated to me the way it was journalized.

Mr. LITTLE. I move to suspend the rule and pass, reading by title only House bill 9389, an act to consolidate, codify, and revise and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919, the bill now on the Clerk's desk, the completed bill of 10,747 sections. I was quite specific about that because I wanted to meet the point the gentleman had in his mind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Kansas that he send up his motion in writing.

Mr. GARRETT. I think it highly important when we are not reading a bill, particularly that it should be so stated as to show clearly that it embraces all that we want to pass.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that I myself examined and found that the bill on the Clerk's desk is the completed bill.

Mr. GARRETT. That is my understanding. But the bill as shown on the calendar was not the bill that is now upon the Clerk's desk. We passed a joint resolution subsequently which authorized this committee to print additions to the bill; of course, that resolution, although law, would not annul the rules of procedure of the House.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. When does the gentleman think the joint resolution was passed?

Mr. GARRETT. Just before the adjournment of the last session of Congress.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think it was about the time of adjournment a year ago.

Mr. GARRETT. Was it passed before the report was made?

Mr. LITTLE. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That was my understanding, long before this report was made.

Mr. GARRETT. The fact still remains that it only authorizes the printing——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It only provided for the form of the printed bill.

Mr. LITTLE. It was passed December 19, 1919.

Mr. GARRETT. The bill which was originally placed on the calendar is only a part of the bill that we are now asked to consider.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Admitting that to be true, every once in a while we have what we call a star print of the bill. I think myself that this ought to have a star on it. The bill which the Clerk has would be certified to the Senate as a completed bill regardless of the date of the report.

Mr. GARRETT. If that is clear, all right. The only thing in my mind is this: We are dispensing with the reading of the bill. The bill originally placed on the calendar is not the full bill that we are now actually considering—that is, it is not the bill which at the time it was reported and given the number is referred to in the motion made by the gentleman from Kansas. The gentleman from Illinois sees what I am after.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I know what the gentleman is after; I have been looking up the same thing and I find that the bill on the Clerk's desk is the completed bill—that is, the bill we are now considering—and I think the gentleman's objection is taken care of.

Mr. GARRETT. If the motion of the gentleman from Kansas is made sufficiently broad to include the additions, and I understand that it is his purpose to do so and he thought he had, that is sufficient, but as the Clerk has it at the desk, as journalized, it is not.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Journal never shows what the bill is until passed. It does not set out the bill. This situation frequently arises. I get the bill as soon as it is reported from the document room, and every once in a while I find that the bill reported from the desk is not the bill I have in my hand. Usually if it is a star print I get it, but sometimes I do not. If not, I ask what print of the bill is being read. The print of the bill which the Clerk has is the print that the House passes, if it passes the bill.

Mr. GARRETT. That is true, of course, but always the bill is read. Now, this bill is not to be read except by title.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That does not make any difference about the fact. I suggested that there might be some way to correct this by motion, but it seems to me that as the Clerk has possession of the completed bill it is sufficient to say that we pass that bill by title. That is the bill the Clerk will certify as being passed.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if gentlemen are perfectly clear that the motion as it appears now will cover the full bill, I am content, but I do not want the engrossing clerk to have any difficulty, and we do not wish the record to be made up in such a way as to give cause for the courts to hold any part of our work void.

Mr. LITTLE. Permit me to say that the motion was drawn in view of the conference I had with the gentleman from Tennessee on the subject, hoping to meet the point he suggested some weeks ago.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman has his motion as he stated it on the floor, I think it will be all right, but as journalized it caused me to wonder if there might not be some loophole for attack in the courts.

Mr. LITTLE. It was drawn so that it would meet the gentleman's purpose. That was the primary purpose in putting it in this form.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Tennessee yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. As one not expertly informed of the procedure in the House, may I ask the gentleman what means of identification there will be as to this particular bill after it passes the House?

Mr. GARRETT. That is the thing which was in my mind. It is identified by the calendar number.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Might we not have the motion reported?

Mr. GARRETT. As journalized. I think that would be a good idea.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Could not some identification mark be placed upon it?

Mr. GARRETT. I know of none except the calendar number.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion as it has been sent up.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. LITTLE, by direction of the Committee on Revision of the Laws, submitted the following motion:

"I move to suspend the rules, read by title only, and pass the bill (H. R. 9389) entitled 'A bill to consolidate, codify, revise, and reenact the general and permanent laws of the United States in force March 4, 1919,' being the complete bill of 10,747 sections as finally approved by said committee and printed under its direction pursuant to public resolution No. 24, approved December 23, 1919, a copy of which is duly in possession of the Clerk."

Mr. GARRETT. I think that covers it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Would that motion be comprehensive enough to provide that the bill should not be engrossed? It says nothing about that.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. A motion to suspend the rules does not require engrossment.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules and passing the bill.

The question was taken, and, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

EXTENSION OF ASSESSMENT WORK ON MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Mines and Mining, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (S. 4565) extending the time for the doing of annual assessment work on mining claims for the year 1920 to and including July 1, 1921.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri moves to suspend the rules and pass the bill, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the period within which work may be performed or improvements made for the year 1920 upon mining claims is required under section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States is hereby extended to and including the 1st day of July, 1921, so that work done or improvements made upon any mining claim in the United States or Alaska on or before July 1, 1921, shall have the same effect as if the same had been performed within the calendar year of 1920: Provided, That this act shall not in any way change or modify the requirements of existing law as to work to be done or improvements made upon mining claims for the year 1921.

The SPEAKER. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second be considered as ordered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri is entitled to 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas to 20 minutes.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I desire to say that section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States requires that there shall be done annually $100 worth of assessment work on all mining claims between the time the claimant has taken up his claim and the time he is to receive his patent. Your committee first reported a bill similar to the act of November 13, 1919, under which the provisions of the general law were suspended for the year 1920. One week ago to-day the Senate passed this bill. In fact, I should say this is the Senate bill verbatim. This bill provides for an extension of time in which the assessment work may be done, whereas the provisions of the act of November 13, 1919, provides for a suspension of the provisions of the general law requiring assessment work for 1920.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a parliamentary inquiry as to the status of the bill?

Mr. RHODES. Yes.

Mr. GARD. The gentleman says that the Senate bill is identical with this bill. Are we not considering the Senate bill?

Mr. RHODES. The House reported the Senate bill without amendment.

Mr. GARD. The request of the gentleman is that we pass this Senate bill under a suspension of the rules?

Mr. RHODES. That is the request. Mr. Speaker, I come from a State in which not one mining claim exists that will be affected by this bill. In other words, the legislation which we seek is not applicable to conditions in my State. The Committee on Mines and Mining has been led to believe that there is widespread demand for the enactment of this bill. It was stated on the floor of the House when the act of November 13, 1919, was passed that if Congress would pass that law no more requests of that character would be made in the future, but we feel certain that the same reasons which justified the passage of the act last year and the act of the preceding year, and which had also been passed in 1917, exist to-day. Mr. Speaker, the same conditions not only exist, but there is the added condition of financial stringency which enters into conditions to-day in the Northwest which did not exist a year ago. For that reason your Committee on Mines and Mining believes this legislation should be passed.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODES. Yes.

Mr. HUDSPETH. As I understand the bill, it simply provides that the assessment work that was required of the owner of a mine or a claim for 1920 may be done up until 1921, July 1, extending the time for that work.

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman has correctly stated the purpose of the bill.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am for the bill.

Mr. RHODES. In other words, nobody loses anything. The Government of the United States will lose nothing, but the owner of the claim is given a longer time in which to do the assessment work than the original law provides. While labor is plentiful in some sections of the country, we are informed that labor conditions in certain mining sections are such that it is not plentiful, and we are further informed—in fact, I know as a matter of recent investigation—that mining conditions throughout the United States have not been within the last 25 years in such a plight as they are in to-day. Take, for instance, the mining of gold. The annual production of gold has materially declined in recent years. Take the price of copper. It has declined from 34 cents a pound to 13¾ cents a pound on the New York market last Friday. Lead has declined from 9 cents a pound, 90 days ago, to 4½ cents a pound last Friday on the New York market. Mining conditions are as bad as agricultural and other industrial conditions throughout the length and breadth of the United States. Your committee has been led to believe that the passage of this bill at least will in a measure render some relief in the mining sections of the Northwest.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODES. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Can the gentleman tell me what the present price of zinc is?

Mr. RHODES. About 5½ cents per pound. I should have added that zinc has suffered a great decline. My own State stands second in the production of zinc, Oklahoma being first, and 90 per cent of the zinc mines in Missouri, Oklahoma, and Kansas are closed to-day.

And I will say, as a matter of further information upon general mining conditions, that I represent a district in Missouri which produced last year 96 per cent of all the lead produced in Missouri, and Missouri stands first in the Union in the production of lead, our State having produced 162,000 tons of lead in 1919, with Idaho ranking second. To-day every lead-mining concern in my section of the State has either closed within the last 30 days or has expressed an intention to reduce the wage of labor by January 1, 1921, indicating the extreme depression in which the mining business is found.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODES. I yield.

Mr. GARD. I notice from the report that similar bills to this were enacted in 1917, 1918, and 1919?

Mr. RHODES. That is true.

Mr. GARD. Is it the intention of gentlemen on this committee to report this bill out annually, or is there to be some adjustment of the matter?

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I presume the gentleman did not hear the beginning of my remarks when I stated that when the act of November 13, 1919, came up for passage gentlemen on the floor of this House stated that it would never be necessary to make a similar request in the future; but that your committee has found that the conditions which existed in 1919, which justified the passage of the bill then, are presented to-day with additional reasons for the passage of this measure.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. RHODES. I yield to my friend from Nebraska.

Mr. GARD. Surely.

Mr. KINKAID. This bill is not similar to the bills passed in former years just named by the gentleman from Ohio. Those bills excused the doing the work for the year entirely. This bill provides for the extension of time for a few months only in which to perform the work which has to be performed within that time.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, perhaps the gentleman did not observe my statement at the outset. I first stated that the committee reported a bill in which it sought to reenact the provisions of November 13, 1919, but a week ago to-day the Senate passed this bill, which is a more liberal measure than the act passed last year and the bill which the committee reported in the first instance. I will say further to the gentleman that I have personal knowledge of hundreds of requests that have come to this committee seeking the passage of this bill, and I only know of three objections that have reached us from any source in the United States to the proposed legislation.

Mr. GARD. I do not desire to impede the passage of the bill in the slightest, but I am seeking information. I note from the reading of section 2324 that if the location was made prior to 1872 $10 worth of work a year is required, and if made after 1872 $100 worth of work is required. Is that correct?

Mr. RHODES. That is correct. There are very few of these old claims left.

Mr. GARD. What the gentleman desires is to avoid the payment of the $100 a year of work?

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman permit me again to repeat that all this bill seeks to do is merely to extend the time in which the claimant has to do the work, and does not seek to suspend the provisions of the act as the act of last year did?

Mr. GARD. In other words, he can do this work of $100 up to July 1, 1921?

Mr. RHODES. The gentleman is exactly correct.

Mr. GARD. That is the point to which you desire to extend this $100 worth of work. Is there anything else you want to do in the way of extension in the section?

Mr. RHODES. Not at all. The bill is very definite and certain, and says that the claimant is simply given up to and including July 1, 1921, in which to do the work. Mr. Speaker, how much time have I remaining?

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RHODES. I will.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. In the event that this law is not passed is it not possible on January 1, 1921, for some one else to file a claim on these claims?

Mr. RHODES. It is not only possible, Mr. Speaker, but it is quite probable that a number of bona fide claimants will lose their claims because of others "jumping" the claims.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. If the gentleman will yield further, have there been many of these claims on which $100 worth of work has been performed?

Mr. RHODES. This year?

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. This year.

Mr. RHODES. I am advised a large number of the claimants have done assessment work for this year, but there is a large number on which the assessment work has not been done.

Mr. BROOKS of Illinois. In reference to the people who have done the work, are they real miners or prospectors or people who may buy the mines, capitalists?

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, we are advised they are bona fide claimants, and it is in the interest of the bona fide claimants we are seeking the legislation, and, in addition, I should state that the climatic conditions are such at this particular time in the States of Colorado, California, Washington, Oregon, Idaho, and Nevada, and all of the northeastern mining section, that it is impossible to do work because of the heavy snowfall. In fact, I might say that snow will be on the ground from this time probably until the first or the middle of June, 1921. Objection was made some days ago by a gentleman that the provisions of this bill should be extended further than July 1, 1921. I received a petition this morning from citizens residing in the State of Arizona, in which they say if the provisions of the bill can be extended until June 1, 1921, it will afford relief in many cases. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, all there is to this legislation is that under the law mining claimants have to do a total amount of $500 worth of work on the claim. They can either do it in one year or scatter it over five years, doing an amount of $100 each year. But the conditions have been such that a great many of these claimants have not been able to do the annual assessment work of $100. This bill is for the express purpose of preventing these people from losing their claims by reason of the fact that they have not been able to do the assessment work for this year. Now, it simply gives them until the 1st day of next July to do the 1920 assessment work. Now, I do not want to mislead the House. I stated in 1917, when the first bill was passed, that the only practical way was to suspend all assessment work for a period expiring one year after the declaration of peace.

I told the gentlemen then who promised the House that they would not come back and ask further extension that they did not know what they were talking about and that they would come back. The Welling bill, the House bill, was unanimously approved by the committee and is a better bill. Under that bill the work was suspended for one year. That is the identical suspension bill that we have enacted heretofore. But we are told that this, the Senate bill, is the only thing we can enact now, and that it will do some good. I suspect that the gold prospectors will be here before the 1st of July asking to be relieved. The snow will not be gone until the middle of June. This gives some relief to most of them, and simply postpones until July, 1921, the necessity for doing the work they are required to do in the year 1920. It is a wise provision. I would be in favor of giving it to them.

Mr. PARRISH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. Certainly.

Mr. PARRISH. I would like to ask the gentleman to state whether this mining industry in the West would be benefited by granting the extension? If this is not done, could the claims be jumped by squatters?

Mr. WINGO. If this is not done, the claimants will be frozen out. Instead of this retarding, I think it will not check the work at all, but that the work will be done under most of the claims, and the claims will not be abandoned. I think this is not calculated to hold up development, but it will help development. In other words, I think we ought to give the men who went in there under conditions different from those now existing a chance to make good their claims. I think the Congress ought to give them that chance.

Mr. PARRISH. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for two minutes.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, last year those of us who felt the necessity of some legislation of this kind told the House that we would not make this a continuing annual affair. We did not say—at least I did not say—we would not ask for it this year, but we did suggest that it would not be required every year.

It has been suggested in argument that it is now easier to get labor than it was in 1919, and that there is in fact considerable unemployment in many places. There are several answers to this contention. In the first place, there is very little unemployment in the mining districts. In a good many localities it is impossible to get men on almost any terms. It must be remembered that in some mining communities a good many men were accustomed in the past to earn a livelihood by doing this assessment work. But we waived the requirement of doing it at all in 1917, 1918, and 1919 because costs were so high that the expenditure of the money for this purpose was rightly regarded as a waste. Many miners left those communities either to enter military service or because mines generally were shutting down owing to the excessive cost of operations. These men can hardly be expected to return for merely temporary employment, even if it was at all practicable to go to the mines in the deep snows of a Rocky Mountain winter.

Another thing that makes it difficult to secure labor is that for a long time the hand-drilling, hard-rock miner has been on the way to becoming an extinct species. The large mines which are no longer prospects use air drills and electric power. The employment of the old-style, single-jack miner has been reduced to a minimum in the developed properties. In prospects, however, the hard-rock work is necessarily single-jack drilling, because it would be entirely out of the question to install air compressors or electric power in rudimentary nonproductive mines. The single-jack miner having sought other employment, there is an especial difficulty in obtaining the particular kind of labor required for the annual assessment work, as well as the general difficulty of obtaining any labor at all in the localities where that work has to be done.

Much work has been done by locators in laying out and making roads to their prospects. I know of several groups of mining claims in Colorado where thousands of dollars have been expended in this way. This work, of course, will all go to the benefit merely of the man who will relocate those properties on January 1 if the bill before us is not immediately enacted into law.

I agree entirely with the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] that it would have been well to make the suspension of the requirement of annual labor continue for a year after the proclamation of peace. However, as has been pointed out, we are not now asking the same thing that we asked before. We are not asking a waiver, but a mere extension of the time. It has been suggested that the extension which we are now asking may not be sufficient, because in high altitudes, like many places in Colorado, where mines are located at 10,000 feet altitude or more, the snow does not leave until after the 1st of July. I would prefer in this respect the provision of my own bill, introduced in the House, to extend the time to August 1. However, gentlemen should bear in mind that if the owner gets in and starts work on his claim, that prevents a relocation, prevents the jumping of his claim, even though he has not actually completed his annual work by the end of the time, if he is then engaged in doing it.

Let me call attention to a fact which might be lost sight of by some. It was suggested by the inquiry of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PARRISH], who evidently is himself familiar with the situation, that if this resolution is not passed, the mining industry will not be helped one bit, because the claim jumper has a year after the 1st of January in which he may do his work. And that extends the time as to him for an additional year. It is of no benefit to anybody except to the man who wants to take advantage of the foresight, energy, and knowledge of the country of somebody else who has located a claim by jumping that claim. There are many such speculators who would be glad to take advantage of some other man's work by moving in on a claim staked out and located, a claim perhaps on which improvements of some considerable value have been constructed.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The failure to pass this legislation would only benefit the class known as the bonus hunter and not the stable citizen.

Mr. VAILE. Exactly, those who would take advantage of other men's work. The claims are held by the men who located them themselves, after months and sometimes years of struggling, prospecting, time spent in trudging over the mountains studying the rear elevation of a burro, or else they are owned by men to whom these prospectors have sold in good faith.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. This bill would not in any way do away with the payment of back amounts of $100 for other years?

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman understands that this is not payment. It is the performance of labor.

Mr. BLANTON. This does not do away with the necessity for spending that amount for the improvement of the claims?

Mr. VAILE. Oh, not at all. After the man has done work aggregating five years, whether he does it this year or later, he can get a patent.

Mr. BLANTON. He must still spend his $500 to have that much work done, or do work equivalent to that in value.

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Let me, in conclusion, say just a word about general conditions in the mining industry. That word is that the industry is now shot to pieces. The price of gold of course is a constant, as measured in money, because gold is the yard-stick of our currency. But this means that as measured in commodities the price of gold is now way down. But practically all minerals now bring the miner less than the cost of production. It is a fact which can easily be verified by the figures that costs of machinery, power, fuel, and all supplies used in the mining business have not as yet shared to any appreciable extent in the supposed general fall of prices, which is itself almost inappreciable to the general consumer.

Smelting charges are very high. Transporation charges, where the facilities for railroad transportation still exist, are very high. Some railroads and a good many spurs and branches have been discontinued in the mining regions and sold for junk. These conditions have compelled many mines to shut down. When a mine is shut down, the natural result is that the capital invested in it and its future productivity are forever lost. You can close up a woolen mill, but if you keep the property guarded there is practically no physical deterioration. The farmer certainly has my sympathy when he is compelled to sell live stock at a loss, and the loss of breeding stock is a national calamity too. The farmer of course derives mighty small comfort from the fact that he still has his land, but I can assure him that the mine owner who is obliged to stop business would consider himself fortunate indeed if he had such a large part of the value of his property left. His property soon loses its entire value. When a developed mine stops operating it fills up with water, timbers rot, and earth and rock caves in. The fear of such a total loss keeps many a mine owner paying out an annual loss from operations conducted with no hope of present profit.

These matters will be presented to Congress in other proposals for remedial legislation. We shall ask for relief by tariff legislation, by the McFadden gold bonus bill, and by other measures, for an industry which has suffered more from the war and war prices than any other single business, an industry moreover, which in some period of its history has invariably been conducted at a loss. The farm pays something in cash the first year. The factory produces some return in cash the first month. The mine has no such history. Practically every mine had an unproductive stage in its beginning. Mine development must proceed on faith, hope, and charity, the faith and hope of the miner and the charity of his creditors. May we not rely in some small degree on the charity also of this great Government which owes so much to the faith and hope of the miner? Remember that to-day we are only asking for a charity which costs nothing to the Government, in behalf of mines which have as yet produced nothing for their possessors. [Applause.]

Mr. WINGO. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. WELLING].

Mr. WELLING. Mr. Speaker, the committee having this matter in charge were hopeful that there would be no interruption in the assessment work on mining claims this year. I think all of us from the mining States are anxious to have this work resumed, but conditions have arisen in the West since this Congress reconvened which justify this relief which the bill provides. In fact, the condition is so bad there to-day that the Committee on Mines and Mining felt that they would be justified in reporting a complete relief measure, doing away with the necessity for assessment work this year, just as they did last year and the year before. It became apparent to the committee as we went along in our investigation that it might be impossible, because of lack of time, to pass the bill which I introduced and which the committee reported unanimously. That bill did give complete exemption. There were certain individuals in the House and certain influences in the Senate which were opposed to that sort of action. It seems apparent that this is the only relief that is available at this time for the miners and prospectors of the West. It is justified, because there is in the West to-day a great deal of snow in the higher altitudes, and it is impossible at this season of the year to get to the mining claims and to perform this assessment work. I hope that the bill will pass in its present form. It must be remembered that it in no way relieves the owners of a prospect from doing the total amount of work required under the provisions of section 2324 of the Revised Statutes affecting assessment work.

Mr. RHODES. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WELLING. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RHODES. I desire to ask the gentleman whether it would be a good thing to extend the time in which to do this work from January 1 to July 1 as a matter of permanent legislation, and whether climatic conditions in the Northwest would permit work to be done before July 1 of each year?

Mr. WELLING. I think so. Perhaps there are some very exceptional regions in the high mountains where there would still be snow on July 1, but I appreciate the force of the suggestion that was made by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], that perhaps this assessment work ought to be done in the fiscal year rather than in the calendar year as at present.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS of Nevada. Mr. Speaker, the western Members join the eastern Members in the desire to have work done upon mining claims, because we all realize that the only way in which development and progress can come to the West is by hard, consistent work.

The law requiring expenditure of $100 annually upon each 20-acre mining claim, or fraction thereof, is therefore a wise provision, in which western men approve and concur. In the great out West, every hill is a mountain, every creek is a river, and every man is a liar, only when he endeavors to tell the whole truth about our magnificent possibilities and opportunities. Because there is room and undeveloped resources west of the Mississippi River to support, in the American way, ten times the present population of our United States; the mind can not grasp the magnitude of coming events; where perpetual sunshine upon fertile soil richly repays men to reclaim and cultivate this generous domain. Therefore, we of the West desire and invite cooperation and aid of increased population and interest in our mutual opportunities in abundance.

During October of this year a company of movie stars were securing Nevada snow scenes upon the rugged mountainous regions of northern Nevada. At the same time in southern Nevada our citizens were picking cotton, harvesting English walnuts, and gathering home-grown dates and figs, thus showing the diversity of resources in a single State, furnishing opportunity for employment of miners in various occupations and in different counties. The excess profits tax, which adds a serious burden to mining, has done its full share to retard opening new properties and continuing old ones. The products of mining are in no sense an excess profit, but clearly a depletion of mine values and reserves. When the ranch sells cattle they are replaced by young stock. But there is only one crop of ore in a mine. The heavy hand of war has taken full measure from Nevada, many returning soldiers and others finding the necessity for moving into new communities, away from mining districts where their claims are located; therefore to exact a strict observance of the law, which requires the annual assessment work, will mean abandonment of thousands of mining claims, which if relocated will require under the law no work being done until December 31, 1922. A strict enforcement of law means of necessity abandonment of a major portion of mining claims, upon which those relocated in January, 1921, will require no work being done for practically two years. Therefore, suspension of assessment work for 1920 will serve development and give proper encouragement to many most worthy citizens. Changing the period from the end of the calendar year to the end of the fiscal year will serve to increase the amount of work annually performed.

We of the West, in homes of our own choosing, have a certain pride in the latent resources of our section, being upon the ground and knowing the needs and difficulties. Our sincere wish is to have the confidence of eastern Members, for the sincerity of our purpose in reclaiming the West, and inviting the cooperation of true American home builders.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Montana [Mr. EVANS].

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, from the inquiries that have been made by gentlemen on the floor I anticipate that some eastern Members have not a clear conception of the needs and wants of this bill. The statute provides that when a claim is located and $500 worth of work done, the locator may get a patent. It provides that $500 worth of work must be done, at least $100 worth each calendar year.

Mr. HARDY of Colorado. Is the gentleman sure that he is correct; does it require $500 in five years?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. It can be done at any time, but he must do $100 worth each year, and $500 worth before he is entitled to a patent. It works out this way: A man locates a claim, carries it on with one, two, three, or four hundred dollars of annual assessment work. He files with the county clerk or the recording officer evidence of the fact that he has done the annual assessment work for that year. But there are people in the land who watch the opportunity of finding out that the claimant has not done the annual work up to the last day of the calendar year. Then he goes out on the 1st day of January as a claim jumper, as we call it, and he locates on the ground that the prospector has done $200 or $300 worth of work upon. He gets the benefit because the individual locator was so unfortunate or improvident that he did not do his annual assessment work. The Government gets nothing out of this proposition so far as a money consideration. It is only to show the bona fides of the man who claims this particular piece of ground. The passage of the bill, in my judgment, will not help the large mine owner. The large concerns have probably done all of their assessment work. If it helps anybody, it will help the prospector, the man of very limited means, perhaps an improvident man who has not been able to do his $100 of assessment work. The corporations have done their assessment work long since.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. EVANS was granted leave to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I make the same request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, the fact I think should be stressed in the RECORD, and I think those Members who live in the mining districts should also impress upon their constituents the fact that this work must be done by July 1 and that they will get no further extension from Congress. I do not mean that I am opposed to that; I am in favor of extending it further, but I know enough about the situation to know that one reason why this bill is being passed instead of the House bill is because this is the only bill that can be put through now. I do not believe conditions will arise which would make it possible for further extensions and I think gentlemen should advise their constituents that they must do the assessment work by July 1 or lose their claims.

Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I will.

Mr. MAYS. Does this require the claimant to make a declaration?

Mr. WINGO. No; I think it should have done so. I think it better from the Government's standpoint and the claimant's standpoint that we should pass it in the same language that we did before, and require notice to be filed in the recorder's office.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There was a suggestion that they be required to file that notice before the 31st of December, but there is no time now in which to file the notice and rather than to extend the time up to say the 1st of April we thought it better to require no notice at all.

UMI

Mr. WINGO. My opinion was that we should provide for an extension for 1920 and make the notice July 1, 1921.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. SUMMERS] the balance of my time.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that this is only a reasonable consideration that might be extended to the mine operators and developers of the western section of our country. There are many reasons why development work has not been carried on during the past year.

A day or two ago I had one case laid before me in detail. This gentleman stated that he was developing a number of claims; that he was abundantly able financially to carry on this development work, but that the labor situation had been such during the past summer that he had found it quite impossible to procure labor for the purpose of doing the necessary $100 worth of work on each of the claims he was undertaking to develop. He was praying that there might be a little extension of time, not on account of negligence, not because he was not financially able, but because of the labor situation, in the hope that he might not have to forfeit all of the work that he had done in the past year on the number of claims which he is developing. The Government of the United States stands to lose nothing. Certainly the developer who has put in two or three or four hundred dollars' worth of effort toward bringing a mine into existence should have a little consideration at this time. I trust this measure will be approved.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MANN of Illinois). The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri, to suspend the rules and pass the Senate bill 4565.

The question was taken; and, in the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will resume the calling of the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks upon the bill last passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will call the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

STANDING ROCK INDIAN RESERVATION.

The Clerk called H. J. Res. 346, extending the time for payment of purchase money on homestead entries in the former Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of North and South Dakota.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to extend for a period of one year the time for the payment of any annual installment due, or hereafter to become due, of the purchase price for lands sold under the act of Congress approved May 29, 1908 (35 Stats., p. 460), entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States of North and South Dakota, and for other purposes," and the act of Congress approved February 14, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 675), entitled "An act to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the Standing Rock Indian Reservation, in the States and North and South Dakota, and for other purposes," and any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in the same manner: Provided, That the last payment and all other payments must be made within a period not exceeding one year after the last payment becomes due by the terms of the act under which the entry was made: Provided further, That any and all payments must be made when due unless the entryman applies for an extension and pays interest for one year in advance at 5 per cent per annum upon the amount due as herein provided, and patent shall be withheld until full and final payment of the purchase price is made in accordance with the provisions hereof: And provided further, That failure to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any extended payment at or before the time to which such payment has been extended as herein provided shall forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is now being considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CUTTING OF TIMBER BY CORPORATIONS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1) authorizing the cutting of timber by corporations organized in one State and conducting operations in another.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, the particular bill now called on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent is said in the report of the Department of the Interior to be either inaccurately or inadequately expressed. Therefore I ask those who are proponents of the measure whether the bill is limited to the purpose of cutting the timber for mining purposes or includes other purposes than mining purposes?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is intended to be entirely for mining purposes.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I think the criticism in the letter of the Secretary was directed to a former Senate bill, which confined the cutting of timber to mining purposes, and the purpose of this bill does not confine the cutting of timber to mining purposes.

Mr. GARD. I understand it does not, and that is my inquiry, Why should it not?

Mr. SINNOTT. Because the original law does not confine it to that purpose. The purpose of this bill is to enable foreign corporations—that is, foreign to the State—to cut timber in a particular State. The present law merely permits a citizen of a State to cut timber within the State for manufacturing, mining, domestic, and agricultural purposes.

Mr. GARD. The law to which the gentleman refers and to which the Secretary of the Interior refers is one permitting a man who has a mining claim or an agricultural claim to cut wood on his claim for mining purposes, or for agricultural purposes, or for domestic use.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is a specific law. There is a law which permits a man to cut timber on his mining claim or on his homestead, but the law being amended here is another law and a broader law than that. There are two laws.

Mr. GARD. I am asking the gentleman, first, about the law I first mentioned. There is a general law that a man may cut timber on his mining claim?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes. He has that right to-day, and it would not be necessary to amend that law.

Mr. GARD. He also has the right to cut on his agricultural land, or he has the right to cut timber for domestic purposes, for his own use.

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. GARD. What is this particular law that the gentleman desires to amend?

Mr. SINNOTT. The present law is that a citizen of a State may cut timber upon the public lands of the State under rules and regulations prepared by the Secretary of the Interior. He must apply for a permit when he cuts more than $50 worth of timber. He may cut $50 worth of timber by sending into the local office a statement showing how much timber he desires to cut and the particular Government land on which the timber is to be cut. If he desires to cut more than $50 worth he has to get a permission from the chief of the field service, and that permission is subject to revision or revocation by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. GARD. This privilege being given to corporations, of course, it can be assumed that their desire to cut timber is on rather a large scale. They would not engage in the cutting of timber for a slight amount like $50 worth. Evidently this is some proposition on the part of corporations of considerable size to engage in the cutting of timber.

Mr. SINNOTT. No; I think not. I think it is merely to give a foreign corporation the same right that a domestic corporation has in a particular State. For instance, a corporation organized in the State of Washington could not cut timber in the State of Oregon, although they had need for the timber in the State of Oregon, while a corporation organized in the State of Oregon could cut that timber.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman permit a suggestion?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I suggest that it is very common in the mining development of the West to organize a company in one State and do business in possibly several Western States. A good many companies are organized in New Jersey, in Arizona, and in other places. Under the law as it stands there is a great handicap with respect to cutting timber for doing their work. They have to cut it under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, anyway, and this is simply to put those corporations on an equal footing.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. I call the gentleman's attention to page 2, line 5. The purpose of the bill is succinctly stated in the following language:

Said permits to confer the same rights and benefits upon such corporations as are conferred by the aforesaid acts upon corporations incorporated in the State in which the privilege is to be exercised.

That states the real purpose of the bill.

Mr. GARD. I understand that to be the effect of the bill. I do not know the purpose of the bill, but suppose a corporation organized, say, in the State of Oregon wants to cut timber in Washington, what is to prevent them from going over there and cutting timber the way it is now?

Mr. SINNOTT. And take it into Oregon? The law does not permit him to take timber from one State to the other except in one or two cases.

Mr. GARD. Does not the present law permit a corporation or firm or individual to buy timber in one State, say in Washington, and transport it, say, to Oregon?

Mr. SINNOTT. Oh, yes; but not to go and cut Government timber upon the public domain.

Mr. GARD. But this is of wider scope, I take it, than the bill the gentleman referred to, and the question is whether there is any limitation on the amount except the permit issued by the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. SINNOTT. The rules and regulations of the Secretary of the Interior govern the amount; they have rules and regulations as to the amount that can be obtained in any period of 12 months.

Mr. GARD. Well, there is no restriction other than that?

Mr. SINNOTT. No restriction other than that; but it must be used for this purpose, and in the regulations the Secretary has made restrictions. I have the regulations here.

Mr. GARD. But what I am trying to satisfy in my mind is whether this Government timber, this property which belongs to the United States, is properly safeguarded by this bill, because my own observation, although rather limited, is that the cutting of the timber belonging to the United States has been a thing too liberally granted in times past, for which the people, particularly in the West, and incidentally, by reason of the necessary loss, the people generally throughout these States, have suffered.

Mr. SINNOTT. The gentleman probably has in mind forest reserve timber. This bill does not relate to our forest reserves. It simply relates to the public domain outside of the forest reserves. Before he may secure a permit under this bill, if he desires to cut over $200 worth of timber in any one year, he has to put up a bond, conditioned upon the faithful performance of the regulations of the Secretary, a bond three times the amount of the timber desired, and he has to show that the timber is needed by him for the specific purpose and is not for sale.

Mr. GARD. I understand that no timber is authorized to be cut under any conditions unless a permit from the Secretary of the Interior shall have been first issued.

Mr. SINNOTT. That is over $50 worth. They may cut under $50 worth of timber by notifying the chief of the field service. If they desire between $50 and $200 worth, they must apply to the chief of the field service, and he grants a permit, and that permit is subject to revocation by the Commissioner of the General Land Office; but when he desires timber over $200 worth he has to have the direct permit of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. MONDELL. If the gentleman will yield, all this legislation does, as I understand it, is to provide that corporations organized outside these States in which the timber is to be cut may have the same privileges under the law that corporations organized within the State have. That does not broaden the law, does it?

Mr. SINNOTT. No; it merely gives a foreign corporation the same right a domestic corporation has.

Mr. MONDELL. Now, the gentleman from Ohio was discussing the law, and the law is what it is, and we are not proposing to change it. The question is, Should a foreign corporation have the same right under the law that domestic corporations have?—and I think the gentleman will admit there is no reason why they should not.

Mr. GARD. Except there be the possible reason of extending the privilege of cutting down this timber of the United States to more persons than at present have the right to cut.

Mr. MONDELL. The only difference in practice would be instead of going to the trouble of securing the privilege in the name of an individual or a State corporation, as would be done now in case the privilege was desired, a foreign corporation would have the right and privilege in its own name.

Mr. HUSTED. They would find a way to cut it, anyway.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, the law is restricted. The privilege is not a broad one under the present law. Those who are entitled to rights under the law will find a way to exercise the right. I do not know of the conditions that arise here that present seemingly a necessity for legislation, but there seems to be no reason why a corporation that has been organized in an adjacent State should not have the same right of a corporation organized in the State in which it is desired to cut——

Mr. GARD. Is the gentleman satisfied there is a necessity for this amendment to the law?

Mr. MONDELL. I really know nothing about it, I will say to my friend, except this, that I think the present law is not more liberal than it should be, rather restrictive than otherwise, and I can not see any reason, while the matter has never been brought to my attention, why a foreign corporation should not have the same right as the domestic corporation, because they must qualify under the law in any event and they must show their claim to the right under the law.

Mr. GARD. Will the gentleman from Oregon advise me of the necessity for adding this amendment?

Mr. SINNOTT. Why, I think there is a necessity for it. A great many mining claims must be developed by foreign corporations in various States and without this law they would not be permitted to cut the timber on the public lands outside of their own claims.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SINNOTT. Yes.

Mr. BEE. Is it not a rather dangerous precedent to authorize these corporations in one State to transact business in another State, lapping from one State to another?

Mr. SINNOTT. They have to show that they have a right to transact business within the State where they propose to cut the timber, and show that they have complied with the laws of that State. The last paragraph provides for that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado asks that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act entitled "An act authorizing the citizens of Colorado, Nevada, and the Territories to fell and remove timber on the public domain for mining and domestic purposes," approved June 3, 1878 (ch. 150, p. 88, vol. 20, U. S. Stat. L.), and section 8 of an act entitled "An act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1891, as amended by an act approved March 3, 1891 (ch. 559, p. 1093, vol. 26, U. S. Stat. L.), and the several acts amendatory thereof, be, and the same are hereby, extended so that it shall be lawful for the Secretary of the Interior to grant permits to corporations incorporated under a Federal law of the United States or incorporated under the laws of a State or Territory of the United States, other than the State in which the privilege is requested, said permits to confer the same rights and benefits upon such corporations as are conferred by the aforesaid acts upon corporations incorporated in the State in which the privilege is to be exercised: Provided, That all such corporations shall first have complied with the laws of that State so as to entitle them to do business therein; but nothing herein shall operate to enlarge the rights of any railway company to cut timber on the public domain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ALLOTMENTS ON FORT BELKNAP RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 13225) providing for the allotment of lands within the Fort Belknap Indian Reservation, Mont., and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have some explanation as to the necessity for this legislation.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, the bill relates to an Indian reservation in the northeastern part of Montana on which are located about 1,200 or 1,500 Indians. They are very desirous of allotting the lands and taking them in severalty. That seems to be the wish of the Indian Department. They are a tribe of fairly well civilized Indians and fairly capable, I think, of managing their own affairs. I believe the bill has the approval of the department and of the Committee on Indian Affairs and of the Indians themselves.

UMI

Mr. MONDELL. I have not a copy of the bill before me. Has the gentleman a copy of the bill?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Yes. The bill is quite extensive.

Mr. MONDELL. That is my recollection.

Mr. RHODES. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee, I would like to be recognized for just a moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is pending on the reservation of an objection by the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill go over without prejudice; that the bill be passed over and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over and retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

CLAIMS OF TRIBES OR BANDS OF INDIANS OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12788) authorizing any tribes or bands of Indians of California to submit claims to the Court of Claims.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming objects. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar and go to the foot thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill remain on the calendar and go to the foot thereof. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUGAR HOARDING IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the resolution (H. Res. 521) requesting the Department of Justice to investigate sugar hoarding in the District of Columbia.

The title of the resolution was read.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it must be apparent that nothing could be gained by affirmative action on this resolution at this time—a resolution to authorize the Federal Trade Commission to investigate sugar hoarding in the District of Columbia, or otherwise restraining commerce, or monopolizing or attempting to monopolize sugar. I see no reason for the continuance of the resolution on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and I object.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the resolution be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. GARD. The resolution is stricken from the calendar under my motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio objects, and the resolution is stricken from the calendar.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I want to make an inquiry. Is that a simple House resolution?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is a simple House resolution.

Mr. GARRETT. I question whether it is properly on the calendar in the first place.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is not now on the calendar.

PINE RIDGE INDIAN RESERVATION.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 397) to authorize a lieu selection by the State of South Dakota for 160 acres on Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GARD. In the absence of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. GANDY] I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the bill be passed over and retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over and retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MILK RIVER VALLEY GUN CLUB.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 793) authorizing the issuance of patent to the Milk River Valley Gun Club.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?

Mr. GARD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. GARD. I will reserve my objection if the gentleman desires to make a statement.

Mr. VAILE. I will be glad to answer questions if I can, if they are stated by the gentleman. This bill is to use this land as a game preserve. It can not be used by the Government or by agricultural or mining locators. It is a boggy flat. It is desired to preserve it for the breeding of young waterfowl, where they can be protected if trespassers are kept out.

Mr. GARD. Where is this particular swamp where they breed wild ducks?

Mr. VAILE. It is in northern Montana, in what is known as the Milk River Valley.

Mr. GARD. This seems to provide for the unlimited purchase of lands at $50 per irrigable acre, for the construction of irrigation works.

Mr. VAILE. Oh, no, indeed. The gentleman misunderstands the purport of the bill. It provides for the purchase of three forties, two of which are fractional forties, lots 5 and 6, and the southeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 32. It requires the grantee to pay $50 per irrigable acre for the construction of irrigation work, if that amount is assessed, for such irrigable area as may be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. As a matter of fact, we think there is none, though the bill, as it came from the Senate, provided for the amount of irrigable area being fixed at 30 acres, to be used as a game preserve. If there are 30 acres, let there be that amount. If there is less, let it be the amount fixed by the Secretary.

Mr. GARD. What is the particular advantage of permitting this patent to be granted to this corporation known as the Milk River Valley Gun Club and impede the possible necessities of the United States?

Mr. VAILE. I can not see how any necessity of the United States could possibly be impeded. If the land is not used for the purpose for which it is granted, it reverts to the United States by the express terms of this bill.

Mr. GARD. Does this gun club have any game preserve now?

Mr. VAILE. No. They have a house on the land which they desire to purchase, but they are not maintaining any preserve, and desire to have this one.

Mr. GARD. Do they have any preserve there?

Mr. VAILE. No.

Mr. GARD. Under their ownership or lease?

Mr. VAILE. No; that is what they are seeking now by this bill, but they have none at present.

Mr. GARD. What is the object of maintaining a clubhouse out there if they have no preserve?

Mr. VAILE. For the convenience of hunters during the game season, but they want this preserve so that they can fence and protect this land during the breeding season of the wild fowl.

Mr. GARD. At the present time the privilege of hunting out there is open to everyone?

Mr. VAILE. True.

Mr. GARD. Under proper restrictions?

Mr. VAILE. That is true.

Mr. GARD. But if this patent is granted then this certain territory is to be fenced in for the exclusive use of the members of the Milk River Valley Gun Club?

Mr. VAILE. That is true, but I submit that should not be regarded as an objection. We have to protect game in some way, and we can hardly expect to make a national park out there.

Mr. GARD. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio objects.

Mr. VAILE. I ask that the bill go to the foot of the calendar without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar and be retained thereon. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

YELLOWSTONE NATIONAL PARK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12466) authorizing the granting of certain irrigation easements in the Yellowstone National Park, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

UMI

Mr. BLANTON. I object.
Mr. HUSTED. I object.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made. The bill is stricken from the calendar.

PLATTE RIVER IN MISSOURI.

The next business on the calendar for unanimous consent was the bill (H. R. 10920) declaring Platte River to be a nonnavigable stream.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole?
There was no objection.
The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.
The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Platte River in the State of Missouri be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and jurisdiction over said river is hereby declared to be vested in the State of Missouri.

SEC. 2. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.
Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ESCH] just what the effect is of passing a measure declaring a stream nonnavigable?
Mr. ESCH. By declaring a stream nonnavigable and placing it within the jurisdiction of the State through which it flows, you no longer have to come to Congress to secure the consent of Congress for the construction of a bridge over it.
Mr. GARRETT. Is that the only effect it will have?
Mr. ESCH. Yes. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER], who has been ill for many months, and therefore he has been unable to secure its consideration before. It is a little stream only 75 miles long, rising in southwestern Iowa and flowing into the State of Missouri and emptying into the Missouri River. The bill was thoroughly investigated by the chief engineer's office at Kansas City. An open hearing was had, notice was given to all interested parties on the river, and there was no protest against the passage of the bill.
Mr. GARRETT. I will say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I have no objection to the bill; I was simply interested in the legal phase of it. As I understand it, the navigability of a stream is more a question of fact than it is a question of law. Has there, in fact, been any navigation on this stream?
Mr. ESCH. I think when there was some timber on the upper reaches there was a little navigation, but it can hardly float a canoe or boat now.
Mr. GARRETT. This question arises, and in my own section, in the formation of drainage sections, where it is necessary to secure permission from the War Department to alter the course of a stream. I was somewhat interested in the legal phase of it.
Mr. MAYS. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ESCH. Yes.
Mr. MAYS. I see that this is designated as the Platte River. There is a Platte River in the State of Nebraska that is of considerable importance.
Mr. ESCH. We do not seek to affect the Platte River in Nebraska in this bill.
Mr. MAYS. Would it not be better to designate the State?
Mr. ESCH. This bill says Platte River in the State of Missouri.
Mr. MAYS. It does not say so in the title.
Mr. MACGREGOR. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. ESCH. Yes.
Mr. MACGREGOR. Is it the purpose of this bill to take the Platte River out from under the jurisdiction of the Federal Water Power Commission?
Mr. ESCH. No; it has not that purpose; I do not think it could be developed anyhow.
Mr. MACGREGOR. Would it not take it out from under the jurisdiction of the Federal Water Power Commission?
Mr. ESCH. Where it is wholly intrastate. This is interstate; it rises in Iowa.
The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.
The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.
On motion of Mr. ESCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:
S. 4526. An act to amend section 501 of the transportation act, 1920.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RAMSEY, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that, December 18, they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:
H. R. 7900. An act for the relief of Rudolph L. Desdunes;
H. R. 12887. An act establishing the liability of hotel proprietors and innkeepers in the District of Columbia;
H. R. 1865. An act for the relief of the Baltimore Dry Docks & Ship Building Co., owner of a dry dock at Baltimore, Md.; and
H. R. 13264. An act to provide for the award of a medal of merit to the personnel of the merchant marine of the United States of America.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, a Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:
S. 3259. An act for the public protection of maternity and infancy and providing a method of cooperation between the Government of the United States and the several States; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE AND ESTABLISH NAVAL AVIATION AND SUBMARINE BASES.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 227 and consider the same.
The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 227. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

Senate joint resolution (S. J. Res. 227) extending the time within which the special joint committee appointed to investigate the advisability of establishing certain naval, aviation, and submarine bases in the United States is required to make its report to Congress.

Resolved, etc., That the time limit within which the special joint committee created by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and for other purposes," approved June 4, 1920, is required to submit its report to the Congress of the United States be, and it hereby is, deferred and extended to January 31, 1921.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object——
Mr. BUTLER. Gentlemen on the committee have told me that it is absolutely impossible to make the report by the 1st of January, and ask that the House will join the Senate in extending the time 30 days. I just had a talk with the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT], and he hopes that the joint resolution will be passed.
Mr. GARD. What was the original time of making the report?
Mr. BUTLER. January 1, 1921.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
The Senate joint resolution was read the third time and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2379) to provide for the disposition of certain public lands withdrawn and improved under the provisions of the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., p. 847), as amended by the act of August 24, 1912 (27 Stat. L., p. 497), and which are no longer needed.
The SPEAKER. Is there objection?
Mr. JONES of Texas. Reserving the right to object, does this bill authorize the sale of public lands or lands of some character?
Mr. SINNOTT. The lands which the bill authorizes the sale of are lands that have been heretofore withdrawn for exploratory drilling for water. It covers some 280 acres that have been heretofore withdrawn. This bill was prepared in the department and introduced by the chairman of the Senate committee.
Mr. JONES of Texas. If the bill is passed, the lands can be sold.
Mr. SINNOTT. Yes; these particular lands may be sold at public auction, but they must be sold for at least the appraised value of the land.
Mr. JONES of Texas. Does this provide for a reservation by the Government of all oil and mineral rights?

UMI

Mr. SINNOTT. No; there is no such reservation.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Would the gentleman object to such an amendment?

Mr. SINNOTT. I would not.

Mr. JONES of Texas. Then I shall not object.

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman withhold his objection for a moment?

Mr. GARD. Yes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The only interest I have is that it was introduced at the request of the Secretary of the Interior. There is this land that has been explored for water at a great expense by the Government, and it remains undisposed of. This is an opportunity to permit the Government to reimburse itself for a very large expenditure. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

REFUND OF DUTIES COLLECTED ON FIELD KITCHENS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6171) to authorize the refund of duties collected on field kitchens imported during the year 1915.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the bill?

Mr. GARD. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. CANNON. What is the bill?

Mr. GARD. This is a bill, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, for the refund of duties paid on field kitchens, and the gentleman from Illinois had some colloquy with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] about this same bill when it was up before.

Mr. CANNON. The duties were collected under the law and presumably are in the Treasury. How much do the duties amount to?

Mr. GARD. I do not know the amount. One objection to the bill would be that the amount is so inconsequential that it would be difficult to get it back to the donors.

Mr. CANNON. These field kitchens were largely paid for by subscriptions.

Mr. GARD. I understand so. I understand that the amount collected was $182.25.

Mr. CANNON. They were paid for by subscriptions by the public.

Mr. GARD. I am not familiar with the bill. It was introduced by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BRITTEN] at the last session. When the bill was up for consideration, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] objected to its consideration at that time.

Mr. CANNON. We are passing it now hop, skip, and jump, by unanimous consent, and, without speaking disrespectfully of another body, pretty nearly as the other body passes bills—without much consideration. I think it would better come up in the regular way or when we have a full House.

The SPEAKER. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to object?

Mr. CANNON. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill may go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, this is the second time that it has been stricken from the calendar, is it not?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It was up before. Whether it was stricken from the calendar then or not I do not know.

Mr. GARRETT. If it was not, it should have been under the rule.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It should have been unless by unanimous consent it was retained on the calendar.

Mr. GARRETT. Of course.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think that is the case, although I would not say. The bill was introduced by my colleague, and he does not happen to be on the floor at this time.

Mr. CANNON. Nobody call tell the amount and nobody can tell how much it would cost to find out who the donors were. It would require much investigation. With equal propriety we might return all that was contributed to the Red Cross to the people who contributed it, and a hundred other charities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that the bill go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. CANNON. Is my friend in earnest? Does he want it to go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My colleague who introdueed the bill is not on the floor at the present time. He is unavoidably detained from the Chamber, and I think it is a proper courtesy to him to retain it on the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

WATER SUPPLY OF SUNNYSIDE, UTAH.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 46) for the protection of the water supply of the town of Sunnyside, Utah.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the public lands within the several townships and subdivisions thereof hereinafter enumerated, situated in the county of Carbon and State of Utah, are hereby reserved from all forms of location, entry, or appropriation, whether under the mineral or non-mineral land laws of the United States, and set aside as a municipal water-supply reserve for the use and benefit of the people of the town of Sunnyside, a municipal corporation of the State of Utah, as follows, to wit: The south half of south half of section 34, in township 13 south, range 14 east, Salt Lake base and meridian; and also the following lands which, when surveyed, will be described as follows, to wit: All of section 11; west half of section 12; all of section 13; and all of section 14, in township 14 south, range 14 east, of Salt Lake base and meridian.

SEC. 2. That the lands heretofore described and reserved for municipal water-supply purposes shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior, in cooperation with and at the exclusive expense of the town of Sunnyside, Utah, for the purpose of storing, conserving, and protecting from pollution the said water supply, and preserving, improving, and increasing the timber growth on said lands, to more fully accomplish such purposes; and to that end said municipality shall have the right, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, to the use of any and all parts of the lands reserved for the storage and conveying of water and construction and maintenance thereon of all improvements for such purposes.

SEC. 3. That the said Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to prescribe and enforce such regulations as he may find necessary to carry out the purpose of this act, including the right to forbid persons other than those authorized by him and the municipal authorities of said municipal corporation from entering or otherwise trespassing upon these lands, and any violation of this act or of regulations issued thereunder shall be punishable as is provided for in section 50 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909" (35 Stat. L., 1098), as amended by the act of Congress approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat. L., 857).

SEC. 4. That this act shall be subject to all legal rights heretofore acquired under any law of the United States, and the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 19, after the word "purposes," insert:

"Provided, That deposits of coal or other minerals in the lands reserved by this act may be leased or otherwise disposed of by the Secretary of the Interior under laws applicable to such deposits, if and when he shall find that same may be mined and removed without injury to the municipal water supply of Sunnyside, Utah."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES, FORT ASSINNIBOINE MILITARY RESERVATION, MONT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2964) providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation, in Montana.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask some one interested in the bill a question.

Mr. EVANS of Montana. I am interested in it.

Mr. BEGG. Is this the first request for postponement of time?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Yes.

Mr. BEGG. What is the occasion for the request?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. The reservation is in the northern part of Montana in rather a barren country. They have had some three or four years of drought up there. It was a military reservation and was abandoned and the lands were sold to individuals and homesteaders at the rate of $2.50 per acre, the payments to be made annually. They have had no crop up there in three or four years and they are practically destitute and can not make their payments. If they do not make their payments they simply forfeit the improvements they have put on there during the last two or three years.

Mr. BEGG. In the last session did we not pass a similar act to this?

Mr. EVANS of Montana. Not for these people, but for the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, which, though not contiguous, is close by. The gentleman will find that the Secretary, in his letter, says that the same conditions prevail here as did with respect to the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, and he asks that the time be extended on these lands, as on the Fort Peck Indian Reservation lands.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted etc., That any person who has made homestead entry under the provisions of the act of Congress approved February 11, 1915 (38 Stat. L., p. 807), entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assiniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement," may obtain an extension of time for one year from the anniversary of the date of entry last preceding the passage of this act within which to pay all of the installment then due or any part of any preceding installment, where payment has not yet been made and where an extension of time therefor is not authorized by any act of Congress by paying interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the sums to be extended from the maturity of the unpaid installments to the expiration of the period of extension, the interest to be paid to the receiver of the land office for the district in which the lands are situated, within such time as may be prescribed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That any installment which becomes due within one year from the passage of this act and for which an extension of time for payment is not otherwise authorized, may also be extended for a period of one year by paying interest thereon in advance at the said rate: Provided further, That any payment so extended may thereafter be extended for a further period of one year in like manner: And provided further, That if commutation proof is submitted, all the unpaid payments must be made at that time.

SEC. 2. That the failure of any entryman to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any payment extended either under the provisions hereof or other act of Congress, at or before the time to which such payment has been extended, shall forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, line 16, after the word "thereafter," insert "in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. EVANS of Montana, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

FEDERAL RESERVE ACT.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14021) to amend the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BEGG. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

ACQUIREMENT OF RURAL HOMES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3477) to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this bill will probably be brought up under a rule a little later, and I do not think it ought to be considered at this time. I object.

MILITARY TELEGRAPH CORPS, CIVIL WAR.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5815) granting relief to persons who served in the Military Telegraph Corps of the Army during the Civil War.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is there anyone here who can give us information about the number of people who will be affected by this bill, in respect to their military status? In the absence of the gentleman who made the report and the Member who introduced the bill, I ask that the bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it ought to go to the foot of the calenar.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the bill will go to the foot of the calendar.

There was no objection.

MONTEZUMA NATIONAL FOREST.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8692) authorizing the exchange of lands within the Montezuma National Forest in Colorado.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman advise the membership of the House of the purpose and extent of this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I shall be very glad to try to do so.

Mr. Speaker, the Montezuma National Forest, in the State of Colorado, was formed about 20 years ago, and takes quite an amount of privately owned land, scattered through it in isolated tracts. Between these privately owned tracts there is intervening Government land. Both the Forest Service officials and the private owners have been trying for several years to obtain the passage of a bill authorizing the consolidation of these tracts. This bill was prepared with the approval of the Forest Service and the consent of the local owners for the purpose of allowing them to make some exchanges and let the Government consolidate its land and the private owners consolidate their land, with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture. I may say there is not very much valuable timber in that country, and I am confident there is little or none involved in these exchanges. It is a matter of mutual convenience for the Forest Service people and the local owners. The Agricultural Department, including the Forest Service, has made several very elaborate reports upon this bill and the officials came before the committee and made an elaborate statement, which is published in my report, showing the advisability of the passage of this measure. I desire to say to the gentleman and the members of the committee that the Public Lands Committee has tried a number of times during the last five or six years to pass a general forest reserve exchange bill, allowing, generally speaking, the Forest Service and the owners, with the approval of the owners and the approval of the Agricultural Department, to exchange private lands generally for Government lands and Government lands for private lands, and for the purpose of consolidating, economizing, and making more efficient the administration of the Forest Service in guarding against fires, predatory wild animals, regulating grazing, and so forth. But we never yet have been able to pass a general bill of that kind. There is a bill of that kind on the calendar now that ought to be passed.

There is no reason under heaven why that kind of a bill, properly safeguarded, should not be passed. But at present the only way we can accomplish anything is to take up these forest reserves one at a time and try to pass a bill for each individual forest service. There are about 20 of those bills pending before the Senate and House now like this one, approved by the Forest Service, and this is merely one of them. I have been trying to pass this bill for several years. The Montezuma National Forest is in the southwestern part of Colorado in my congressional district. There has never been any expressed opposition to this bill, and there can be no objection I know of by anybody. The language meets with the approval of the Public Lands Committee and the Secretary of Agriculture and the Forest Service. And I feel, in view of the fact we have passed something like a dozen similar bills and there are something like a dozen more to be strung along at various times, that there can not be any valid objection to the passage of this one at this time.

Mr. GARD. Does it require joint action and approval of the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Wherever there are public lands, yes; but if it is private land within the forest reserve, then the Interior Department has nothing to do with it and we allow the Secretary of Agriculture to determine that matter, but if there is any public land to be exchanged the Secretary of the Interior has to be consulted. That is the general practice, I believe.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield under his reservation and allow me to ask a question?

Mr. GARD. Surely.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Are there any natural resources in this reservation outside of the timber?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. Nothing that would be affected by this exchange.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Any water power?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If there is water power, it would come under the water-power law, and coal and gas and minerals are not involved, as they come under special laws.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. If there is any water power, I suggest it would be rather unwise to give blanket authority to exchange such lands merely in the discretion of some gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. All the water power in the United States comes under the present water-power law, which we passed last summer. That is already under the control of the Government.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. But this will give authority to exchange some lands for other lands without the exception of natural resources.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Those natural resources do not go with the surface of the land any more. They are patented separately, or are subject to lease under the act of February 25, 1920.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am asking that.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. All minerals, coal, oil, gas, and so forth, are reserved.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Water power?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; the waters of navigable streams belong to the Government, and the water-power sites on public lands also belong to the Government, and no one could get control of them by exchanges of land such as would be authorized by this bill.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. All that is protected?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; it is all reserved and fully protected.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. And would not apply to this bill?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; it would not apply to this at all. I am perfectly confident there is no possibility of fraud or imposition upon the Government under the terms of this bill. It has been very carefully drawn and exhaustively examined by Government officials and attorney.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I understood the gentleman to say that this was not very well timbered?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; there is not much timber of any appreciable value upon the lands to be exchanged. We have no large tracts of valuable timber like California and Washington and Oregon.

Mr. CANNON. Well, we have not been very happy heretofore where we have authorized the exchange of land; great scandal when the lands exchanged were of less value and valuable timber tracts given, and so forth.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Practically speaking, there is little valuable, merchantable timber in the vicinity of these desired exchanges; but if the Government gave up any timber it would be for a full, fair, and reasonable consideration. There is no danger any more of the Government agents getting the worst of it in these exchanges.

Mr. CANNON. Are these lands which they exchange outside of that country?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. This bill only applies to the Montezuma National Forest, in southwestern Colorado.

Mr. CANNON. How extensive is that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There are 14,748,943 acres in the 19 national forest reserves in Colorado. In the Montezuma National Forest there are 812,100 acres. Nine of our Colorado national forests are larger and nine are smaller than the Montezuma.

My printed report upon this bill is very full and contains elaborate reports from the Secretary of Agriculture and covers 13 pages of fine print. At pages 5 and 6 I say:

> Your committee has about 20 local bills similar to this one now pending before it and also some general bills. The Senate has also about 20 of these bills and has passed several times a general bill authorizing exchange of lands generally within all of the national forests throughout the West, and your committee believes that a general law, properly safeguarded, should be enacted to obviate the necessity of passing a large number of these local bills. These bills now pending pertain to 26 different national forests.
> Some of the bills provide for the exchange of both land and timber for land, which the Forest Service in some localities is quite anxious to do, and some of the bills limit the number of acres that can be exchanged in any one national forest in any one year.
> There are 155,000,000 acres of Government-owned public land and 20,000,000 acres of private-owned lands scattered throughout the 157 national forests, and those private lands are mostly isolated from neighbors, and their occupancy is unsatisfactory to both the present owners and to the Forest Service, and if these isolated and scattered tracts could be exchanged and consolidated it would be of great convenience to both the Government and the owners, provided, of course, such exchanges can be properly safeguarded to protect the Government both as to timber and character of lands exchanged. This bill is recommended by a large number of citizens who have sent in petitions for this purpose, and it is also recommended by the State and Forest Service officials for the benefit of the Montezuma National Forest, with the exception of section 23, township 37, referred to, which is just outside the national forest and which the Forest Service officials say is necessary for the use of the Forest Service as a gateway into this Montezuma National Forest; the Forest Service is quite anxious to obtain title to these lands in that section for the proper handling of range stock in that national forest; therefore your committee believes that the bill should be passed. Inasmuch as these exchanges are made subject to the discretion and approval of both the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of Agriculture, it would seem as though there can be no likelihood of any injury inuring to the Government or of any kind of fraud or injustice being perpetrated and that the exchanges ought to be authorized in the interest of the economical administration of the Montezuma National Forest, as well as for the welfare of the citizens residing within that national forest.

Mr. CANNON. What is the size of the Montezuma National Forest?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Eight hundred and twelve thousand one hundred acres. But there is only a very small part of it to which this exchange bill would apply.

Mr. CANNON. They sell the little tracts for what they are worth, do they?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; that is not the idea. The private owners have small tracts or ranches scattered around, and they want to consolidate them—to trade lands with the Government—and get their holding together.

Mr. CANNON. Then the Government gains or loses, as the case may be?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Government never loses anything in these exchanges. Nowadays they have some very wise forest-reserve officials who look after the Government's welfare very thoroughly. There has been no scandal or public complaint for many years about anything of that kind. I feel that, inasmuch as it is an exchange of forest-reserve land that is probably better adapted for agricultural purposes for timberland that the forest-reserve officials want to be included in the forest reserve, it is a measure that should be passed. It consolidates a lot of checkerboard ownerships.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This legislation was initiated by the Secretary of the Interior. It does not interest the Members themselves. It is initiated by those who are charged with the administration of these lands.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is initiated by the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. CANNON. Well, for the present——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. There are a number of other bills similar to this, I may say to the ex-Speaker, that other Members are interested in, and which they desire to see passed.

Mr. CANNON. Well, if you made a general bill, it would be worth looking after.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We can not at this session, I fear, pass a general exchange bill. It would involve too much time and debate.

Mr. CANNON. In that case you could kill all the birds with one stone. But being a little here and a little there, the bills pass as a courtesy to the Members who represent those sections.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Are not the Members representing those sections entitled to a little courtesy sometimes?

Mr. CANNON. Yes; but I think it would pay to consider it wholesale rather than by piecemeal by unanimous consent.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Of course, I will have to defer to the ex-Speaker's judgment and good will upon this unanimous-consent day.

Mr. CANNON. I am just telling you how it seems to me. There is more legislation by unanimous consent, considering the number of bills that are passed, than is useful to the Government.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I understand that the gentleman asks that it go to the foot of the calendar?

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection to its going to the foot of the calendar if the gentleman desires it to go there.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, in view of the gentleman's objection, I will have to request that the bill be passed over for the present and be put at the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Colorado requests that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman from Colorado a question: By the exchange of such lands within these national forests, could a forest which has been set aside for certain purposes be in any way changed?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, no. This bill is looked upon by the local supervisor and the forest ranger as advantageous to the Government of the United States to make it possible to have some of these little isolated, checkerboard ownerships consolidated and the Government lands also consolidated.

Mr. BLANTON. The gentleman understands that the attempt is now being made to utilize these national forest reserves for purposes other than those for which they were designed, and that there is a protest coming up from all over the country. There is no chance of this forest reserve being used for other purposes than those for which it was designed?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No. The people out there look upon this just as a matter of mutual benefit and for the general welfare; that is all.

UMI

The SPEAKER. Objection has been made. The bill will go to the foot of the calendar. The Clerk will report the next bill.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF ALASKA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 4205) to amend section 4, chapter 1 of Title I of an act entitled "An act making further provision for a civil government for Alaska, and for other purposes," approved June 6, 1900, as heretofore amended by section 2 of an act entitled "An act to amend section 86 of an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii, to provide for additional judges, and for other judicial purposes," approved March 3, 1909, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over.

Mr. GARD. What is the reason for that?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. We have discovered that there is an error in the description of the district to be formed under this bill. I am waiting for information to be filed by the Attorney General and one of the judges up there in order to have the bill properly amended.

Mr. GARD. The only purpose of the bill is to fix the boundaries of some district court in Alaska?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes; that is correct.

Mr. GARD. And the gentleman is endeavoring to have the boundaries correctly described?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over. Is there objection to the gentleman's request?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

DESERT LANDS IN NEVADA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2977) to amend section 8 of an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, as amended by an act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1891.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, what is the purpose of this bill?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, if you please, let the bill be read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas). The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, as amended by an act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment, and the amendments thereto, shall apply to and be in force in the State of Colorado, as well as the States named in the original act; and, excepting in the State of Nevada, no person shall be entitled to make entry of desert lands unless he be a resident citizen of the State or Territory in which the land sought to be entered is located."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] reported the bill, and I see he has forgotten now what it was. I hope he will take time to find out what it is.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I was really paying more attention to my own bill than to this.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We passed a bill with reference to desert-land entries applying to certain things. It did not apply, I believe, to the State of Colorado. Now it is proposed, is it, to make this apply to the State of Colorado?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. No; it is not proposed to make it apply to the State of Colorado.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is what it says. Maybe it is not. The gentleman has evidently forgotten it.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I reported the bill a long time ago. It is not my bill. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. The only change that this makes in the law is to omit the requirement that the residents of the State of Nevada shall be residents in the State. The original act requires that no person shall be entitled to make an entry of desert land unless he is a resident of the State or Territory in which the land sought to be entered is located. This dispenses with that feature as far as Nevada is concerned.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Really, what excited my curiosity was this: The existing law provides that no person shall be entitled to make entry of desert land "except" he be a resident citizen.

Now, the word "except" may not have been the better word to use. I do not know. But the distinguished Committee on the Public Lands, or the distinguished Senate, whoever it was, struck out "except" and inserted "unless." As these gentlemen are students of languages, I desire to know the distinction between "except he be a resident citizen" and "unless he be a resident citizen." There must be some reason for the change of this language. Just how far-reaching that may be in its effect I do not know, and therefore I make the inquiry.

Mr. SINNOTT. I would assume that it was the purpose of another body that we are not permitted to mention here——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, yes; you can mention them.

Mr. SINNOTT. Having used the word "except" in the third line previous, they used "unless" here for euphony.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. "Euphony" is a good word, and I have nothing further to say.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. My copy of the bill says it is on the House Calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is an error.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. It is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There may be a star print of the bill. I did not get it until this morning.

Mr. MacGREGOR. There is a star print.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The bill is on the Union Calendar. I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The Speaker ruled in the last session that a Union Calendar bill on the Unanimous Consent Calendar, if not objected to, automatically receives consideration of the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair accepts that decision. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 8 of an act to provide for the sale of desert lands in certain States and Territories, approved March 3, 1877, as amended by an act to repeal timber-culture laws, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1891, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 8. That the provisions of the act to which this is an amendment, and the amendments thereto, shall apply to and be in force in the State of Colorado, as well as the States named in the original act; and, excepting in the State of Nevada, no person shall be entitled to make entry of desert lands unless he be a resident citizen of the State or Territory in which the land sought to be entered is located."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARID LANDS IN THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8864) to encourage the reclamation of certain arid lands in the State of California, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I would like to have the bill read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I reserve the right to object.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized in his discretion to grant to any citizen of the United States, or to any association of such citizens, a permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to drill or otherwise explore for water beneath the surface of not exceeding 2,560 acres of arid, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral, nontimbered public lands of the United States, in the State of California, lying east of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, not susceptible of successful irrigation at a reasonable cost from any known available source of surface water supply: Provided, however, That not more than one such permit shall be issued to the same citizen or the same association of citizens within an area of 40 miles square: And provided further, That said land shall not be fenced or otherwise exclusively used by the permittee except as herein provided: And provided further, That said land shall theretofore have been designated by the Secretary of the Interior as subject to disposal under the provisions of this act.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, on application or otherwise, to designate the lands subject to disposal under the provisions of this act: Provided, however, That where any person or association qualified to receive a permit under the provisions of this act shall make application for such permit upon land which has not been designated as subject to disposal under the provisions of this act (provided said application is accompanied and supported by properly corroborated affidavit of the applicant, in duplicate, showing prima facie that the land applied for is of the character contemplated by this act), such application, together with the regular fees and commissions, shall be received by the register and receiver of the land district in which said land is located and suspended until it shall have been determined by the Secretary of the Interior whether said land is actually of that character. That during such suspension the land described in the application shall not be disposed of; and if the land shall be designated under this act, then such application shall be allowed; otherwise it shall be rejected, subject to appeal.

SEC. 3. That any qualified applicant for a permit under section 1 of this act shall file with the register or receiver of the land district in which said land is located the application for such permit and shall make and subscribe before the proper officer and file with said register or receiver an affidavit that such application is honestly and in good faith made for the purpose of reclamation and cultivation and not for the benefit of any other person or corporation, and that the applicant is not acting as agent for any person, corporation, or syndicate in making such application, nor in collusion with any person, corporation, or syndicate to give them the benefit of the land applied for or any part thereof, and that the applicant will faithfully and honestly endeavor to comply with all of the requirements of this act, and shall pay to said register and receiver a filing fee of 1 cent per acre for each acre of land embraced in said application, and such applicant shall then be entitled to receive such permit after the lands embraced therein are designated as provided in section 2 of this act.

SEC. 4. That such a permit shall be upon condition that the permittee shall begin operations for the development of underground waters within six months from the date of the permit and continue such operations with reasonable diligence until water has been discovered in the quantity hereinafter described, or until the date of the expiration of the permit. Upon the presentation at any time of proof satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior that any permittee is not conducting such operations in good faith and with reasonable diligence, or has violated any of the terms of the permit, the Secretary shall forthwith cancel such permit, and such permittee shall not again be granted a permit under this act.

SEC. 5. That on establishing at any time within two years from the date of the permit to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that underground waters in sufficient quantity to produce at a profit agricultural crops other than native grasses upon not less than 20 acres of land has been discovered and developed and rendered available for such use within the limits of the land embraced in any permit the said permittee shall be entitled to a patent for one-fourth of the land embraced in the permit, such area to be selected by the permittee in compact form according to the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys if the land be surveyed, or to be surveyed at his expense under rules and regulations established by the Secretary of the Interior if located on unsurveyed land.

SEC. 6. That the remaining area within the limits of the land embraced in any such permit shall thereafter be subject to entry and disposal only under "An act to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain," approved May 20, 1862, and amendments thereto, not exceeding 160 acres to any one person.

SEC. 7. That the receipts obtained from the sale of lands under the provisions of section 6 hereof shall be paid into, reserved, and appropriated as a part of the reclamation fund created by the act of Congress approved June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act.

SEC. 8. That all entries made and patents issued under the provisions of this act shall be subject to and contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal and other valuable minerals in the lands so entered and patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same. The coal and other valuable mineral deposits in such lands shall be subject to disposal by the United States in accordance with the provisions of the coal and mineral land laws in force at the time of such disposal. Any person qualified to locate and enter the coal or other mineral deposits, or having the right to mine and remove the same under the laws of the United States, shall have the right at all times to enter upon the lands entered or patented, as provided by this act, for the purpose of prospecting for coal or other mineral therein, provided he shall not injure, damage, or destroy the permanent improvements of the entryman or patentee, and shall be liable to and shall compensate the entryman or patentee for all damages to the crops on such lands by reason of such prospecting. Any person who has acquired from the United States the coal or other mineral deposits in any such land, or the right to mine or remove the same, may reenter and occupy so much of the surface thereof as may be required for all purposes reasonably incident to the mining or removal of the coal or other minerals, first, upon securing the written consent or waiver of the homestead entryman or patentee; second, upon payment of the damages to crops or other tangible improvements to the owner thereof, where agreement may be had as to the amount thereof; or, third, in lieu of either of the foregoing provisions, upon the execution of a good and sufficient bond or undertaking to the United States for the use and benefit of the entryman or owner of the land, to secure the payment of such damages to the crops or tangible improvements of the entryman or owner, as may be determined and fixed in an action brought upon the bond or undertaking in a court of competent jurisdiction against the principal and sureties thereon, such bond or undertaking to be in form and in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be filed with and approved by the register and receiver of the local land office of the district wherein the land is situate, subject to appeal to the Commissioner of the General Land Office: Provided, That all patents issued for the coal or other mineral deposits herein reserved shall contain appropriate notations declaring them to be subject to the provisions of this act with reference to the disposition, occupancy, and use of the surface of the land.

SEC. 9. That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to prescribe the necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act.

With the following committee amendments:

1. On page 1, in line 3, after the word "authorized," insert "in his discretion."

2. On page 1, in line 11, after the word "Mountains," insert "and in the State of Idaho."

3. On page 2, in line 3, after the word "however," strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 4 and 5, and the word "square," in line 6, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "That no permit shall be issued to the same citizen or the same association of citizens for lands the nearest legal subdivision of which is within 40 miles of any tract covered by an existing permit to such citizen or association of citizens."

4. On page 2, in line 17, after the word "otherwise," insert the words "in his discretion."

5. On page 3, in line 10, after the word "shall," insert the words "in the discretion of the Secretary."

6. On page 4, in line 3, after the word "then," insert the words "in the discretion of the Secretary."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, this is an old matter. In the Sixty-fourth Congress the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] introduced a bill to make this same thing apply to the whole State of California, and the Department of the Interior reported against it and asked that it be limited to a part of the State of California.

In the Sixty-fifth Congress the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] reintroduced the bill, applicable to the whole State of California, and the Department of the Interior again reported against it as applying to the whole State of California, stating that it would make no objection if the bill was limited to that part of California east of the Sierra Nevada Mountains.

Then the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] in this Congress introduced a bill in accordance with the recommendations of the General Land Office. Thereupon the Committee on the Public Lands, without any investigation of anything, or any report from anybody, proposed to include the whole State of Idaho, although that State does not come at all within the scope of the original decision as to the lands to which this sort of thing might be applied.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is true that the bill was amended in the committee to include the State of Idaho, but, of course, the Secretary of the Interior would not undertake to grant a permit to sink wells under a law of this character except in the arid portion of the State, which is the extreme southern end. Everyone who knows anything about Idaho and its climatic conditions knows that the southern section is arid almost to the extent that Nevada is arid, and to the same extent as that portion of California lying east of the Sierra Nevada.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That may all be. The original act was passed to try an experiment in the State of Nevada, and it was claimed then that Nevada was wholly nonirrigable. Whether that act has done any good or whether it has been made use of, I do not know.

He used the same language in the original bill introduced by the gentleman from California, as to California, which limited the right of exploration in nonirrigable lands, and the Department of the Interior, which has the execution of this law, objected to the blanket provision. The gentleman from California then limited his new bill to a certain portion of California. If the objection of the Interior Department was valid, and I do not undertake to say whether it was or not—but it prevented the Committee on Public Lands in two Congresses from reporting the bill—if the objection was valid as to that it is certainly valid as to Idaho, concerning which we have no official information, and it certainly is not arid all over the State.

Mr. RAKER. If the gentleman will yield, the provision of the bill requires the land to be arid, unreserved, unappropriated, nonmineral, and nontimbered.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand that; that was the provision of the bill that the Department of the Interior objected to; it is precisely the same thing.

Mr. RAKER. I want to say, with all due respect to the Department of the Interior, that they are not quite as familiar with the State of California as I am. There are many tracts of land on the eastern slope of the Sierra Nevada——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from California adopted the suggestion of the Interior Department.

Mr. RAKER. I had to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman thought he could not get his bill passed without it. If that is the case as to California, it is equally the case with Idaho.

Mr. RAKER. I am speaking particularly as to California. There are large tracts of land on the east side of the Sierra Nevada Mountains where this bill will work to the advantage——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Where the gentleman hopes it may work to the advantage. It never has worked anywhere else to advantage.

Mr. RAKER. It has worked to advantage in Nevada.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. We passed the law as to Nevada a long time ago. Have they ever discovered water or dug a well there?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would like to know where it was.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I wish to ask the gentleman from Illinois what objection there can be to a private individual expending his own money to discover artesian water in sufficient quantity to reclaim 20 acres, and if he succeeds, securing title to 640 acres of the land surrounding the well.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. There may be many objections. That was all well considered when the law was passed. I am willing to go into that again, but the gentleman knows that individuals or corporations ought not to have the exclusive right to water anywhere.

Mr. RAKER. These are places where they may have to go 1,000 or 5,000 feet before reaching water.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. They may have to, and they may not have to go 5 feet.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. May I make a statement? I live in the extreme southern end of Idaho, which is the arid section. There is a company being organized in my home town to raise $35,000 to dig a well south about 10 miles from Twin Falls, near the mountains, with the hope that they may discover artesian water. The money is being raised among the citizens of the town in order to determine whether there is any artesian water in that section.

Now, under the provisions of this law it authorizes private citizens or a corporation to dig a well, which, according to the experience in that section of those who have been sinking wells, must be sunk at least 1,000 feet, and costing five, six, or even seven thousand dollars to determine whether or not water can be found. If it is found, it seems to me that the individual or company that has expended that money should get title to 640 acres of land. That is the whole provision in this bill. I do not see that any objection should be made to it. I see no more objection to permitting private citizens to expend their own money to find water on the public lands any more than for them to explore in search of minerals.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield? I wonder whether the gentleman from Illinois has given attention to section 8. If this is an act only to permit the search for water in arid lands, why all these provisions in section 8 with reference to the requirements of coal, minerals, and so forth?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. There is a reservation to the Government of minerals that may be discovered.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. There is more than that; there is a section a page long reciting the method by which coal and mineral deposits may be reserved and rights obtained. It is not an act for regulating such rights.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Has the gentleman noticed the reservation on page 7?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Yes; all patents issued are subject to the provisions of this act. Why go ahead in this act and describe the provisions under which patents may be issued.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. That is in accord with the present law.

Mr. RAKER. The mineral rights are reserved to the Federal Government.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. I am not familiar with the other acts in force. If there are other acts, why not refer to them without reciting the conditions under which coal and mineral rights may be obtained?

Mr. RAKER. This is a better course of legislation; it reserves the right of all minerals to the Government, and no man discovering water can get the mineral rights.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understood the gentleman from Idaho to say that a man could only secure 160 acres.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Two thousand five hundred and sixty acres are set aside for exploration, and then he gets a patent to 640 acres if water is found in sufficient quantity to reclaim 20 acres.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr CAMPBELL of Kansas). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Unless the bill can be modified so that it will apply after we get the information to the actual arid land in Idaho, I shall object, and I shall object to the present consideration, anyway. If the gentleman gets the information, I have no objection hereafter to that part of the State being included in a bill of this kind.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill take its place at the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Reserving the right to object, I notice that section 7 of the bill provides that all of the proceeds from the sale shall go into the reclamation fund. I do not know how much money will be realized by these sales, but it seems to me that this provision is in line with the practice of certain bills introduced from committees which prevents money finding its way into the Treasury of the United States as other money of the people finds its way there. It seems to me that when property of the United States is sold the money ought to go into the Treasury, subject to appropriation by Congress. Until we learn more about this matter I shall object to anything being done under this bill. I object to the request of the gentleman from Idaho, that it retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield before he makes the objection?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the present law is that the proceeds of the sale of all public lands shall go into the reclamation fund as provided for in this act, so that there is no distinction.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Is there a law to the effect that the proceeds of the sale of all public lands shall go into the reclamation fund?

Mr. RAKER. No; but according to the provisions of this section.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All of it goes into the reclamation fund that is not given directly to the States.

Mr. RAKER. That is what I say, the same as provided for by section 7.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill will be stricken from the calendar.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks upon the bill (H. R. 9389) passed to-day.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill just objected to may remain on the calendar and go to the foot thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent that the bill to which objection has just been made may go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I do not object to that proceeding now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

NATIONAL EMPLOYMENT BUREAU.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 544) to provide for the establishment of a national employment bureau in the Department of Labor.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object to the consideration of the bill.

TRANSPORTATION OF EXPLOSIVES, ETC.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12161) to amend an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States," approved March 4, 1909 (35 Stat. L., p. 1134).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask the gentleman who has reported the bill to advise us just what these amendments propose to do?

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, this bill relates exclusively to amendments to the existing law with reference to the transportation of explosives. This bill is, in fact, suggested by the Interstate Commerce Commission and approved by the carriers and shippers. The amendments are very slight in character, made with the idea of clarifying existing law, also providing for conditions which have arisen during the war. The bill as originally passed in 1909 had to do with explosives, but since the war there have been made a great many dangerous gases and other chemicals which, while they come within the spirit of the law, may perhaps not come within its letter. There are also amendments designed to clarify certain doubts, as, for example, whether a vehicle means a railroad car or not. There are also certain verbal changes to distinguish between f-u-s-e-s, f-u-z-e-s, and f-u-s-e-e-s. The value of this legislation may, perhaps, be understood by one or two simple but striking instances. During the year 1918, Mr. Clark, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, testified there were on the average on the tracks of the United States 50,000 cars loaded with war explosives, and in addition there were 5,000 cars transporting commercial explosives. These regulations were so effective that during that whole year not a single life was lost through these cars, and only about $30,000 worth of damage done to property. During that same year, however, there were a number of accidents, to a total of 739, due to acids, corrosive liquids, gasoline, alcohol, and charcoal, while the property damage ran into hundreds of thousands of dollars. I mention that only to show the importance of this legislation.

The only changes in the law are those that I have indicated and also one provision shown on page 1 of the bill, which gives the Interstate Commerce Commission the right to utilize the services of the bureau for the safe transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles, and to avail itself of the advice and assistance of any department, commission, or board of the Government; but provision is made that no official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such services, except as now provided by law. There is no new expenditure involved.

Mr. GARD. To what bureau does that refer on page 4?

Mr. MERRITT. That is a bureau which, according to Mr. Clark's testimony, was gotten up by the railway association.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. It is the bureau of explosives of the American Railroad Association, of which Col. Dunn is chairman, and he cooperates with the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to the enforcement of the existing law.

Mr. MERRITT. There has been very close cooperation between the railways and this commission.

Mr. GARD. The new part of this law is in section 233, and that is a section of regulations rather than a section of prohibitions and penalties. It provides for the formulation of regulations for safe transportation by the Interstate Commerce Commission of certain explosives, including inflammable liquids, solids, and gases and poisonous substances.

Mr. MERRITT. That is all. It amplifies the definition of what may be regulated by the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, what I desire information about is particularly this section 233, whether it is thought that the mere passing of the law permitting regulations by the Interstate Commerce Commission is sufficient to carry into effect the very laudable object of the bill.

I should think the object of the bill is for the protection of life and property against explosives carried in interstate commerce, is it not?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes; it is.

Mr. GARD. And there are certain provisions, it seems to me, which are very good. There are some absolute prohibitions in respect to their being transported, and then there is a provision about marking on the outside, and so forth.

Mr. MERRITT. There are prohibitions against carrying them on certain vehicles which are also carrying passengers.

Mr. DEWALT. Will the gentleman permit?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. If the gentleman from Ohio had time and would take an opportunity to refer to the act of 1909, which has specific reference to section 233, he will find that that section of that act provided only as to transportation by land, whereas this act as now proposed covers transportation both by land and by water. The present act under consideration is an application of the act of 1909, but, so far as penalty is concerned and prohibition is concerned, it is not very much different, except in so far as the new act extends the provision of the old act to a great many other articles which were not named in the act of 1909. Now, that is really the scope of the present legislation, as I understand it, and, if I am incorrect, the gentleman from Connecticut no doubt will correct me.

Mr. MERRITT. That is correct, sir.

Mr. GARD. In this amendment here providing for the execution of the previous act in utilizing the services of the bureau the information given by the chairman of the committee is that it is a bureau maintained——

Mr. MERRITT. By the American Railway Association.

Mr. GARD. Well, is there any theory of compensation between the utilization of a privately conducted bureau and the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. MERRITT. No, sir. I may say for the information of the gentleman and the House that these regulations and this United States law has been copied almost exactly in Canada and in England, showing that the regulations and the way they have been carried out met with the approval of these other countries, and they have complimented our commission by copying them.

Mr. DEWALT. In further answer of the gentleman from Ohio, an inspection of the bill under consideration, on page 4, shows that it definitely states:

But no official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for such service except as now permitted by law.

It does not contemplate any bureau by the Government of the United States, but only the employment of the assistant of the bureau established by the railway association, and no additional compensation is to be allowed. I merely interlarded this——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a little information. I believe I drafted the one on the statute books, but still I have forgotten a great deal about it. I notice it draws a distinction, and I have no doubt a proper one, between f-u-z-e, f-u-s-e, and f-u-s-e-e-s, and wherever the term f-u-s-e as spelled with an "s" occurred in the bill the committee has stricken it out except in one place.

Mr. MERRITT. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is where it defines the meaning of it. What is the purpose of defining the meaning of fuse when it is not used in the bill any place except in the definition?

Mr. MERRITT. In line 6 of the bill the word as spelled with "z" should be an "s," I think, because when a f-u-s-e becomes detonating it is f-u-z-e.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I had supposed that the committee intended to put f-u-s-e-s in that line, and I had my copy of the bill marked that an amendment ought to be offered putting the word f-u-s-e-s in there in addition. The present law covers f-u-s-e-s.

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And those are not dangerous explosives. I had supposed that probably that was accidentally left out. The bill as drawn originally——

Mr. MERRITT. I think in line 6 the word "fuze" should be f-u-s-e-s and the second f-u-z-e-s, because if the f-u-s-e is detonating it makes it f-u-z-e. It seems to me to be correct English—no; it would not. In line 6 it provides it shall be lawful to transport——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Fuzes except detonating fuzes.

Mr. MERRITT. But there is no fuze that is not a detonating fuze, and every fuze is dangerous.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Well, that language would not make sense.

Mr. MERRITT. No, sir.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It seems to me that f-u-s-e-s ought to be inserted as an additional clause there.

Mr. MERRITT. I think so. And then "fuzes except detonating" should be stricken out.

Mr. ESCH. If the gentleman will permit, if the gentleman will notice, the report in the letter sent to us by Chairman Clark has this suggestion in reference to an amendment. "Line 6, page 2, change 'fuses' to 'fuzes' and insert immediately following that word 'fuses.'" That would carry out the suggestion.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is the proposition I have here in my bill. I was going to say I recall—of course, it is impossible to recall very definitely about a matter of this sort—that when we engaged in preparing the original bill, and most of it I have forgotten, I did not understand that fuses were dangerous.

Mr. MERRITT. No, sir; I think they should be in the bill—"fuses."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now, I notice that you provide that notice to the carrier shall be in writing.

Mr. MERRITT. Where is that?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. On page 5, line 13.

The present law, I think, provides that the agent of the carrier shall be informed as to the true character of the article. You provide that it shall be in writing. That may be necessary; I do not know. But, of course, notice of this sort, if it is to be in actual writing, is one thing, and if it is to be a printed notice, then it is another thing.

Mr. ESCH. That form of giving notice would probably be subject to regulation. The trouble has been in several cases that have come up before the commission was that there was doubt whether the notice had been given orally. The purpose of the amendment is to have a record made of the matter in writing. The only thing required would be that the notice should be entered in writing on the bill of lading.

Mr. MERRITT. It would be hard to prove a case if the shipper's statement was not in writing. The bill merely calls for a truthful statement in the bill of lading.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is a House Calendar bill. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That sections 232, 233, 234, 235, and 236 of the act to codify, revise, and amend the penal laws of the United States, approved March 4, 1909, be amended to read, respectively, as follows:

"SEC. 232. It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States any high explosive, such as and including dynamite, blasting caps, detonating fuses, black powder, gunpowder, or other like explosive, on any vessel, car, or vehicle of any description operated in the transportation of passengers by a common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce, which vessel, car, or vehicle is carrying passengers for hire: Provided, That it shall be lawful to transport on any such vessel, car, or vehicle smokeless powder, primers, fuses, except detonating fuses, fireworks, or other similar explosives, and properly packed and marked samples of explosives for laboratory examination, not exceeding a net weight of one-half pound each, and not exceeding 20 samples at one time in a single vessel, car, or vehicle; but such explosives shall not be carried in that part of a vessel, car, or vehicle which is being used for the transportation of passengers for hire: Provided further, That it shall be lawful to transport on any such vessel, car, or vehicle small-arms ammunition in any quantity, and such fuses, torpedoes, rockets, or other signal devices as may be essential to promote safety in operation: And provided further, That nothing in this section shall be construed to prevent the transportation of military or naval forces with their accompanying munitions of war on passenger-equipment vessels, cars, or vehicles.

"The words 'detonating fuses' as used in this section shall be interpreted to mean fuses used in naval or military service to detonate the high explosive bursting charges of projectiles, mines, bombs, or torpedoes. The word 'fuses' as used herein shall be interpreted to mean devices used in igniting the bursting charges of projectiles. The word 'primers' as used herein shall be interpreted to mean devices used in igniting the propelling powder charges of ammunition. The word 'fuses' as used herein shall be interpreted to mean the slow-burning fuses used commercially and intended to convey fire to an explosive or combustible mass slowly or without danger to the person lighting. The word 'fusees' as used herein shall be interpreted to mean the fusees ordinarily used on steamboats and railroads as night signals.

"SEC. 233. The Interstate Commerce Commission shall formulate regulations for the safe transportation within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States of explosives and other dangerous articles, including inflammable liquids, inflammable solids, oxidizing materials, corrosive liquids, compressed gases, and poisonous substances, which shall be binding upon all common carriers engaged in interstate or foreign commerce which transport explosives or other dangerous articles by land or water, and upon all shippers making shipments of explosives or other dangerous articles via any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water. Said commission, of its own motion, or upon application made by any interested party, may make changes or modifications in such regulations, made desirable by new information or altered conditions. Such regulations shall be in accord with the best-known practicable means for securing safety in transit, covering the packing, marking, loading, handling while in transit, and the precautions necessary to determine whether the material when offered is in proper condition to transport. Such regulations, as well as all changes or modifications thereof, shall, unless a shorter time is authorized by the commission, take effect 90 days after their formulation and publication by said commission and shall be in effect until reversed, set aside, or modified.

"SEC. 234. It shall be unlawful to transport, carry, or convey within the limits of the jurisdiction of the United States, liquid nitroglycerin, fulminate in bulk in dry condition, or other like explosive, on any vessel, car, or vehicle of any description operated in the transportation of passengers or property by land or water by a common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce.

"SEC. 235. Every package containing explosives or other dangerous articles when presented to a common carrier for shipment shall have plainly marked on the outside thereof the contents thereof; and it shall be unlawful for any person to deliver, or cause to be delivered, to any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water, or to carry upon any vessel, car, or vehicle operated by any common carrier engaged in interstate or foreign commerce by land or water any explosive, or other dangerous article, as specified in section 233 of this act, under any false or deceptive marking, description, invoice, shipping order, or other declaration, or without informing the agent of such carrier in writing of the true character thereof, at or before the time such delivery or carriage is made. Whoever shall knowingly violate, or cause to be violated, any provision of this section, or of the three sections last preceding, or any regulation made by the Interstate Commerce Commission in pursuance thereof, shall be fined not more than $2,000 or imprisoned not more than 18 months, or both.

"SEC. 236. When the death or bodily injury of any person is caused by the explosion or escape of any article named in the four sections last preceding, while the same is being carried or placed upon any vessel, car, or vehicle to be transported in violation thereof, or while the same is being so carried or transported, or while the same is being removed from such vessel, car, or vehicle, the person knowingly carrying, placing, or aiding or permitting the carrying or placing of such articles upon any such vessel, car, or vehicle, to be so carried or transported, shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years."

With committee amendments as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "detonating," strike out the word "fuses" and insert the word "fuzes."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I want to ask the gentleman from Connecticut a question. Under the existing law permission is granted to carry small-arms ammunition in any quantity?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes. That is in this bill, too.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It may be, but it is not where it is in the existing law.

Mr. MERRITT. It is on lines 13 to 17 on page 2.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. All right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, after the word "primers"——

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, the committee desires to change that amendment in the interest of clarity.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Do you want to do so at that place?

Mr. MERRITT. Yes. The word "fuses" in the original bill should remain at the end of line 5. Strike out in line 6 the word "except" and insert the words "but not," and strike out the word "fuses" and insert the word "fuzes," so that it will read:

That it shall be lawful to transport on any such vessel, car, or vehicle smokeless powder, primers, fuses, but not detonating fuzes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MERRITT: Page 2, line 6, strike out the word "except" and insert "but not."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I take it that the present language, including the amendment, which says "fuses, except detonating fuzes," would confuse the exception there; but "detonating fuzes" and the language following that, "fireworks, and other similar explosives," would be subject to transportation.

Mr. MERRITT. I guess that is true.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I think so. Of course, that is somewhat a matter of construction.

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. But when you say "fuses, except detonating fuzes," the exception is probably applicable to the "fuzes" already mentioned, whereas if you change it and put in another description entirely and follow that with the word "but," it would cover everything following.

Mr. MERRITT. I think the gentleman is correct. The difficulty I was trying to avoid was——

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I understand the difficulty. I do not see why you do not leave it the way it is, and leave "fuses" where it is in line 5, and then insert "fuzes."

Mr. MERRITT. Would it not make it perfectly clear to say "fuses, except detonating fuses, herein called 'fuzes,'" in brackets?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That would cover it, but that would be awkward.

Mr. MERRITT. It is pretty difficult, where the difference is simply a matter of spelling, to make it clear.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. You can say "fuses and fuzes, except detonating fuzes." Or you can put "fuses" in line 6, after the second word "fuzes."

Mr. MERRITT. Yes; that would do. But it is awkward any way you put it.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; that would not be awkward.

Mr. MERRITT. The way the gentleman proposes would be "primers, fuses, except detonating fuses"?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; "primers, fuses, fuzes except detonating fuzes, fireworks, or other similar explosives."

Mr. MERRITT. That is the way the committee amendments read.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. No; you have stricken out "fuses" entirely.

Mr. MERRITT. The difficulty is that it has been testified that every "fuze" is dangerous and should not be transported. Every "fuze" is a dangerous fuze.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is easy enough, if that is what you want to do, to say "fuses, not including fuzes."

Mr. MERRITT. That is all right, but I had suggested the word "not." The words "not including" would suit better. I suggest changing "not" to "not including." Mr. Speaker, will the Clerk please read it as he has it now?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, strike out the word "except" and insert "not including" in lieu thereof.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Connecticut offers an amendment to the committee amendment. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment as amended. The Clerk will report the committee amendment as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 5, strike out after the word "primers" the word "fuses" and insert "fuzes," and in line 6, after the word "detonating," strike out the word "fuses" and insert "fuzes."

Mr. MERRITT. That is not correct. That is the way it was originally reported. The word "fuses" in line 5 is not stricken out.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will suggest the voting down of the amendment in line 5. That will accomplish the purpose.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That can be done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in line 5.

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment in line 6 as amended.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. What is that amendment?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The next amendment is to strike out the word "fuses" and insert the word "fuzes."

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Now we ought to strike out the word "except" in line 6.

Mr. MERRITT. Yes.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. And insert——

Mr. MERRITT. "Not including."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. "Not including" might cover it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There was an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. MERRITT. That was adopted, was it not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment as it will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That it shall be unlawful to transport on any such vessel, car, or vehicle, smokeless powder, primers, fuses, not including detonating fuzes.

Mr. MERRITT. That is right.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That has been agreed to. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "such," strike out "fuses" and insert in lieu thereof "fuzes."

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I ask unanimous consent that all the committee amendments may be reported at once.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that all the committee amendments may be reported at once. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the remaining committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 22, after the word "detonating," strike out "fuses" and insert "fuzes."

In line 23 strike out "fuses" and insert "fuzes."

Page 4, line 11, after the word "modified," insert: "In the execution of the provisions of this act the Interstate Commerce Commission may utilize the services of the bureau for the safe transportation of explosives and other dangerous articles, and may avail itself of the advice and assistance of any department, commission, or board of the Government, but no official or employee of the United States shall receive any additional compensation for for such service except as now permitted by law."

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, a clerical error. In line 18 the word "for" is repeated. I move to strike out the word "for" where it occurs in line 17.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 17, at the end of the line, strike out the word "for."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MERRITT. I move that all the committee amendments be agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments just read.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MERRITT. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I crave the indulgence of the House to call attention to a very important matter, important to a very large part of the country. The last census shows that about 39 per cent of the population of the United States are farmers. Every farmer in order to be successful must raise a few head of cattle. We are going to be called upon either Wednesday or Thursday to vote upon a measure which places an increased duty on wheat flour and a duty on wheat, and at the same time leaves frozen beef and hides and oil cake on the free list, to come into the United States absolutely free. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that during the last fiscal year there was shipped into the United States absolutely free of duty 42,436,333 pounds of frozen beef and veal, 439,461,092 pounds of cowhides, 68,359,825 pounds of calf hides, and 145,026,652 pounds of oil cake.

During the four months of July, August, September, and October of the present fiscal year (1920) there were shipped into the United States absolutely free of duty 19,456,961 pounds of frozen beef and veal, 80,023,347 pounds of cowhides, 10,782,491 pounds of calf hides, and 128,615,571 pounds of oil cake.

In South American countries, where they have little more than a third of our population, they now have over 80,000,000 head of cattle and raise over 32,000,000 head of cattle a year, while in the United States where we have a population of 105,000,000 we now have only a little more than 75,000,000 head of cattle, and we annually raise less than 30,000,000 head a year.

Mr. DOWELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. DOWELL. Does the gentleman appreciate the fact that they are on the free list in all the Democratic tariff laws?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes, Mr. Speaker; and I want to call attention to the fact that it is the biggest mistake the Democratic Party ever made to starve both the farmers and the cattlemen of the country who raise the food and clothing with which the 105,000,000 people are kept alive.

Mr. DOWELL. I am glad to have that statement from the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to ask my Democratic friends and my Republican friends, who claim to be logical, what kind of logic is it that puts wheat flour on the dutiable list, which puts a high tariff on the bread of the country, and thus protects the wheat grower, but which at the same time lets nearly 50,000,000 pounds of frozen beef and over 500,000,000 pounds of cattle hides come into the country free every year, with absolutely no duty? I want to say this, my friends, you who represent the great city consumers of the country: You imagine you are appealing to them, you imagine you are catering to the interests of the great consuming city districts of this country in offering them cheap beef at the expense of the cattle raisers of this country. I want to tell you that during the last 90 days there has been more cattlemen bankrupted in this country than ever before in the whole history of the United States Government. If you bankrupt many more cattle raisers in this country, you are going to put them out of business. They are going to stop raising cattle when they find out that they have to compete with the South American tropical countries, where they have an abundance of grass and water the whole year around, where they do not have to feed the cattle, where they have labor at a very cheap price, and where they can raise beef at one-fifth of what it costs the American producer; you are going to learn that when the American cattlemen find out that the Republican Congress is going to forget their interests and compel them to compete with the South American products, where some of the biggest packeries in the world exist, they are going to quit raising beef and your city consumers are going to have to depend on the South American product with the price that the packers want to put on it, when they can tell you to your face that you crippled and killed the cattle industry in the United States, and they will make you pay for it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. Give me two minutes more.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman will have lots of time on Wednesday.

Mr. MERRITT. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. BLANTON. I want to tell my good friend from Wyoming that we will have a chance to discuss this question Wednesday, provided he and my good friend from Kansas, who now presides over the House [Mr. CAMPBELL], see fit to let us do so. If they see fit to let us discuss the question, we will have a chance, but without a special rule from the Committee on Rules making in order such amendments, there will be no chance whatever to have considered any amendments seeking to place a duty on frozen beef, hides, and oil cake, as tariff bills without a rule are amendable only as to rates. It is the big packers of the country that have kept frozen beef and hides out of this bill, and you can not get around it. It is a gold brick for the cattle raisers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. MERRITT. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MERRITT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a request for unanimous consent. I was out of the House when the bill H. R. 5815 was reached in its regular order, and I take it that Mr. JUUL, the gentleman from Illinois, was also out. I was attending to some departmental measures. I ask unanimous consent that notwithstanding the action of the House the bill retain its place on the calendar.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill referred to retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. GARD. That has already been done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will say that the bill went to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. In accordance with the rule, it went to the foot of the calendar.

Mr. CRAGO. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that it retain its place on the calendar.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not think we ought to make a precedent by departing from the rule that where a bill has been called up and goes over it goes to the foot of the calendar. It was because neither of the gentlemen was here that we did not strike it from the calendar entirely.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the bill retain its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I shall have to object.

DISPENSING WITH BUSINESS ON CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the business on next Calendar Wednesday. I make the request in order that we may consider a measure reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the business in order on next Calendar Wednesday may be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to know whether or not the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] can assure us we are going to have ample time to discuss the merits of the bill?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there will be no question about granting opportunity to discuss the bill. I hope there will be.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, has the gentleman from Wyoming conferred with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] with reference to this request?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not, but my understanding is that the minority members on the Ways and Means Committee have talked it over—that is, all of the members have—and I assume that the minority members of the committee have talked it over with the gentleman from Missouri. My understanding is that it is entirely agreeable to all the members of the committee.

Mr. GARRETT. I hope the gentleman will defer his request for a little time.

Mr. MONDELL. I shall be very glad to, if the gentleman desires.

Mr. GARD. Will not the gentleman defer his request until, say, to-morrow morning, when those interested in the matter can be here?

Mr. MONDELL. I think it is rather important to settle the matter, if we can, this evening.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. It is a matter of convenience to all of the Members of the House to know.

Mr. MONDELL. Members on both sides are coming to me constantly and asking when the matter is coming up. They would like to know whether it is coming up Wednesday or Thursday, and out of deference to those requests I have made the request to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business.

Mr. DEWALT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. DEWALT. If the gentleman insists upon pressing his request at this time and does not accede to what I deem to be the reasonable request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], I shall object.

Mr. MONDELL. I feel that it is proper that I should accede to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and call the matter up later this evening, but I hope the gentleman from Ohio will be agreeable to having the matter settled some time this afternoon.

Mr. DEWALT. I should request that the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the leader of the Republican side, accede to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARD], and if he does not, then I shall object.

Mr. MONDELL. All that I can promise is that the matter will not be called up until later in the afternoon.

Mr. DEWALT. Then, I object.

Mr. MONDELL. Of course, the gentleman can object at any time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent.

MARINE HOSPITAL SERVICE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11841) to amend "An act granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the Marine Hospital Service," approved February 15, 1893.

Mr. ESCH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, I would ask some gentleman on the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, which reported this bill, if the existing law has been examined?

Mr. ESCH. Yes; an amendment is necessary showing that this is an amendment of the first paragraph of section 2 of the act of 1893.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

LOW GROUNDS OF WASHINGTON, D. C.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 12045) to provide for the conveyance of lots on the low grounds of Washington, D. C.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in carrying into effect the provisions of the act of July 1, 1879, entitled "An act to provide for the conveyance of the low grounds in the city of Washington," under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 7, 1822 (21 Stats., 47), the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized at his discretion to execute and deliver the deeds therein provided for without proof of compliance with the building conditions under which the lands were sold, upon a satisfactory showing of inability to supply such evidence.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, my attention was diverted when the question of objection to this bill was put. I think the bill never has been considered by anybody in respect to its form. It did not properly belong to the Committee on the Public Lands, but probably would not have received any different consideration if it had gone elsewhere. I would ask some gentleman where we will find the Twenty-first Statutes, page 47, covering an act approved May 7, 1822? "There ain't no such thing."

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I would say to the gentleman that that may be a typographical error. I remember at the time the committee of which the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. SINNOTT] is chairman considered it, that he got out the statute and read it, and that it is exactly as set forth in this report.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I do not know. I said "There ain't no such thing." When this bill came up I sent to the Library of Congress for these statutes, and after the boys up there had puzzled their brains for several days, they said they could not find anything of the kind. I then sent to the library of the Supreme Court. They said they could not find anything of that kind. Then I sent to the Congressional Library, and they said they could not find anything of the kind. Then I wrote to the Secretary of the Interior and asked him, and he apparently says that the citation is correct. It may be. Nobody can produce the book. The letter says:

You inquire whether the citation therein of the Twenty-first Statutes, page 47, is correct. In response thereto you are advised that the citation in question is correct, as referred to the statute and the page on which the act of July 1, 1879, can be found.

House bill 12045 should be amended, in line 5, after the word "Washington," by eliminating the quotation marks and adding the same after the figures "1822," in line 6, so that as amended it should read: "An act to provide for the conveyance of the low grounds in the city of Washington under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 7, 1822."

While the Secretary of the Interior says the citation is correct, I repeat, "There ain't no such thing." At least they could not find it in the Congressional Library, nor in the library of the Supreme Court, nor of the House of Representatives. I do not care whether it is passed or not, although I suggest to the gentleman that perhaps he would better offer the amendment suggested by the Secretary of the Interior. Perhaps that will help find something. It is proposed here to enact legislation to clear title. The first thing we run across is something that shows that we do not know anything about what it means, because it makes reference to things that do not exist.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. This statement is from the letter of the Secretary of the Interior who, according to the gentleman's own statement a little while ago, is authority on everything pertaining to the public lands, and unless he recommends legislation it should not be enacted.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The gentleman from Idaho is seeking to be facetious, but his strongest point is in being serious. The gentleman is not happy in trying to be facetious.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman used the Secretary of the Interior as authority on a bill we were considering a moment ago and now in this bill he is trying to discredit him.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I did not take the authority of the Secretary of the Interior in the bill we had a moment ago.

However, that has nothing to do with this case. I took the action of a committee which, because of the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior, had refused three times to report a proposition without consideration, and then because the gentleman from Idaho is on the committee they agree to an amendment which he proposes without consideration.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, the letter just read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] suggests an amendment to change the quotation in line 5, after the word "Washington," to the end of line 6, after the "1822," and the amendment is accepted by the committee.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman offer that as an amendment?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I do.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 5, after the word "Washington," strike out the quotation marks and, in line 6, after the figures "1822," insert quotation marks.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CANCELLATION OF A SEGREGATION OF PUBLIC LANDS UNDER THE CAREY ACT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2188) to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. L., p. 1133).

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman advise the Members of the necessity of the bill that is now under consideration?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What is the gentleman's inquiry?

Mr. GARD. I want to know what the bill is about and the necessity for its being passed.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. What does the gentleman wish to ascertain about the bill?

Mr. GARD. Anything; any information about it.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Well, this bill is to amend what is known as the Carey Act, which was enacted in 1894, providing that on application of the State certain public lands which could be irrigated were segregated for that purpose. The law provided the term of 10 years within which the land might be reclaimed, and under that general law it often occurred that land which had been segregated on the application of a State was held for a number of years without any work whatever being undertaken on the project. This bill simply limits the time to three years, and provides that if the work is not undertaken in three years, the segregation shall be canceled.

Mr. GARD. Does the bill provide for the restoration of the land to the public domain?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Yes; the segregation would be canceled and the land immediately restored to the public domain on request of the State, or application might be entertained to have it again segregated in order that some other company or individual might reclaim it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1901 (31 Stat. L., p. 1133), be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That section 4 of the act of August 18, 1894, entitled 'An act making appropriation for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes,' be, and the same is hereby, amended so that the 10-year period within which any State shall cause the lands applied for under said act to be irrigated and reclaimed, as provided in said section, as amended by the act of June 11, 1896, shall begin to run from the date of approval by the Secretary of the Interior of the State's application for the segregation of such lands; and if actual construction of reclamation works is not begun within three years after the segregation of the lands or within such further period as shall be allowed by the Secretary of the Interior, the said Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, may restore such lands to the public domain; and if the State fails, within 10 years from the date of such segregation, to cause the whole or any part of the lands so segregated to be so irrigated and reclaimed, the Secretary of the Interior may, in his discretion, continue said segregation for a period not exceeding five years, or may, in his discretion, restore such lands to the public domain upon the expiration of the 10-year period or of any extension thereof."

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

On page 2, line 10, after the word "period" insert, "not exceeding three years." In line 18, after the word "lands" insert, "not irrigated and reclaimed."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

CONSOLIDATION OF LANDS IN THE NATIONAL FORESTS OF SOUTH DAKOTA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11118) authorizing the consolidation of lands in the national forests in the State of South Dakota.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the gentleman from South Dakota at present I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. The understanding is that it goes to the foot of the calendar?

The SPEAKER. It goes to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

ROOSEVELT NATIONAL PARK.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5006) to add certain lands to the Sequoia National Park, Calif., and to change the name of said park to Roosevelt National Park.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. ELSTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

DISPOSITION OF ABANDONED PORTIONS OF RIGHTS OF WAY GRANTED TO RAILROAD COMPANIES.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9899) to provide for the disposition of abandoned portions of rights of way granted to railroad companies.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, for the same reason, on account of the absence of the gentleman who is the author and who reported the bill, I ask that this bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. Without objection this bill will go to the foot of the calendar. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

VALIDATING CERTAIN APPLICATIONS FOR AND ENTRIES OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3994) validating certain applications for and entries of public lands, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think I will not object to this, although it is plainly a Private Calendar bill.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It is a long bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a bill containing a number of private claims.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. No; they should not be considered as private claims. Every bill is a bill to perfect title to public lands in a number of individual cases. It is legislation that was suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, and to which have been added some bills which have either passed the Senate or are already on the House Calendar. There is no item included in this bill that has not been recommended by the Secretary of the Interior in order to perfect titles to public lands.

Mr. GARD. This is a rather extensive bill to pass by unanimous consent, and I object.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill hold its place on the calendar, because we must get it through this session, or otherwise a greater hardship will be worked upon these people whose relief is sought here.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the bill go to the foot of the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill hold its place on the calendar; not at the foot of the calendar, but that it be passed over without prejudice; not to go to the foot of the calendar.

The SPEAKER. When that request is made on an objection of a Member to the consideration of a bill the bill goes to the foot of the calendar. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent that it hold its place on the calendar. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. I think we ought to follow the regular practice. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MONTHLY PAYMENT OF PENSIONS.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7539) to provide for monthly payment of pensions, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HUSTED. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, this is a very important bill, which will involve an additional expenditure of a large amount of money to execute its provisions. I think it should come up in the regular way. I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

COPPER HARBOR RANGE LIGHTHOUSE RESERVATION, MICH.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 14122) to authorize the sale of a portion of the Copper Harbor Range Lighthouse Reservation, Mich., to Houghton and Keweenaw Counties, Mich.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce for and on behalf of the United States is hereby authorized and directed, in his discretion, to sell and convey to Houghton and Keweenaw Counties, in the State of Michigan, for the sum of $2,000, that certain piece or parcel of the Copper Harbor Range Lighthouse Reservation, Mich., with the improvements thereon, which is that portion of lot 2, section 33, township 59 north, range 28 west, Michigan, lying east of the creek that drains Lake Fanny Hooe, and on which portion is located Fort Wilkins (abandoned), no longer required for lighthouse purposes: Provided, That said counties shall forever maintain the site and structures thereon as a historic landmark or as a public park; that said counties shall construct and forever maintain a bridge suitable to the Lighthouse Service across the creek from Lake Fanny Hooe in the rear of the rear range light and station buildings; that the road which now passes in front of the said rear range light structures shall be diverted by said counties from the north to the south side of the structures, crossing the creek by the bridge just mentioned; that the portion of the road west of the creek shall be constructed by said counties in accordance with specifications to be furnished by the Lighthouse Service; that the officers and employees of the Government of the United States shall have the right at all times to pass and repass over the said bridge and over the land transferred hereunder, by any route they may select, and to transport all necessary materials thereover; that the maintenance of the site and structures, the construction and maintenance of the bridge, and the diversion of the road, as hereinbefore provided for, shall be without expense to the United States: Provided further, That in the event of the discontinuance by said counties of the maintenance of said piece or parcel of land as a historic landmark or as a public park, or of the failure of the said counties to perform any of the terms and conditions preceding, the title to the premises hereunder transferred shall revert to the United States and the $2,000 paid by said counties shall be retained by the United States in consideration of the provisions hereof.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

In line 11, page 3, strike out the figure "2" and insert in lieu thereof the figure "3."

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of whoever has charge of the bill to a somewhat peculiar provision in it, as I caught its reading. There is a proviso in there to the effect that the counties shall forever maintain the bridge, and something else provided that it shall be forever maintained as a public park. The only thing I can think of about that is that may occasion some difficulties in the future. Forever is a good long while.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is to devote the land to public park purposes.

Mr. GARRETT. If they fail to maintain the bridge as provided in there, what will be the effect? Will this land revert to the Government, or in what legal situation will it be?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. The bill says the title shall revert to the Government.

Mr. GARRETT. That is expressed in the bill?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. That is expressed in the bill. It is provided that "in the event of the discontinuance by said counties of the maintenance of said piece or parcel of land as an historic landmark or as a public park, or of the failure of the said counties to perform any of the terms and conditions preceding, the title to the premises hereinunder transferred shall revert to the United States, and the $2,000 paid by said counties shall be retained by the United States in consideration of the provisions hereof."

Mr. DEWALT. Further than that, there is a provision in the bill which specifically says it can be altered, amended, or repealed at any time.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Oh, certainly.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. In line 6, page 1, after the word "of," preceding "$2,000," I move to insert "not less than," so as to make it read "a sum not less than $2,000."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6, page 1, after the word "of," preceding "$2,000," insert "not less than," so as to make it read "a sum not less than $2,000."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, this will not prevent the Secretary of Commerce, in his discretion, from accepting the sum of $2,000, but it will leave it in his discretion. We do not know why the amount of $2,000 is fixed here. Nobody has stated it. The report of the committee does not state why the sum of $2,000 is fixed as the compensation to be paid to the Government. Conditions may differ from what they were when this bill was reported and the amount of $2,000 was agreed to by somebody. I think no harm can be done by leaving it in the discretion of the Secretary of Commerce to accept and receive more than $2,000 if, in his judgment and in the opinion of those with whom he is dealing, a larger sum might be paid.

I will say now, while I have the floor, that this should be followed by a similar amendment on page 3, line 4, so that the exact amount paid by the counties should be retained, as provided in the latter part of section 1. I dare say that it is very unusual to fix the amount absolutely which the United States may be permitted to accept if it is offered to it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, I doubt whether the gentleman from Illinois understands the construction that is put on the words "not less than" by the Secretary of the Interior. We had the matter up about a year ago, and the Secretary of the Interior decided that when those words were used he construed them as instructions to him to appraise the land and sell it at its appraised value. While I am not familiar with the provisions of this bill, it is a question in my mind whether the object sought to be attained would be defeated by putting in those words "not less than."

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, this is not a conveyance in fee. This is a sale and conveyance of the property under certain conditions, and there could not very well be an appraisal of the value of the fee of this land. But I think some discretion should be left with the Secretary of Commerce as to the amount of compensation that is to be given to the United States Government.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I would suggest to my colleague that very likely that language would require the Secretary of the Interior to appraise the land and sell it to the highest bidder.

The purpose of the bill is to preserve this place as a historic landmark. I am not familiar with the location. Usually we are asked to give title without any compensation at all. If it were out West on the public land the compensation would be fixed at $1.25 an acre regardless of the value of the ground, and I do not say improperly so fixed. If there is any occasion for having this place maintained as a landmark, probably it would be better to have it done by the State or by the counties than to have it done by the General Government. I do not know what the land may be worth for something else, but if it is desirable to have it for a public park or a landmark I am not sure that it would be desirable to put it up to see who would pay the highest price for it, or even to see whether these people would pay the appraised value. Maybe that is all that would occur.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The bill says very clearly that the Secretary of Commerce is authorized, in his discretion, to sell this land to Houghton and Keweenaw Counties—not to anybody else—for specific purposes, and the purposes are named.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Probably it would not give him authority to put it up to the highest bidder.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Why can we not get some information on a bill of this sort, as to why the sum of $2,000 is fixed? If anybody will tell me why that has been fixed, I shall be willing to withdraw my amendment; but it appears to me that it is not right to throw a bill into the House without any information as to why the sum of $2,000 should be paid for something.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. May I ask the gentleman why he should be so much interested in getting a larger sum than $2,000 for the Federal Government, which would impose a tax upon the people living up there?

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Because I happen to be a Representative in the Congress of the United States. I think we have some obligation here to look after the interests of the Federal Government. I am not sitting here in a State legislature.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHINDBLOM].

The question being taken, the amendment was rejected.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the report of the Committee on Ways and Means and the views of the minority on the emergency tariff bill may be filed at any time before 12 o'clock to-night. We have not yet got the report quite ready, but will have it perhaps within an hour.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I should like to suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that if he wishes this to be privileged, of course it will have to be presented from the floor. The bill has not been reported yet from the floor. If it is to be taken up under a rule, that probably does not make any difference.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have just introduced the bill, but the report is not ready yet, but will have it within half an hour. I understand the House will adjourn perhaps before that time, and that is the reason I am asking this unanimous consent.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I was only making the suggestion. If it is to be called up as a privileged report, it will have to be presented in the open House.

Mr. CANNON. We ought to know what is in the bill, and we will not have time to read it.

Mr. FORDNEY. It can be printed to-night.

Mr. CANNON. But I can not read it to-night.

Mr. FORDNEY. It is not proposed to bring it up in the House before Wednesday.

Mr. CANNON. Then why not report it in the morning?

Mr. FORDNEY. I should like to have the report printed along with the bill. That is the only object.

Mr. CANNON. The report can be printed to-morrow in time to call it up Wednesday.

Mr. GARRETT. If consent is given to file a report, it ought to include the views of the minority also.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] told me that he will have the minority views ready in a few minutes.

The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] informs me that I should report the bill now, and then ask unanimous consent to file the report later to-night. I report the bill by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. GARRETT. The gentleman is reporting it, as I understand, as a privileged bill.

Mr. SNELL. He must report it as a privileged bill, or else he will have to have a special rule to call it up.

Mr. FORDNEY. Being a revenue bill, it is privileged.

Mr. CANNON. Why not let the bill and report come together in the morning? I do not believe there is any prospect, is there, of calling up the bill for action before Wednesday or Thursday?

Mr. FORDNEY. Not before Wednesday; we are trying to bring it up and pass it on Wednesday. I would like to have the report printed to-night, so that Members can have it to-morrow.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. I suggest to the gentleman from Michigan that I have seen this modus operandi adopted by both sides of the House: "Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Ways and Means presents the following privileged report," and then ask unanimous consent that both sides have until midnight to file the report and minority views.

Mr. FORDNEY. That was my request.

Mr. CANNON. Has the gentleman introduced his bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. I have; it is given the number 15275.

Mr. DEWALT. The gentleman stated that he had conversation with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] and that he said that in a few minutes he would have his minority views ready.

Mr. FORDNEY. He said he would have his views ready before the House at adjournment, but I was told by the Speaker that we were liable to adjourn in a few minutes. Therefore I am trying to get the privilege of filing the report and minority views before midnight.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman expect to pass the bill on Wednesday?

Mr. FORDNEY. I would like to.

Mr. SNELL. With how much debate?

Mr. FORDNEY. Not more than three hours. Members of the committee feel that will be ample time to discuss it. It is a very short bill.

Mr. BLANTON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question. Is this the logical Republican tariff measure that seeks to put a high tariff on bread and yet permits an annual importation of millions of pounds of frozen beef and of hides to continue to come in on the free list?

Mr. FORDNEY. This is a bill introduced as an emergency bill, to try to save some of the industries in the agricultural districts from going into bankruptcy.

Mr. BLANTON. Will there be a chance to amend the bill on the floor?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I think the bill will be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLANTON. Very well.

TARIFF ON CERTAIN AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I now report the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes. I ask, Mr. Speaker, unanimous consent to present the report and minority views any time before 12 o'clock to-night.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. McFADDEN. Reserving the right to object, and I do not think I will object, I want to ask the gentleman whether dairy products are included in the bill?

Mr. FORDNEY. No; they are not.

Mr. McFADDEN. Will there be an opportunity to amend it?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is a revenue bill, and it is not subject to amendment except as to rates.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I see no reason why there should be an objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan from the minority standpoint, but I would like it stated that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] shall not be precluded if he should fail to have the minority views ready.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have not seen the gentleman the last few minutes, but he assured me he would have the report by adjournment.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If he does not have it ready to-night, he may file it to-morrow?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, the following leave of absence was granted:

To Mr. NELSON of Wisconsin, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. STEVENSON, for 10 days, on account of closing up his business affairs and moving his family to the Capital.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that no quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 21, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

252. A letter from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting report showing number of publications issued by the Department of Agriculture during the fiscal year 1920; to the Committee on Printing.

253. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting draft of requested legislation to recover the value of public property lost by persons in the naval service through abuse or negligence; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

254. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of the Interior for fees and expenses of examining surgeons, pensions, fiscal year 1922 (H. Doc. No. —); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. GRIGSBY, from the Committee on the Territories, to which was referred the bill (S. 2189) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1138), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. FORDNEY, from the Committee on Ways and Means, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1139), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 15271) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Tug River in Mingo County, W. Va., at or near Cedar, in said county, to the Kentucky side, in Pike County, Ky.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WEAVER: A bill (H. R. 15272) making an appropriation to be expended under the provisions of the act of March 1, 1911 (36 Stat., 961); to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: A bill (H. R. 15273) authorizing the lease of school lands containing deposits of coal, oil, oil shale, or gas by the State of Washington for longer periods than five years; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MURPHY: A bill (H. R. 15274) providing for the monthly payment of pensions; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. VOLSTEAD: A bill (H. R. 15276) to amend chapter 541 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, passed July 1, 1898, known as the bankruptcy act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEVENSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 422) to use alien property funds until same shall be distributed according to law; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 423) providing for the appointment of a joint select committee to consider and draft legislation to facilitate the exchange and sale of agricultural products between producer and consumer; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. MONAHAN of Wisconsin: Resolution (H. Res. 621) authorizing the painting of a full-length portrait of Abraham Lincoln and placing it in the Hall of the House of Representatives; to the Committee on Accounts.

By the SPEAKER: Memorial of the Legislature of the Territory of Hawaii, favoring the passage of House bill 13500 to establish a Hawaiian homes commission; to the Committee on the Territories.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 15277) granting an increase of pension to Sarah M. Beach; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTLER: A bill (H. R. 15278) granting a pension to Eli W. Elzey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CROWTHER: A bill (H. R. 15279) granting a pension to Cornelia De Camp Croxton; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 15280) granting an increase of pension to Floyd L. Green; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15281) granting a pension to Lucy E. Porter; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 15282) granting an increase of pension to Catherine Wood; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL: A bill (H. R. 15283) granting a pension to Josephine Carey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOWARD: A bill (H. R. 15284) conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to adjust the claims between the Otoe and Missouria Tribes of Indians and the Omaha Indians to certain moneys received by the Omaha Indians; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. KING: A bill (H. R. 15285) granting a pension to Edith Ettinger; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15286) for the relief of B. I. Bryant; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 15287) granting an increase of pension to Jerry McIntosh; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RAMSEYER: A bill (H. R. 15288) granting a pension to Nancy Blitz; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RANDALL of California: A bill (H. R. 15289) granting a pension to Charles M. Eddy; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 15290) granting an increase of pension to Susan A. Bailey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 15291) granting a pension to John C. Trent; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15292) granting a pension to Nancy M. Wagner; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15293) granting an increase of pension to Clarence Matchett, alias Harry J. Reed; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15294) granting a pension to Charles T. Bowman; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 15295) for the relief of the heirs of Oliver P. Phillips; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STINESS: A bill (H. R. 15296) granting a pension to Mary J. White; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TAYLOR of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 15297) granting a pension to Nannie Roberts; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15298) granting a pension to Joseph F. Moore; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15299) granting a pension to Nora Meredith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 15300) for the relief of the city of West Point, Ga.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

4631. By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of the Amalgamated Metal Workers of America, of Philadelphia, Pa., demanding immediate recognition of Russian soviet republic; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4632. Also (by request), petition of the City Council of the City of Chicago, Ill., protesting against the armed invasion of Ireland by Great Britain, etc.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

4633. By Mr. DALLINGER: Petition of the executive committee of the Associated Industries of Massachusetts, favoring reduced expenses for the Government so as to reduce taxation; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

4634. By Mr. EMERSON: Resolutions adopted by the International Farm Congress; to the Committee on Agriculture.

4635. By Mr. FULLER of Illinois: Petition of the Outlook Club, of Rockford, Ill., favoring the Sheppard-Towner maternity bill (H. R. 10925); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4636. Also, petition of the J. D. Hollingshead Co., of Chicago, favoring 1-cent drop-letter postage; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

4637. Also, petition of the Chicago Railway Equipment Co., of Chicago, Ill., favoring the Patent Office bill; to the Committee on Patents.

4638. By Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Petition of various citizens of the third congressional district of the State of Washington, favoring the passage of the Sheppard-Towner bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

4639. By Mr. LUCE: Petition of citizens of Newton, Mass., urging amendment of Federal water-power act and defeat of House bill 12466; to the Select Committee on Water Power.

4640. By Mr. MICHENER: Petition of George D. Ball, of Addison, Mich., regarding the League of Nations and offering a substitute therefor; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

UMI

4641. By Mr. O'CONNELL: Petition of the Travelers' Protective Association of America, of St. Louis, Mo., favoring laws which will require all foreign-born citizens to live in the United States for a period of five years before being entitled to vote; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

4642. By Mr. ROWAN: Petition of the New York State League of Women Voters, favoring the Rogers bill, providing for independent citizenship for married women, and the Smith-Towner educational bill; to the Committee on Education.

4643. Also, petition of the T. H. Symington Co., of New York, favoring the passage of the Nolan bill, H. R. 11934; to the Committee on Patents.

4644. By Mr. TINKHAM: Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Massachusetts, protesting against the passage of the Smith-Towner bill; to the Committee on Education.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, December 21, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Infinite Spirit, Father of all souls, we bless Thee that every child born into this world is stamped with an individuality which differentiates it from every other human being. A marvelous blessing, but a stupendous responsibility. The parents may do much in shaping its course. Education teaches it to think soundly and reach wise conclusions. The Sunday school and church may quicken its conscience, society may develop its social functions, but when all is done it is the architect of its fortune. To live with its Maker, think with its Maker, is to build a character which will stand the test of time and eternity. Through the incomparable life and character of the Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

BUSINESS IN ORDER ON CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that for to-morrow the House dispense with Calendar Wednesday business.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow, be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. MADDEN. Reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Wyoming the purpose of dispensing with business in order on Calendar Wednesday?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I make the request in order that we may take up on Calendar Wednesday a bill reported last evening from the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. MADDEN. I shall not object, but still further reserving the right to object, would say that I think the unwisdom of the legislation proposed must be manifest to everybody. The proposition is to legislate on three or four articles, the prices of which have fallen, while those three or four articles are still in the hands of the owners, and to eliminate from consideration——

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. I want first to make this one statement—to eliminate from consideration articles that are in the hands of thousands and thousands of other industries throughout the United States, and thus indulge in the passage of special legislation, instead of general legislation which I would very much like to see enacted. However, Mr. Speaker, I do not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, does the gentleman from Wyoming think it hardly fair that a bill of this importance, reported last night and printed for the first time this morning, should come up to-morrow, and furthermore, in view of the fact that some Members who have not family ties here, who expect to spend Christmas away from here, have their reservations already made for to-morrow?

Mr. MONDELL. The matter has been discussed for some time, and gentlemen will have to-day in which to consider it.

Mr. RAYBURN. That is a long time.

Mr. MONDELL. Until to-morrow when the House meets.

Mr. RAYBURN. I object.

Mr. MONDELL. A great many Members of the House on both sides have asked that the matter be taken up to-morrow instead of the day following.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I object to dispensing with business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow.

The question was taken.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. Evidently there is not. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Wyoming, to dispense with business in order on Calendar Wednesday, to-morrow.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 207, nays 77, answered "present" 2, not voting 145, as follows:

Mr. ANDREWS of Maryland with Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, I have a general pair with the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. STEELE. I assume that if he were here he would vote "no," and I must ask permission to withdraw my vote of "aye" and answer "present."

The name of Mr. BUTLER was called, and he answered "Present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present, the Doorkeeper will open the doors.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CRAGO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an address delivered by the Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE, a Representative from the State of New York, on the occasion of the dedication at Syracuse, N. Y., of the "Rock of the Marne Memorial." This is a memorial to the men and officers of the Thirty-eighth Infantry who fell in the World War, and was erected by the surviving members of that splendid organization.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a speech delivered by Hon. WALTER W. MAGEE, a Representative from the State of New York, upon the memorial to the Thirty-eighth Regiment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I also ask unanimous consent that members of the Committee on Revision of the Laws be allowed to extend their remarks upon the bill passed yesterday. None of them had opportunity to address the House except the gentleman from Virginia and the chairman.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that members of the Committee on Revision of the Laws be allowed to extend their remarks on the revision of the laws. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish gentlemen in each instance would always specify the remarks are their own remarks.

Mr. LITTLE. It is not a request for myself; it is for other members of the committee.

Mr. GARNER. I understand. If the gentleman in making the request would simply say that he asks unanimous consent that they should extend their own remarks——

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. GARNER. Then they will be confined to their own remarks, but if a member merely gets consent to extend his remarks he can put anything on earth that he wants in the RECORD.

Mr. LITTLE. I will put it in the shape which the gentleman suggests.

Mr. GARNER. Now, if the Speaker will repeat the request, the RECORD will show exactly what the request is.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent that members of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws have permission to extend their own remarks. Is there objection?

Mr. GARD. How many members of the committee desire to take advantage of this?

Mr. LITTLE. I know of two. I do not know whether they all do or not, but I thought they all should have equal opportunity.

Mr. GARD. How many are there?

Mr. LITTLE. There are two, I think, who desire this privilege. But I thought the others should have equal opportunity.

Mr. GARD. How many are on the committee?

Mr. LITTLE. Eleven besides myself, but they have not all asked for this or expect to take advantage of this. There are only two who have asked, and I do not think the extensions will be very extensive.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

The SPEAKER. By special order to-day the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is entitled to address the House for 45 minutes. [Applause.]

TARIFF AND TRADE AGREEMENTS.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, I would not have asked the indulgence of the House to discourse upon a subject so hackneyed, so perennially discussed as the tariff merely for the sake of airing my views. My object is not so much to give information or advice as to suggest for your consideration certain entirely new phases of the question which the war and the abnormality of present conditions have brought about, with the hope that what I shall say may stimulate your minds in the direction of helping in their wise solution.

The duty of raising revenue is confided by the Constitution to the House of Representatives, acting in the first instance through the agency of the Ways and Means Committee. By a tremendous majority the American people have commanded us to originate new revenue laws, and at the earliest possible moment. More than that we are commanded to substitute for the present tariff law one based upon an entirely different principle, that of protection, as opposed to free trade or a tariff for revenue, as you may be pleased to call it, for to my mind the Underwood law is a hodgepodge of some of the worst features of both.

Early next month the Ways and Means Committee will hold hearings upon the tariff. No doubt an extra session of Congress will be called very soon after the adjournment of this Congress on the 4th of March, and it is our hope that at the earliest possible moment consistent with due care and thorough investigation of the entire question we may report to this House a complete revision of the tariff law based on the principle of protection to American industry and to American labor, for which the Republican Party has always stood and which the American people by a majority of nearly 8,000,000 have commanded us to enforce and maintain. May I say that, in my judgment, this ought not to interfere with the immediate revision of the internal-revenue laws, not for the purpose of substantially reducing taxation, which under the present condition of the Treasury is impossible, but for the purpose of more justly distributing the burden of taxes which to-day are throttling business and adding directly to the cost that the consumer must pay for necessities of life. That as I believe ought to come first. We already have sufficient information on which to found action, and that action should be taken just as soon as possible.

Even so, however, the tariff is a present and vital question and one which deserves the immediate consideration of the best minds and wisest statesmanship of the Congress and of the country. It is my purpose to-day not so much to discuss the general principles of tariff making as to point out some new phases which add greatly to its complication and which have never before been present at the beginning of any tariff revision about to be undertaken by the Congress.

Generally speaking, there are three principal conditions now existing which make the solution of the tariff problem infinitely more difficult than ever before. First, its relation to the Government revenue; second, the immense, if not almost insuperable, difficulty of accurately determining costs of production at home and abroad; and, third, the question of what consideration ought to be paid or discrimination made in favor of our allies, not only in view of our close relationship with them on account of our cooperation during the war, but also having in mind the immense amount of money they owe us, both in payment for our enormous exports in recent years and of the loans we have advanced, now aggregating nearly $10,000,000,000.

I want to speak first of the present relation of the tariff to Government revenues. When I first came into Congress, 17 years ago, and from then on during the administrations of Roosevelt and Taft the receipts from customs were of paramount and vital importance from the revenue standpoint. They constituted at least half, and sometimes more, of the total revenues of the Government. As an instance, in the last year of the Roosevelt administration the receipts from customs were something more than $300,000,000 out of a total revenue of less than $600,000,000. In 1920 the receipts from customs were a trifle more, namely, about $320,000,000, but that was out of a total revenue for that year of $6,500,000,000. In other words, while during the normal years of recent Republican administrations the customs receipts have averaged 50 per cent of all the Government's income, to-day they are furnishing less than 5 per cent. One of the remarkable features of the present situation is that notwithstanding the fact that the war served as an absolute bar more effective than the highest sort of tariff against the importation of certain classes of commodities, the total value of imports in the past four or five years has increased enormously. In 1908 the total value of our imports was about $1,250,000,000. In 1920 it was more than $5,000,000,000. Another notable feature of the situation is that while in 1908 45 per cent of all our imports came in free of duty, to-day more than 75 per cent contribute nothing to the customs. In 1908 the average ad valorem rate on all imports was 22 per cent. To-day it is barely 6 per cent.

Under such conditions it would seem obvious that the customs would offer a fruitful field for increased revenue, so that the people might be relieved of some of the more onerous and oppressive of the tax burdens. The trouble about it is, in the first place, that a complete revision of the customs laws, based upon the protective principle, will not yield under anything like normal conditions an increased revenue of more than, in my judgment, $350,000,000, which under our present extravagant rate of Government expenditure would be relatively only a drop in the bucket. It is true that it would be possible to raise very large additional revenues from the customs if we adopted the principle of imposing duties on noncompeting articles, like tea and coffee, as Great Britain does, but that would be in violation of the protective principle, as I understand it, and one which, in my belief, the next Congress will under no circumstances adopt.

Looking at the revenue question from another and practical standpoint, no increase of the revenues from customs is possible without an entire revision of all the tariff schedules. Our experience during the present session has proved that piecemeal tariff revision, except in rare instances, is impractical if not impossible. The various tariff measures which we passed and sent to another body have not been acted on. With the possible exception of the dye bill and another measure which I hope we will pass to-morrow, but which has little or no bearing upon the revenue, I do not believe they will be acted on. So that we must dismiss for the immediate present the question of adding substantially to the revenues from customs.

This brings me to the second phase of the complications which add to the difficulties of a speedy revision of the tariff, and that is the enormous difficulty of accurately determining the costs of production of competing articles. The commerce of the world is out of joint. Industry abroad is in some countries completely paralyzed, in others in a condition of abnormality. In this country, the one least affected by the cataclysms of the World War, many industries are in entirely abnormal condition.

The principle of protection is founded upon the equalization of the relative costs of production of articles between this and the competing countries. Is it going to be possible under such conditions to arrive at the information upon which a thoroughly scientific protective tariff may be founded? I hope and believe that it may prove to be possible, but I see enormous difficulties in the way. I fear that it will be many months before a tariff law which will endure the tests of time and experience can be passed in both Houses and signed by the President.

In the meantime are we justified in passing any more tariff bills in this House? One, and one only, in my opinion. A bill will be brought before you to-morrow or the next day which is of the most vital importance and necessary, as I believe, to save from stark and certain ruin some of the most important agricultural interests of the country—but I shall reserve what I have to say on the subject until the bill is before us.

I come now to the third and, to my mind, the most important and complicated phase of the tariff question as it now confronts us, and one entirely unprecedented so far as my knowledge goes in tariff legislation. What shall we do, if anything, in the way of discrimination in favor of our late allies? If we do discriminate, shall it be from the unselfish standpoint of helping them along the road toward financial stability and industrial rehabilitation or from the more selfish standpoint of making their debts to us more easy of collection? At this point let us examine for a moment the present condition of our export trade. We used to consider a balance of trade in our favor as a feather in our cap, and rightly so, because it was an actual balance represented by cash money or adequate security. To-day, however, the balance is so enormous that it amounts almost to an embarrassment, and a large part of it is not settled for, nor does it seem possible that it will be settled for in anything like the near future. In the year before the beginning of the war our exports of merchandise were about $2,500,000,000. Our imports were about $1,800,000,000, leaving a balance of trade in our favor of approximately $700,000,000. In the last year of the war our exports had increased to more than $6,000,000,000 and our imports to $3,000,000,000, leaving a balance of trade in our favor of more than $3,000,000,000. The apparent excess of exports for the years of 1918 and 1919 and for the present year up to the last of September is very nearly $9,000,000,000. A part of this has been paid for in various ways—by loans, by credits granted by the Grain Corporation, the Shipping Board, and the War Department, by appropriations made by Congress for the relief of some of the European countries, by loans made by the War Finance Corporation to banks and individuals in this country to assist in financing exports, by shipments of gold, and by the sale here of foreign securities and the repurchase here of American securities formerly held in Europe—but, including all these, there still remains, as we were informed the other day by the Treasury Department, an unfunded balance of more than $3,000,000,000, for which there seems to be no possibility of settlement in cash for many years to come.

To-day Europe owes us close to $14,000,000,000, most of which is only informally secured. How is Europe going to pay us this enormous sum? That is a question that must be considered in the formation of a new tariff law.

The President says that Europe has one means, and one means only, for the payment of her debt to us, and that is by the importation and sale in this market of her goods, and for that purpose he says that all tariff or any other bars which prevent her selling freely in the American market ought to be removed. That was the principle he laid down in his message to Congress on the 2d of December, 1919. He states it as his opinion that Europe has but three ways of meeting these obligations: First, by the further extension of credits; second, by importation into this country of gold; and third, by the importation into this country of goods. The first two he eliminates as impracticable and impossible under existing conditions, and then in his message occurs this significant sentence:

> Anything, therefore, which would tend to prevent foreign countries from settling for our exports by shipments of goods into this country could only have the effect of preventing them from paying for our exports and therefore preventing the exports from being made.

The only logical conclusion to be drawn from this sentence is that there should be no tariff bars against the free importation into this country of goods by the debtor nations, and that even the insignificant bars erected by the Underwood law should be removed. The President then goes on to say:

> The productivity of the country, greatly stimulated by the war, must find an outlet by exports to foreign countries, and any measures taken to prevent imports will inevitably curtail exports.

The enactment into law of such a doctrine would, to my mind, bring utter ruin and complete disaster to American industry and American business. I concede, of course, that, as the President says, conditions have changed, but that they have changed to such an extent that we would be justified in abandoning the standards and policies of the past and forgetting our home market to enter into a mad scramble for the world's market I vigorously deny. [Applause on Republican side.] May I suggest that even if that were a wise policy we would cut a pretty sorry figure in our attempt to gain the world's market once we had lost our market here at home.

The retention of the home market, to my mind, is the prerequisite to the gaining of any influence or real power in the markets of the world. If we can not preserve our industries at home surely we can not compete with the industries of other countries, fortified with their cheap labor cost abroad. The ideal situation for America, as I conceive it, would be to produce here in sufficient quantities for American consumption every article which under our climatic conditions can be produced here at anything like a reasonable cost. Our experience during the war has shown the danger of being dependent upon other countries for things which are essential to our national security. As a direct result of the war certain industries have grown up here, like the chemical industry, for instance, upon which we must rely for absolute essentials for preparedness against external aggression. They are to-day on a most precarious basis—mere infants in their swaddling clothes—and it would seem to me little short of a national crime to permit their ruin for the sake merely of allowing certain other industries to get materials for the moment a little cheaper.

The House of Commons yesterday passed a bill, as I understand, almost exactly the same as the bill passed by this House for the protection of the dye and coal-tar product industry. Great Britain realizes that just as soon as normal international trade conditions are restored that the enormous accumulation of dyes and other coal-tar products in Germany will be dumped upon the world's market. The action of Great Britain yesterday, together with the action that has been taken by other countries, leaves America as the sole dumping ground for the tremendous accumulation of Germany, and unless we take action to protect it will bring absolute and complete ruin to the new chemical industry of this country. I think it is a most unfortunate condition that it is within the power of only a few men, as it seems to be, in another body to prevent by filibustering the passage of legislation absolutely necessary for the preservation of an industry in this country which is an essential for preparedness against war. If I may digress for just a moment, to my mind the same situation nearly is involved in one part of that bill we will consider to-morrow. I mean the wool question. In my judgment if something is not done for the protection of the wool industry—and the only means that I know of is the bill we will consider to-morrow—within three months there will not be any wool industry in this country. There will be hardly any sheep left. The liquidation of enormous loans that have been advanced on wool at the high prices can only be made in the next few months, if insisted upon, by the sale for slaughter of the mother sheep, and once we lose them we lose our reproductive power. I think it would be a most unfortunate thing if this House and if this Congress would permit the destruction of the wool industry of this country.

For myself I am willing to go to any reasonable extent to make the path toward financial and industrial rehabilitation of the stricken countries of Europe as easy as possible, but I balk at giving them free rein in the American market. I still cling firmly to the belief that the American market is primarily for the American producer and that once we lose it any effort to be a dominant figure in the world's market will come to naught.

I hope that Europe's tremendous debt to us will prove to be collectible. I am not one of those who believe that any part of the debt ought to be forgiven. I do not think it quite respectful to the debtor countries to assume that their debts, properly and honorably contracted, are not eventually to be paid in full. But if it came to the last ditch, if it should eventuate that the only possible way to collect these debts would be to surrender to the nations of the world the home market of America, I would say, "Let us sacrifice every cent of the money owed us rather than sacrifice our industrial independence." [Applause.]

May we for a moment examine the President's suggestion from an entirely unselfish point of view—that is to say, from the point of view of the Allies—from the point of view of making it as easy as possible for them to pay their debts to us by the freest possible importation of their goods. Would the lowering of the tariff bars against the world accomplish this result? Would the abandonment of any measures restricting importations into this country effected nominally in the interest of those countries which are our largest debtors redound in the end so much to their advantage as to the advantage of other countries who owe us nothing? It seems to me there is a fundamental fallacy in the affirmative side of that argument. Our principal debtors are Great Britain, France, Italy, and Belgium.

They owe us something between eight and nine billion dollars in loans, and probably between $2,500,000,000 and $3,0000,000,000 for exports. In all of these countries the cost of production and the price of labor is relatively high. To me it seems obvious that duties sufficiently low to invite large importations from these countries would invite even larger importations from the low-cost countries like Japan, and the Orient generally, and South America. Would not an invitation to the world to compete with entire freedom in the American market be in fact accepted by those countries whom we least desire to benefit, with the ultimate result not for the benefit of our late Allies and greatest debtors but in fact in their ultimate discomfiture?

If discrimination in favor of the debtor nations is to be a feature of our future tariff policy, there is one way to my mind by which it can be effectively accomplished, and that is through the medium of separate and reciprocal trade agreements. I can see difficulties in the way of such a policy, but to my mind they are by no means insurmountable. I can conceive that it might be greatly to the benefit of England or France or Italy or Belgium and not greatly to our detriment to permit them certain advantages over other countries in the shipment of certain kinds of goods into our market, in return for which it might be greatly to our benefit and not greatly to their detriment to receive in return certain advantages to American goods in their markets. Under such a policy we would not be giving something for nothing. Such arrangements would be and ought to be to our mutual advantage.

This country has never gone very far in the policy of reciprocity. Such reciprocal trade agreements as we have had with other nations have been of comparatively insignificant scope, and the efforts to bring about reciprocity with Canada, so unpopular both here and there, ultimately failed largely because of the ill-judged and in many respects the rather silly treaty that was negotiated for the purpose. The mere fact that the policy of reciprocal trade agreements has not been a success in the past does not necessarily argue that it may not be successfully achieved in the future, particularly under the unprecedented present condition of world affairs. I am not making this suggestion without the backing of high authority. The authority I shall quote from is that of one of America's best beloved Presidents—in his day the greatest living exponent of the protective-tariff principle. In the last speech he ever made, on the very day that he was struck down by the hand of an assassin, the 5th of September, 1901, President McKinley, at the Buffalo Exposition, said:

By sensible trade arrangements which will not interrupt our home production we shall extend the outlets for our increasing surplus, a system which provides a mutual exchange of commodities. A mutual exchange is manifestly essential to the continued and healthful growth of our export trade. We must not repose in fancied security that we can forever sell everything and buy little or nothing. If such a thing were possible, it would not be best for us or for those with whom we deal. We should take from our customers such of their products as we can use without harm to our industries and labor. Reciprocity is the natural outgrowth of our wonderful industrial development under the domestic policy now firmly established. What we produce beyond our domestic consumption must have a vent abroad. The excess must be relieved through a foreign outlet, and we should sell everywhere we can and buy wherever the buying will enlarge our sales and productions, and thereby make a greater demand for home labor.

Those were the words of a statesman, of a far-seeing man, who could project himself into the future, and to my mind they outline the policy which could well be applied to conditions as they exist to-day. The policy then enunciated by President McKinley and that suggested a year ago by President Wilson are as different as white is from black.

McKinley insisted upon the complete preservation of the home market as the prerequisite for the making of any arrangement with any foreign nation under which they might have certain advantages in dealing in our market, and that only under condition that we should have certain advantages in dealing in theirs. President Wilson proposes that we take down the bars against the world in order to enable certain nations of Europe to dispose of $13,000,000,000 worth of goods here.

Against such a policy the American people have recorded themselves, as I interpret the result of the recent election, by an emphatic and tremendous majority. We have received no specific instructions with regard to the adoption of the policy laid down by President McKinley, but I believe it to be in no way inconsistent with the instructions we have received, and that if we shall determine to legislate so far as the tariff is concerned with a view to making the debts of the Allies more easy of collection that it is through reciprocal trade agreements that we can best and most effectively accomplish it.

We are in the midst of abnormal times. We are called upon to legislate under unprecedented conditions. We have become the leading creditor nation of the world, the largest creditor that the world has ever known or even dreamed of, and that must be taken into consideration in the formulation of an American tariff policy and program, but with the full realization of these conditions I adhere rigidly to the belief that there is nothing inconsistent in retaining our home market and at the same time occupying a position of commanding influence in the markets of the world. [Applause.] In fact, I am unable to imagine how we can hope to successfully compete with other nations in the world's market unless we retain a commanding position in our market here at home. I am prepared to go far to help those nations toward financial and industrial rehabilitation who have suffered far more than we as a result of the war, particularly those whose soldiers fought side by side with us for the preservation of Christian civilization, but I insist that it must never be at the sacrifice of the industrial independence of America. [Applause.]

HOSPITAL TREATMENT OF DISEASED ALIEN SEAMEN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MADDEN). For what purpose does the gentleman from Washington rise?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I rise to move to take from the Speaker's table House bill 7930, with Senate amendments, and agree to the Senate amendments.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill, with the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the hill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7930) to provide for the treatment in hospital of diseased alien seamen.

The Senate amendments were read.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed by the House on July 30, 1919. It is a necessary measure, in my opinion, growing out of certain conditions in the Department of Labor connected with the examination of sick sailors, in order that part of the expense of their maintenance shall be borne by the owners of foreign ships coming to these ports bringing the sailors.

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; but I thought I would make a brief statement first.

Mr. HICKS. I would be glad if the gentleman would make a statement, because I am free to confess that I do not know what is the purpose of this bill and what these amendments do.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I will try to explain them. Let me read the bill. It is a short bill. It was passed, as I said, July 30, 1919. The reading of the amendments by the Clerk did not make it clear. The bill provides—

That alien seamen found on arrival in ports of the United States to be afflicted with any of the disabilities or diseases mentioned in section 35 of the act of February 5, 1917, entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens to, and the residence of aliens in, the United States," shall be placed in a hospital designated by the immigration official in charge at the port of arrival and treated, all expenses connected therewith, including burial in the event of death, to be borne by the owner, agent, consignee, or master of the vessel, and not to be deducted from the seamen's wages, and no such vessel shall be granted clearance until such expenses are paid or their payment appropriately guaranteed and the collector of customs so notified by the immigration official in charge.

Now comes the principal Senate amendment:

Alien seamen suspected of being afflicted with any such disability or disease may be removed from the vessel on which they arrive to an immigration station or other appropriate place for such observation as will enable the examining surgeons definitely to determine whether or not they are so afflicted, all expenses connected therewith to be borne in the manner hereinbefore prescribed.

Then the bill continues:

In cases in which it shall appear to the satisfaction of the immigration official in charge that it will not be possible within a reasonable time to effect a cure, the return of the alien seamen shall be enforced on or at the expense of the vessel on which they came, upon such conditions as the Commissioner General of Immigration, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor, shall prescribe, to insure that the aliens shall be properly cared for and protected, and that the spread of contagion shall be guarded against.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield there?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. HICKS. The bill provides that the aliens shall be returned after a certain time after the disability has arisen and shipped back home. By whom was the expense to be borne before that time?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. By the ship that brings the crews. Every man lined up on the ship's papers is part of the crew, and if a man falls sick on the voyage the ship takes care of him, but the laws and the regulations fail to provide that certain of these seamen who become afflicted here shall be cared for at the expense of the shipowners. We have a regulation here that requires an examination by the United States medical officers and setting them aside in case they have certain diseases, contagious or loathsome, and thereupon they are treated on the ship or in our hospitals.

Mr. HICKS. Who pays the expense?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The foreign ships. But in certain cases the alien seaman is permitted to step out on payment of $50. The hearings were held a couple of years ago, and I do not quite recall the details; but at any rate we find that certain alien seamen, afflicted by both contagious and loathsome diseases in the United States, are transferred to the marine hospitals to be treated at the expense of our Government. A year ago when we passed this act, the statement indicated that the saving to the Government of the United States at that time would be from $200,000 annually on up, depending, of course, on the number.

Mr. HICKS. Does this provide that the expense shall be borne as it is now? Does the bill put the expense on the shipowner instead of on the Marine Hospital Service?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. This provides that the sick alien seaman shall remain in the charge of the immigration officials and not permitted to step out if they are sick, and if incurable must go back in the vessel on which they shipped.

Mr. HICKS. In other words, they are maintained at the expense of the shipowner until they are given a clean bill of health and discharged?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; discharged from the hospital. That is the whole purpose of the bill. It will result in a saving of money, and will put the sick sailors in charge of the Public Health officials.

Mr. HICKS. Does the gentleman think that this bill will supersede the La Follette Act in regard to certain provisions?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No. This takes care of the health provision, and turns over to the owners of the ships the care of those men that come in. If we care for the sailor who is sick, the owners of the ship will be responsible. That provision is partly in the immigration law now. This perfects it.

Mr. FOCHT. Does that include both foreign ships and American ships?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. American ships take care of their sick seamen.

Mr. FOCHT. But under the provisions of this bill both will be included?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; this bill refers to alien seamen.

Mr. DENISON. I want to ask the gentleman from Washington a question. Did I understand him to say a moment ago that the immigration laws do not now cover members of crews that leave their ships and stay in this country, when they are foreigners?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Not entirely. To make that clear to the gentleman I would have to read from the regulations of the Immigration Service, put out for the guidance of immigration officials in an effort to handle alien sailors and seamen. Rule 10 is headed, "Who are seamen." Subdivision 4 of that rule provides for the medical examination, and that covers a page of regulations, in an effort to determine just how a sick alien sailor or seaman shall be handled, either on his ship or in the immigration station or at the hospital.

Th's is a bill made necessary after an attempt to carry out these things, in order to save the United States anywhere from $200,000 annually on up, according to the number of sick sailors from alien ships. That is all there is to it.

Mr. DENISON. Let me ask one more question while I am on my feet. Does the law which we recently passed repeal any part of the La Follette Act?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. No; the La Follette Act was specially exempted.

I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON], in a general way, has given the House the benefit of the investigation of the committee upon this subject. The original bill was reported out unanimously by the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization and passed by the House without a dissenting vote.

The first amendment of the Senate is simply a clerical one. The second is a just one, providing that, notwithstanding the sailor is in hospital, during the time he is there none of his wages shall be deducted by the hospital authorities or the United States.

The second provision is that, notwithstanding the seaman has not left his vessel and has not attempted to enter the United States, nevertheless the immigration officials may go upon the vessel and remove this seaman from the vessel while it remains in United States waters if this seaman is afflicted with a disease that might be spread if he were permitted to enter this country. In both instances, when he comes voluntarily or when he is taken off the ship by the immigration officials, he is removed to a hospital and all of the expenses while he is in that hospital, medical and otherwise, are paid by the ship that brought him to the shores of the United States.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Suppose his illness is the direct result of his own misconduct. Do you mean to say that you can not take any of his wages in part payment for his treatment?

Mr. RAKER. Not if he has a contagious or loathsome disease.

Mr. McDUFFIE. This only applies to that?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Suppose a man were to get sick or disabled or hurt as the result of his own carelessness?

Mr. RAKER. This does not apply to that. This applies only to one who has a contagious or loathsome disease. It is not only for his benefit, but for the benefit of the port which the ship has entered; it is a protection to the Government of the United States and it insures his care and attention. It saves the Government from paying the expense and compels the ship that brought him here to pay the expense. This has been practically carried out to some extent, but there is some question between the Department of Labor, of which the Bureau of Immigration is a part, and the shipowners as to whether the burden should all fall on the shipowners. It is provided by this bill, as it should have been originally, that the shipowner must bear all the expenses. The committee are in favor of these amendments, and the bill ought to pass.

Mr. DENISON. Does the gentleman think that provision is fair and just?

Mr. RAKER. Absolutely.

Mr. DENISON. Suppose the sailor leaves the ship for shore leave and contracts the disease here in America?

Mr. RAKER. He can not do that very well.

Mr. DENISON. Why not?

Mr. RAKER. He comes out under his card, and is to be returned to this ship. The only way that he can fail to go back is by desertion, and the question is whether you can find him or not. It might be hard to determine, in the case of a deserter, where the disease was contracted. This provision is not for the deserter. It is for the man who belongs to the crew of the ship, and who is going to sail when the ship sails, and not the man who deserts. So it is clearly, legitimately, and honestly a debt which the steamship company ought to pay, and be compelled in advance to give bond for that purpose.

Mr. DENISON. Suppose a man should leave the ship afterwards, as he would have a perfect right to do under the La Follette law. He would not be a deserter, but he would have a right to leave the ship.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Certainly. He has that right.

Mr. RAKER. He has the right to leave the ship under certain conditions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. But not to desert the ship.

Mr. RAKER. But not to desert the ship, and if he does, and he is found out on shore, he is then deported under the law.

Mr. DENISON. But suppose he is not a deserter?

Mr. RAKER. I think it is nothing more than just. In the case of any sailor who comes to the United States and gets the benefit of the seamen's act and of our immigration law, and contracts one of these diseases, the steamship company whose employee he is shall be responsible, as it ought to be responsible, for his hospital care and attention, and that is the purpose of this bill.

This is a bill in behalf of the United States as well as for the protection of the people. I thank the gentleman and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4588. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Bowie and Cass, State of Texas, for construction of a bridge across Sulphur River at or near Pettis Bridge on State Highway No. 8, in said counties and State;

S. 4587. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Brooks and Lowndes, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge over the Withlacoochee River; and

S. 4519. An act to authorize the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, its successors and assigns, to construct and maintain a bridge across the Alabama River at or near a point approximately 4 miles from the city of Montgomery, Ala.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 212) directing the War Finance Corporation to take certain action for the relief of the present depression in the agricultural sections of the country, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4588. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Bowie and Cass, State of Texas, for construction of a bridge across Sulphur River at or near Pettis Bridge on State Highway No. 8, in said counties and State; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4541. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across the Susquehanna River at Harrisburg, Pa.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. 4587. An act granting the consent of Congress to the counties of Brooks and Lowndes, in the State of Georgia, to construct a bridge over the Withlacoochee River; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

OPPORTUNITIES TO ACQUIRE RURAL HOMES.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged resolution from the Committee on Rules.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 544.

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution the House shall resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3477, a bill "to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes." There shall be one hour and a half of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands and one-half to be controlled by the ranking minority member of that committee. At the conclusion of general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule, whereupon the bill shall be reported to the House with amendments, if any, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] whether he wants any time on the rule?

Mr. GARRETT. I would like a little time on the rule. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman from Ohio to let us have not exceeding 30 minutes on this side? If we do not use it, we will yield it back.

Mr. FESS. We had hoped to get through with less than that time.

Mr. GARRETT. The discussion, I apprehend, will be devoted to the bill and not to the resolution. There is no objection to the form of the resolution, but I should be very glad if the gentleman would agree to let us have 30 minutes.

Mr. FESS. The rule provides for an hour and a half debate.

Mr. GARRETT. Yes; but we would like to have 30 minutes on this side on the rule.

Mr. FESS. Would it be agreeable to the gentleman to reduce the time for general debate?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not feel authorized to agree to that. This was agreed to in the Committee on Rules and I would hardly like to take the responsibility.

Mr. FESS. Very well; we will agree to 30 minutes.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me for a moment before he begins, this is really an important and far-reaching matter, if I interpret it correctly, and I feel like the Members of the House ought to hear the discussion of it. I therefore make the point that no quorum is present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point that no quorum is present. Evidently there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Doorkeeper was directed to close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms to notify the absentees, and the Clerk to call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MADDEN). On this vote 264 Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk, to have pending.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. FESS: After the word "Resolution" strike out the words "the House shall" and insert "it shall be in order to move that the House."

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that debate upon the rule be limited to one hour, one-half of that time to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and one-half by myself, and that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered on both the rule and the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that debate upon the rule be limited to one hour, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] and one-half by himself, and that at the end of that time the previous question be considered as ordered on both the rule and the amendment. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

PRINTING OF TARIFF STATISTICS, ETC.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of three resolutions, providing for the printing of matter for the use of the Ways and Means Committee, being the printing of hearings, some statistics, and a summary of statistics.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to have considered at this time three resolutions referred to. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman whether or not in this summary of statistics there are to be printed the figures on the number of millions of pounds of frozen beef that are being sent to the United States every year from foreign countries, and the number of millions of pounds of hides sent in every year, duty free?

Mr. FORDNEY. This summary of statistics will show all imports and exports, and the values and the countries whence they come.

Mr. BLANTON. And the oil cake.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think that is all in the summary.

Mr. BLANTON. That competes with our southern farmers.

Mr. FORDNEY. I think it is there; yes—something in which the gentleman will be very much interested.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolutions?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the first resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 68, to print summary of tariff information, 1920, as a House document, with 7,500 additional copies.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the summary of tariff information, 1920, prepared for the use of the Ways and Means Committee, be printed as a House document, and that 7,500 additional copies be printed, of which 4,000 shall be for the use of the House, 2,000 for the Senate, 1,000 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, and 500 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the gentleman that it is not proper for the House to pass a resolution reading, "Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring)." It should be "Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring)."

Mr. FORDNEY. That is evidently a clerical error, and I ask unanimous consent that that change be made.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the Clerk making the change suggested?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 624, to authorize the Committee on Ways and Means to have printed 2,500 copies each of its hearings.

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is hereby empowered to procure the printing of 2,500 copies each of its hearings for the use of the said committee, and the usual number of copies shall not be printed in addition thereto.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. In preparing these copies of hearings for the Committee on Ways and Means, has the committee determined to send a copy to each Member of the House as printed?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; every day that the print comes out we will send a copy to every Member of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 69, to print statistics of imports and duties, 1908 to 1918, inclusive, as a House document, with 4,250 additional copies.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That statistics of imports and duties from 1908 to 1918, inclusive, prepared for the use of the Committee on Ways and Means, be printed as a House document, and that 4,250 additional copies be printed, of which 2,500 shall be for the use of the House, 1,000 for the Senate, 500 for the Committee on Ways and Means of the House, and 250 for the Committee on Finance of the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

OPPORTUNITIES TO ACQUIRE RURAL HOMES.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, toward the close of the last session Senate bill 3477 was presented to the Committee on Rules, to be made in order for immediate consideration. The Rules Committee acted upon it, but in the pressure of public business at the close of the session the House could not take it up. It is now presented for immediate consideration. That is all the rule does.

This is a reclamation measure, and we have thought that reclamation is one of the commanding interests of the country. I think everybody must have been impressed with the general drift away from the rural life into the urban life, and it has been one of the problems of the Nation to know how to enlarge upon the productive area in order to supply the foodstuffs that a constantly increasing consuming public will demand. I have thought frequently that that would be our greatest problem, that while consumption is bound to grow by leaps and bounds production can only grow either by an increase of acreage or an increase of production to the acre, through intensive cultivation.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FESS. In a moment. The time will come when the increase in acreage will be at an end. It is not now, because millions of acres are lying in a useless state, either because of lack of drainage that would make them cultivatable or else because of the lack of water on large areas of arid land, which through irrigation could be made to blossom as the rose. It seems to me one of the biggest problems before the country to-day is to know how to increase the tillable acreage. Usually these propositions carry with them an immense appropriation and for that reason are always resisted, a good many times unwisely.

Here is a proposition that carries no expenditure whatever from the Federal Government, and it is no more than to put at the disposal the trained engineers already in the employ of the Government to go over this land and make a report as to whether they are hopeless waste or whether the possibility is such that they can be made to be cultivated, and for that reason as well as the general proposition that irrigation where it is feasible is justifiable. For the reason that there is no cost to the Federal Government, I do not hesitate to report the resolution. Now I will yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. BEGG. I should like to ask the gentleman, if he will permit, two or three questions. In the first place, am I correct in assuming that this is an investigation or rather a development of private property absolutely?

Mr. FESS. In a way it would be so regarded, but we are justified in it because of the great demand for the increase of the cultivated area, and if we could stimulate it without expense to the Government it would be a function that I think the Government would be justified in undertaking.

Mr. BEGG. It is a development of private property regardless of whether justified or not, is it not?

Mr. FESS. I am of the opinion——

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. BEGG. I would rather have the gentleman from Ohio answer without interruption.

Mr. SINNOTT. If the gentleman will yield.

Mr. BEGG. I would rather not——

Mr. SINNOTT. It is not a development of private property for the benefit of the owner of the private property. His surplus land above the farm unit must be disposed of and sold at a price fixed by the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BEGG. In view of the statement of the gentleman I would like to ask another question. If that is the fact, and he is not to receive any benefit financially from these investigations and the development process, why not turn over this land to the Government and let it be developed as a Government proposition? As I read the last part of the bill it says that it shall be sold at the actual cost of the land and development thereof plus a definite reasonable profit to the owner. Now, I do not see any argument, as far as I am concerned, for developing private property at Government expense. There is no provision in there to pay these engineers and if we have more engineers in the Department of the Interior than we can find work for, why not discharge them? Now, there is no provision to pay them their salary, and after the project is developed it is to be sold at a price and the owners get the profit. Now, we are shy on oil in this country and gasoline. If I have a big tract of land why is not the Government justified in going out and experimenting for oil as well as in developing wild, arid land?

Mr. FESS. I recognize the strength of the observation made by my colleague, but he draws a conclusion from an erroneous premise in that he assumes the money is supplied by the Government. The money must be advanced by the persons whose interests are thus to be enhanced and the Government can not be at any loss whatever——

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. FESS (continuing). In the utilization of the expert engineers.

Mr. BEGG. Will the gentleman yield for a definite question?

Mr. FESS. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. BEGG. Is it implied by this act that the private individual will pay the salaries and transportation of governmental engineers?

Mr. FESS. I so understand.

Mr. BEGG. Well, it does not say so, if the gentleman will read it.

Mr. FESS. Well, I so understand. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I should be very glad if I could have the attention of Members for a few moments upon this very important bill. I very much hope that this rule will be defeated, because I do not think the bill should be considered; but, if the rule shall prevail and the bill is considered, I hope that it will be defeated. I can hardly believe that if this House comes to a full understanding of what is involved in this measure that it will knowingly consent to breathe the breath of life into the principle which runs through it. I want to read a little from the report of the committee. The report says, "The bill is unique among reclamation measures," and that is true. The report says, "It is unique in the fact that it calls for no money from the Treasury." If that were correct, which it is not, it would not be the only reason in which it is unique. So far as I know the Congress has never committed itself at any time to a proposition that one of the governmental agencies shall enter into the improvement of private property solely for the purpose of private gain to the owner of that property, and that is all that this measure is, Mr. Speaker, and so it is unique in that. This measure might be more properly entitled a bill "to make the Secretary of the Interior a real estate agent." It is idle to say that this proposition is not going to cost the Government anything. Do you tell me that it is proposed to use the engineer force of the Government, men officially employed by the Government, to make these investigations and to have them paid by private funds? If that be the case, is that a sound principle of government? These investigations will be made by engineers who will be upon the rolls of the Department of the Interior. Is it sound government to have them paid by private interests while doing work provided for under the law of the Congress? I can not think so.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Then, following that, to give their official sanction as engineers in the employ of the Government to some real estate project that these landowners may have to advance?

Mr. GARRETT. Absolutely, and that is the inevitable result of this bill and purpose of it.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I will yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. We now have agricultural experiment agents going over the country teaching farmers' wives how to make cottage cheese; we have others showing them how to cultivate and harvest the best kind of agricultural products. This is merely an extension of that program.

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, the gentleman, I think, has confused two matters that are not related. At any rate, those gentlemen are paid out of the Federal Treasury.

I do not know what interests were responsible for the presentation of this measure. I do not, of course, mean to imply that there was anything sinister in the minds of those who were responsible for it, but I do not hesitate to say that it is one of the most open, bold efforts to secure governmental aid in the boosting of the price and the value of private property that I have witnessed since I have been a Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield to just a suggestion?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. KINKAID. The able ex-Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, states in the report that he makes that by going through this process the large profits made by private landowners and private land speculators will be prevented, implying that they have sold at a profit too great heretofore, and thus making it impossible for persons of limited means to buy their homes, so that he will limit the profit made by the landowner to a reasonable profit and thus enable persons of limited means to secure homes. It is to cut down profits rather than to foster profits.

Mr. GARRETT. Does the gentleman from Nebraska share in that opinion?

Mr. KINKAID. Decidedly.

Mr. GARRETT. I should like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska how you are going to interfere with the profits of the individual unless he goes into this scheme?

Mr. KINKAID. Because he makes a contract before the beginning of the investigation to abide by the decision of the Secretary of the Interior and puts up the money in advance for the making of the investigation, so that he is bound by a contract to abide by the decision of the Secretary of the Interior in the administration of that law.

Mr. GARRETT. Oh, certainly, if he enters into a contract. But the gentleman knows very well that a man is not going to enter into this proposition unless he believes at the time he enters into it that it is to be profitable to him. That is human nature, and I do not blame the man, and I do not say that by way of criticism.

Mr. KINKAID. Pardon me, but most of the land to be reclaimed will consist of small farms, which the farmers will want to retain and not sell at all, most of them. In the case of large tracts the surplus will be secured under the clause we have referred to. There are 400,000 acres of my district that they have talked about bringing in under this bill—just tentatively—since the bill was up, and I had nothing to do with originating it at all. There will be no large tracts in it, but they will want to irrigate for the purpose of doubling the yield per acre and retain the land.

Mr. GARRETT. If the gentleman will pardon me, he is speaking about a thing that is in his mind, and I am speaking of actual possibilities under this bill and of the principle that is involved in it, which, in my opinion, is violative of sound governmental practices, namely, the use of the Government's credit by private individuals, and the use of the Government's money, in a measure, because it is idle to say that this thing is not going to cost the Government anything; it is bound to cost the Government something. It is wrong to use the Government's money, and to use the Government's credit, and to use the Government's prestige for private profit.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I thank you very much for yielding. I am endeavoring to learn what is the purpose of this bill, and I will thank you if you will enlighten me. It seems to me to authorize the Government to help a man sell land that is of no use to him.

Mr. GARRETT. I do not know whether that accurately describes it or not. I am not a member of the legislative committee before which this bill came, but it came before the Committee on Rules, and what I have learned about it I learned in the Committee on Rules when a rule was sought by the proponents of this bill before that committee. What was stated there was the plan immediately in the mind of the landowners in some sections of the country, including the arid sections of the West, and it was also suggested that in sections of the South drainage propositions might be promoted. It was the purpose to bring about an organization of the private landowners, and that organization would turn over to the Secretary of the Interior their lands under an agreement that parts of them should be sold at a certain price after they were reclaimed, the sale price including all profits, of course, to go to the owners. Thereupon the lands would be investigated by the engineers, who would be Government officials, and the Government's sanction and the Government's advertising, so to speak, would be placed behind the lands when they were thrown upon the market.

Mr. BUTLER. Then is not my conception about right in the light of what the gentleman has said? This land is of no use to the owners, and the Government steps in and improves it, so that the owners can get rid of it.

Mr. HUSTED. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. HUSTED. Is this land to be sold by the owner or by the Secretary of the Interior on account of the owner? If it is to be sold by the owner, it is palpably clear that the Secretary of the Interior could not control either the price or the profits, because there are a dozen ways in which the owner could avoid it.

Mr. GARRETT. It is provided that the landowner at the time of placing his land under the control of the Secretary of the Interior shall agree to the price at which the part he is willing to sell is to be sold after it is reclaimed, and that, I suppose, would be binding upon him.

Mr. BEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. BEE. The owner having entered into a contract with the Secretary of the Interior, subsequently, for some reason of his own, or for no reason, decides not to go on with the contract. Does the Government have to bring suit against the Secretary of the Interior to enforce the contract?

Mr. GARRETT. This bill makes no provision to cover such a contingency.

Mr. BEE. What would be the result then?

Mr. GARRETT. The result would be endless confusion and endless litigation, in my opinion.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. From the standpoint of the contention that it will not increase the cost to the Government, I assume that the Reclamation Service is provided at the present time with only such engineers and officers as they actually need for the performance of their duty. Would not this bill enormously increase the demand for the service of those men?

Mr. GARRETT. I should think so. The advocates of the bill, however, insist that the salaries of these additional engineers will be paid out of the private fund raised by the landowners. That is their answer. I say that in fairness to them. In response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama, I say that, in my opinion, that is extremely objectionable. We do not want men on the Government pay roll doing work directed by an act of Congress who are paid by private individuals or interests, no matter who or what they may be.

Mr. BANKHEAD. If that were not done, necessarily it would involve an additional expenditure.

Mr. GARRETT. Certainly.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Under the provisions of this bill the money is to be paid into the Treasury to cover this extra expense. Will not that inevitably impose extra work upon the Treasury Department?

Mr. GARRETT. It is expressly provided that the money shall be paid out only by an authorized fiscal officer of the Government. Of course, it would impose extra work upon the Treasury Department.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the beginning of section 4—that every contract for development of a project shall provide, among other things, that the developed farms, tracts, and parcels less a farm or home unit reserved to the owner, shall be sold to persons who desire to occupy the same as homes,

Who is to determine what that home unit shall be, whether 40 acres or 160 acres or what?

Mr. GARRETT. That is not provided in the bill, and there is where the possibility of very great injustice to the Government arises, because there is no one to determine what shall be a proper unit, and the owner might say that he wanted all of his land back as a proper unit after it had been improved by the Government.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. In other words, he might get 1,000 acres improved and then say he needed that much as a home unit?

Mr. GARRETT. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. CARAWAY. If he should fail to sell, or if the price set is more than the land will bring, what is to become of it?

Mr. GARRETT. There is absolutely no provision in the bill for determining that question in any way whatever.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Will the gentleman tell us what constitutional warrant there is for this kind of legislation?

Mr. GARRETT. I do not think there is any. But it has become rather academic, perhaps one might almost say obsolete, to raise constitutional questions.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. It would seem that the Constitution not only has no friends in the House but no acquaintances either. [Laughter.]

Mr. HICKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HICKS. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] rather anticipated my question. Do I understand that the Secretary of the Interior is to be the sole judge of the amount of land which is in excess of the needs of the owner?

Mr. GARRETT. This bill does not define it. There is no authority provided here with the power to declare what shall be a farm or home unit.

Mr. HICKS. It would seem to me that if a man had his farm irrigated he would claim that there was no excess land; he would want all of it, unless he wanted to sell it as a land speculation for a profit.

Mr. GARRETT. That would seem to be a very reasonable conclusion to draw.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. I call the attention of the gentleman to page 2, lines 3, 4, and 5, in which reference is made to "farms" and "tracts" to be retained, of "suitable size."

Mr. HICKS. What is a suitable size?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. It might be 160 acres or it might be 500 acres. It would depend on the location and character of the land and the purpose for which it was to be used.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT. I yield to the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. I have an indistinct recollection that there is a criminal statute that prohibits governmental employees receiving compensation from private citizens. This bill does not either directly or by implication repeal that statute. How are they going to use these engineers? They would possibly be sent to the penitentiary if they were used. Is it not necessary to have an amendment to the bill?

Mr. GARRETT. I should think so if the gentleman is correct as to the law, and it is my impression that he is correct, and that is a question which I am very glad the gentleman has raised.

Mr. WINGO. That is a very beautiful proposition to go into. I do not want a little thing like that to mar the harmony of the operation of this law.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. BUTLER. Before the gentleman yields the floor I want to apologize for having asked him the question I did, because I find the purpose of the bill explained on page 3 of the report:

> In financing it they will enjoy the benefit of the fact that able and disinterested engineers, economists, and administrators, representing the Reclamation Service, the greatest engineering organization in the world with 17 years' experience in the reclamation of arid lands, has approved the project. The financing may be accomplished under either a public or a private corporation. In either case, it will be done in accordance with State laws. In no case does the Government assume any responsibility beyond the exercise of its powers of supervision and direction.

In other words, they will indorse the thing, so that other people may come in and make the purchase.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time. How much time have I used.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has used 20 minutes.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID], the chairman of the committee.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, the bill comes here from the Senate. It was referred to the House Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands. It was carefully considered and unanimously reported. Every member of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands supported the motion to report it with the recommendation that it do pass, as I remember.

Previous to the passage of the general reclamation law irrigation under private enterprise failed in a large measure. Why? Because the engineers employed in many cases were inexperienced. These projects were bonded. The bonds were sold in the market, but because the work of the engineers on some of the projects had been inaccurate and that in some cases the propositions were not feasible, the bonds became worthless. Thus irrigation by private enterprise became discredited and the bonds issued unsalable.

Now, the Government under the reclamation act passed in 1902 has been irrigating public lands and thereby providing homes for homesteaders. Over $100,000,000 has been raised from the sale of public lands and $20,000,000 of bonds authorized to defray the cost. In fact, $150,000,000 has been invested because the fund is a revolving fund and it can be invested over and over again as paid back by water users.

These projects are paying back the money invested, and some of them raise crops of greater value each year than the project cost. For instance, the Salt River project, Arizona, raises two and one-half times as much annually as the project cost, and besides, the power developed incidentally by the irrigation will pay for the cost of the project.

The crop reports of the Secretary of the Interior for this year show a gross value of crops raised on 1,114,000 acres of $89,000,000, an average of nearly $80 per acre, including all the poor crops with the better crops, the work of the unskilled irrigator with that of the experienced irrigator. Taking quite a number of the better projects and omitting the poorer ones, an average of $100 per acre in crops for 1919 is ascertained. The Salt River project, to which I have just referred, averaged $126.27 per acre. The Yuma project, connecting Arizona and California, averaged $134 per acre. The Okanogan project in Washington reached the phenomenal production of $367.23 an acre, according to the report of the Secretary of the Interior, and I apprehend the crop consisted largely of apples, as they raise in that region some of the finest apples produced in the world. Accordingly, the reclamation of arid lands by the Government has been the most profitable internal improvement scheme our country has ever known. Our remaining public lands are nearly or soon will be exhausted. The Government and taxpayers are so encumbered and burdened by a great bonded war indebtedness that appropriations from the Treasury can not be spared to supplement the inadequate reclamation fund derivable from the sale of public lands.

Here are the people with lands of their own who are ready to irrigate their holdings at their own expense. The bill provides that the Government shall not expend one dollar, but the owner of the land is required to pay in advance into the United States Treasury for the irrigation afforded him. Will the Government, which has been paternalistic more or less under the reclamation act of 1902, help private landowners to irrigate at their own expense? Will the Congress permit them to increase the production of the country in foodstuffs so much needed at their own expense, letting them have nothing more than the service of the skilled engineers of the Reclamation Bureau?

Will not the Congress help the people to help themselves at their own expense? Some gentlemen oppose this bill because they say it is paternalistic, in face of the fact that the owner of the land pays all the cost in advance, yet make no criticism of the general reclamation law which requires all the money expended to be furnished by the Government and the water users pay back in installments covering a period of 20 years, without interest. I regard the reclamation law of 1902 as very beneficent and justified by a sound public policy. What the pending bill asks of the Government is insignificant as compared with the liberal provisions of the act of 1902. I respectfully challenge the logic and consistency of that attitude. The engineers in the Reclamation Service have become skillful, accurate, and reliable, so that projects taken up under this bill with these experienced engineers would be feasible and safe and the bonds issued to pay the cost would be marketable. The bonds of the irrigation districts formed under State laws would sell in the market because the people would know that the engineering done was reliable. [Applause.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINKAID. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. What has become of the Mondell-Lane bill?

Mr. KINKAID. That was reported out by the Committee on Public Lands and is now on the proper calendar, I believe.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, at the last session of the Congress, in the closing hours, I objected to the consideration of this bill under unanimous consent, and I did it for this reason: There has been no section of the United States which amounts to any great deal which has been developed by the Government at the expense of the private individual. We have now face to face with us the proposition that there are private lands, bought at a song, or I suppose at a very cheap price, which the Government is asked to go upon and develop in the way of furnishing engineers. It is said that the Government is not to pay the engineers, but the bill provides that it is. I want to cite the advocates and friends of this bill to this fact.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I can not yield. The great State of Illinois, one of the richest agricultural countries in the United States, has been developed and drained by private initiative, and at one time it was as hopeless a proposition from an agricultural standpoint as any other part of the country, simply because of water. We have thousands of acres in Ohio that are not in agricultural use, and the advocates of this bill come up and say they want the Government to contract, and they will pay the bill to pull the stumps off it. That kind of a proposition is an insult to every man who lived 50 years ago or less than 50 years ago. I myself have helped clean many an acre of stumps in order that it might be planted to agricultural products. This kind of proposition is purely socialistic. It is the most radical departure from a proper governmental function that was founded on republicanism that we have ever had to face in this House.

It is paternalistic, and if we continue with a few more propositions such as we have been considering during the past two or three days, it will not be long before some fellow will be in here advocating a bill to furnish everybody in the United States with a meal ticket and have it charged to the Treasury of the United States. I want to say to you people here in Congress, and I say it to you seriously, that the United States never developed from the raw country that she was, from the day of the wax candle and the tallow dip down to the electric light, by doing for the citizen what he ought to do for himself. We have run wild in asking the Government to do this, to do that, and to do the other thing.

I want to read the last part of this bill. It is said that it is not to cost the Government anything; that it is to be developed and then to be sold; to be sold at a profit, and that profit is to be paid to the owner. The bill provides as follows:

> All contracts for the purchase of farms and parcels shall be made for, and the moneys due thereunder shall be payable to, the owner or owners of the land or their assigns.

Why, my good friends, there is not a bit of difference between that proposition and such a one as this: Let us say that I own some land down in Kentucky or in Ohio which is supposed to be underlined with coal mines. It will cost money to develop them. But the idea under consideration now is that I should come in here with a bill and ask the Government of the United States to send its geological engineers down there to develop that coal land and, if they found coal, to sell it, but to give me the contract and pay all of the moneys to me.

I want to ask the Republican side of this House, Where have you been going in the past few days? You passed a bill a day or two ago to do one thing and now propose to bring up one to-morrow turning around and offsetting the first one, and in between you come and ask that the Government go out West and develop agricultural lands and give the proceeds of the sale to the man who owns the land, who bought it in its crude state, who did not put a dollar of effort or money into it, and who yet asks for the profit on the sale of it after the Government has spent its money in the development of it and sent its engineers there and paid their salaries. I say to you that there never was a ranker Republican proposition presented to Congress. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wyoming is recognized for six minutes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the views that certain very estimable gentlemen hold, conditions change and the world do move. I think we all admit, as suggested by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] that one of the greatest problems before this people, one of the greatest problems before the people of every nation in the world in time to come, will be that of encouraging a return to the lands, an increase of farm homes and farm life, an increase of farm production. We are feeling the need of it in America to-day, when our population is constantly drifting to the cities, to the bright lights, and away from the land and the good sound homely influences that flow from it. There have been a great many suggestions as to the way in which the Federal Government may properly encourage the tendency back to the farm, may properly encourage the development of areas that now lie unused, many of them not far from the great centers of population. A great many have suggested that the Federal Government shall loan great sums of money for this purpose. I do not know but that the time may come, I think it may come, when we may undertake in the balance of the country to a certain extent what we are doing now under the reclamation law in the West. This bill proposes an encouragement of land development without expense to the Federal Government. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] says that it is a departure from our past policy. We have for many years been furnishing Government engineers, who were paid by private funds. Every land-grant railroad in the West is having its land surveyed with funds it advances by Government engineers. Every man who has patented mineral land from the beginning of our public patenting of those lands has had his land surveyed by a public official and his claim carried to patent on money which he advanced to the officials of the Land Office to have the work done. Every day of the year the officers of the Geological Survey are executing topographic and geological surveys in cooperation with municipalities, corporations, counties, States, they advancing the money, and the work being done by engineers of the Government and under Government regulation.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. MONDELL. I have only five minutes. This is a proposal to lend that same encouragement to general land development that we have been lending in these other lines. Before a Government engineer can be employed on any project there must have been a contract made with the Secretary of the Interior, the necessary money must have been advanced and must be in the Treasury, whereupon the Government would take charge of the development.

I am willing to admit, for the sake of argument, that there is a possibility, a bare possibility, of some scandal under a policy like that proposed. You can not embark on anything worth while without the possibility of occurrences that might be regrettable. But if we are to be deterred from undertaking a worthy work for fear that it will not always be carried on in the best possible way, then we shall do nothing, we shall make no advance, we shall assume the position that gentlemen have taken, that we are still in the day of the ox team in America; that we are still in the day when we have more land than we need or can use. The plan proposed may be open to some objections, the bill may need amendment, but the interests involved are so important, the work proposed so imperative, that the questions involved should at least have the careful consideration of Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired; all time has expired. The previous question has been ordered, and the vote will be upon the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution as amended.

Mr. GARRETT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the adoption of the resolution.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 141, nays 113, not voting 177, as follows:

Mr. JEFFERIS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I was just walking in when my name was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman inside the room?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I was walking right along there.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Did the gentleman hear his name called?

Mr. JEFFERIS. I did not hear my name called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair does not think the gentleman qualifies under the rule.

Mr. JEFFERIS. I had just walked through the door.

Mr. DUNBAR. Mr. Speaker, may I vote "present"?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called?

Mr. DUNBAR. No.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman does not come within the rule.

Mr. ALMON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to vote "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present——

Mr. ALMON. I desire to vote "present." I did not get here in time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman can not qualify.

Mr. ALMON. Can not I answer "present"?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, I was not here and I thought I had the right to answer "present."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. No.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker pro tempore announced that he was in doubt and asked for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 26.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. So the House decides to go into Committee of the Whole. The gentleman from New York [Mr. HICKS] will please take the chair.

Thereupon the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill S. 3477, with Mr. HICKS in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House having resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3477) to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior, through the Reclamation Service, is authorized to investigate and determine the feasibility of developing tracts of land in private ownership within any State or Territory, by reclamation and otherwise, for the purpose of subdividing the land and disposing of the same in farms and parcels at reasonable prices.

SEC. 2. That after the Secretary of the Interior has determined the feasibility of a project, he is authorized, through the Reclamation Service, to develop the land to such extent, and dispose of the same in farms and parcels in such manner and upon such terms as to him shall be deemed most feasible and practicable.

SEC. 3. That no moneys of the United States shall be expended for any of the purposes of this act, nor shall either the investigation or development of any project be commenced or any obligation incurred therefor until a contract shall have first been made by the Secretary of the Interior with the owner or owners of the land, providing for the payment in advance by the owner or owners of sufficient moneys to meet the estimated cost, and thereafter of sufficient moneys to meet the actual cost, of such investigation or development, and no expense shall be incurred by the Government in excess of moneys already advanced. The moneys provided by every such contract shall be deposited with the Treasury of the United States as a trust fund, and shall be disbursed by a duly authorized fiscal officer of the Government under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior and in accordance with the terms of such contract.

SEC. 4. That every contract for development of a project shall provide, among other things, that the developed farms and parcels shall be sold to persons who desire to occupy the same as homes at the actual cost of the land and the development thereof plus a definite reasonable profit to the owner or owners stated in advance therein. All contracts for the purchase of farms and parcels shall be made for, and the moneys due thereunder shall be payable to, the owner or owners of the land or their assigns.

Amend the title so as to read: "An act to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of the people to reclaim and acquire rural homes, and for other purposes."

With committee amendments, as follows:

Page 1, line 5, after the word "developing," insert "farms and."

In line 7, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, strike out the words "land and disposing of the same in farms and parcels at reasonable prices" and insert in lieu thereof "lands in excess of the amount needed by the owner for his own farm and of the disposing of the remaining lands in farms and parcels of suitable size at reasonable prices."

On page 2, line 3, after the word "the" where it occurs the second time, strike out the word "land" and insert "farms and tracts."

In line 4, of page 2, after the word "the," strike out the word "same" and insert "surplus lands."

In line 5, page 2, after the word "parcels," insert "of suitable size."

In line 1, of page 3, after the word "farms," insert the word "tracts," and after the word "parcels," insert "less a farm or home unit reserved to the owner."

Mr. WINGO rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Arkansas rise?

Mr. WINGO. To make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. My understanding of the rule was that we would have general debate and then consider the bill under the 5-minute rule. The Clerk is now reading the amendments.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. This is reporting the bill for the first time.

Mr. WINGO. Is that the method?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. This is such an extraordinary bill that I think we should report it properly.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the resolution by which this bill is to be considered in the committee it is provided that there shall be an hour and a half of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands and one-half to be controlled by the ranking minority member of that committee.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Mr. Chairman, 18 years ago, in response to a sentiment which was broadcast over the country, the general reclamation law was enacted, providing that the receipts from the sale of public lands should be placed in a special fund and used for the irrigation of arid lands in the Western States. Under the operation of that law 26 projects have been undertaken in 14 different States. On nearly every one of those projects the wisdom of the enactment of this wise and beneficent law has been fully demonstrated, as the result of which a great deal of advantage has accrued not only to that section of the country but to the benefit of the eastern sections of the country by building up a market in the Western States for the manufactured products of the East.

Since this law was enacted over 3,000,000 acres of land, which had theretofore been entirely of a desert character, has been reclaimed and placed under cultivation. Over 40,000 families have found homes upon these various projects, and in many instances the value of the crops raised on the several projects each year exceeds the actual cost of the entire project.

We have been endeavoring during the intervening years to have this reclamation fund increased by direct appropriation or by a loan to the fund, but only in one instance has any addition been made to the fund. About 10 years ago $20,000,000 was advanced by Congress to the reclamation fund, and it is being paid back to the fund from the receipts of the sales of the lands and repayments at the rate of $1,000,000 a year, so that the $20,000,000 advanced by the Government will be eventually returned to the Treasury.

Because of our failure to influence Congress to make further advances to the reclamation fund in order that new projects might be taken up, and to reclaim swamps or other unused land, the legislation which is pending to-day was initiated. It is planned under this bill to have the Secretary of the Interior, through the Reclamation Service, reclaim the land with money advanced to the Government by the owners of the land that is to be reclaimed.

In almost every State in this Union there are large tracts of land which are of a waste character, absolutely lying idle, which can be reclaimed and made productive by the expenditure of a reasonable sum per acre, either by draining the land or by placing water upon it, as may be necessary. One reason why it is thought wise to secure the cooperation of the Federal Government in reclaiming these lands is that the Reclamation Service has demonstrated conclusively that the projects which are constructed by the Reclamation Service are the most successful. In many instances in the western country private irrigation companies have undertaken to reclaim these lands, but they have not always been successful. The element of profit in the project aroused the enthusiasm of the promoters unduly, and oftentimes a larger quantity of water was stated to be available by the engineers than was actually obtainable, and as a result some of those private projects have been a great disappointment. But in every instance where the Government has undertaken a project it has been successful in reclaiming the land and placing settlers upon it. The Government engineers have been conservative in their estimates in regard to the amount of the water supply and the cost of constructing the necessary works.

Under the provisions of this bill it is proposed that the owners of the land shall turn it over to the Federal Government for reclamation at their expense, and enter into a contract with the Secretary of the Interior to dispose of the same at a reasonable price to actual settlers.

We are confronted constantly with the fact that the people are leaving the farms and going to the cities. The last census report shows that the trend of population is constantly away from the land, and that only about 35 per cent of the people in this country live on the farms. You can not employ men at a reasonable price to work on the farms, and because of the high wages which it has been necessary for the farmers to pay during the last year or two they are now very much embarrassed for the reason that the crops which they have raised have cost them more than they can actually sell them for.

While many poor young men of the country who desire to engage in agricultural pursuits are not willing to work for wages on a farm, they will gladly avail themselves of an opportunity to settle upon the land if they can secure title at the actual cost of reclamation. At every land opening in the Western States conducted by the Government or by the State there were many times more applicants for the land than there were parcels available, which demonstrates that the people are land hungry, if they can secure it at a reasonable price.

The enactment of this bill will result in numerous projects being taken up for development, and under its provision hundreds of thousands of acres of waste lands will be reclaimed and tens of thousands of new homes established without the Government expending a single dollar. I earnestly urge the passage of the bill.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Colorado will permit, I would like to yield some more time to a gentleman on this side.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly.

Mr. KINKAID. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, having discussed this bill briefly when the rule was under consideration, it was not my intention to ask for time in the general debate. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] has, however, suggested that I discuss one or two features of the proposed legislation at this time, and I am glad to do so.

I realize that this is a measure with regard to which there is ground for differences of opinion. That is true of almost any legislation brought before us, and I can readily understand how gentlemen may be so conservative in their view of what the Federal Government ought to do, and of the reasonable limitation of its activities, that they may properly view this as a questionable enterprise. But it is not a new departure in governmental activity. I think whoever wrote the report fell into an error in suggesting that. It is the adaptation to a new class of enterprise, a policy which the Government has, in a measure, followed for many years.

The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. SMITH] has very interestingly called our attention to what has been accomplished under the reclamation law. That is the law under which we use Government money for the reclamation of land by irrigation, the money so used to be repaid, as it is being regularly repaid, by the settlers. The record under the reclamation law has been a most creditable one and a most encouraging one, although some mistakes have been made and there have been two small projects that have been failures.

For a number of years past there has been an increasing agitation in the country for the extension throughout the continental boundaries of the United States of the policy adopted under the reclamation law. There has been a good deal of objection to that, and a good deal of sound reason against the nation-wide extension of that policy and the utilization of moneys raised by taxation, even for so laudable a purpose as that of making lands usable.

Out of the discussions of the last year or two has come this suggestion, made, I think, first, by certain gentlemen who have had a great deal to do in California and elsewhere with land development, a suggestion taken up by the former Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane. He was of the opinion, as have been many others who have studied these problems, that the Federal Government could very greatly aid in encouraging land development and reclamation in all parts of the country by loaning its engineers to those who are proposing development enterprises, the engineers to be paid by those undertaking the projects. The gentlemen from the West have referred to the work heretofore done under the reclamation law, and to its helpful influence in the West. There is, however, no part of the country so much interested in a proposition of this sort as the South. There is no part of the country that has so much land that is not now utilized, but that could be made fertile, fruitful, and highly valuable.

The development of considerable tracts of land by private enterprise is surrounded by many difficulties. In the first place, there is always the temptation for people to undertake such enterprises who have not the means to carry them through. Sometimes these enterprises are undertaken by gentlemen who do not realize as they should their obligation to the public. It is the quite general experience that, owing to the view that the public has come to take of land development, it has been necessary in order to bring lands into the market and settle them to charge an almost prohibitive price in order to repay the cost of reclamation and to pay interest on the money used in the development during the very considerable period while settlement is being accomplished.

It is believed that by having the Interior Department furnish its engineers to examine and superintend these projects the average price charged may be largely reduced, and we may be able to encourage greatly what everyone realizes is a highly important class of development, particularly now when the drift is growing stronger and faster all the time away from the farm and to the town and city.

I am willing to admit that projects might be undertaken under this law relative to which the Government engineers might be overoptimistic. Conditions might arise under which a given enterprise would prove not to be as wholly satisfactory as the Government engineers believed it would be. I am willing to admit that there is a possibility of danger there. But as I said a moment ago, if we are to decline to lend aid and assistance to these enterprises, so needful and so useful, simply because we fear that here and there a project may not turn out as favorably as anticipated, if we allow fears of that sort to influence us, we can not well undertake any enterprise, either public or private, for there is an element of chance in them all. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I want to ask the gentleman if under the present reclamation law a corporation organized to drain swamp land in my State could get the reclamation engineers' service? In other words, would their services be available for the owners of that land at the present time to make surveys and recommendations as to the feasibility of the project?

Mr. MONDELL. I do not think they would be available under the law. I think this is true: In the region in which we are operating under reclamation law the reclamation engineers are sometimes called in and sometimes do give advice gratuitously to people in the immediate vicinity, where that examination can be made without taking the engineer from his work for any considerable length of time. However, we have a provision in the Agricultural bill under which certain engineers of the Agricultural Department are now available for and do furnish advice to those proposing to carry out drainage projects. The appropriation for that purpose is not large, but there are several engineers who are engaged in that class of work. They visit projects in various parts of the country where private enterprise contemplates development by drainage. They make suggestions; they give advice; they make recommendations; they do approximately what the engineers would do under this law. But there are a few engineers only engaged in that work, and under the limitations of the law they can do nothing more than give advice.

Mr. LAYTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LAYTON. I want to answer a question put by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD]. I know a large swamp area in my State was surveyed, estimates made and a drainage system placed upon paper, and the cost estimated as to the reclamation of that swamp, and the engineers who did that came from the Geological Survey.

Mr. McKENZIE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. McKENZIE. Assuming a company of men own a large tract of arid land——

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman should get out of his mind that this applies wholly to arid lands. My own belief is that this law will be utilized to a limited extent only in the arid regions. We have reached the point in the reclamation of arid lands in the West where the problems are so difficult that they are almost beyond private enterprise in the main. I look for the greatest development under this law in the border States, in the Eastern States, and in the South.

Mr. McKENZIE. Well, call it swamp lands or some lands owned by a combination of individuals. Now, if they can get the stamp of the approval of the Government engineers on the project, will it not assist them in selling to the general public?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; that is the purpose and intent of this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has again expired.

Mr. KINKAID. I yield the gentleman one minute more.

Mr. MONDELL. As matters now stand one of the great difficulties is that the general public does not always have confidence in the recommendation of private engineers employed by private corporations; they would unquestionably be more impressed by the recommendations made by Government engineers. The land could be sold much more cheaply, because there would not be the long delay and expensive advertising that now seems to be necessary even on the best projects carried out and developed by private enterprise.

Mr. SEARS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. If I have the time.

Mr. SEARS. Does the gentleman believe that under this bill lands owned by the State could be drained?

Mr. MONDELL. I have not thought of that particularly, but I imagine so; and if not, the bill could be amended.

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Is there any time for the opposition to this bill, or is not the opposition to be heard?

The CHAIRMAN. The time is equally divided between the gentleman from Nebraska, the chairman of the Committee on Arid Lands, and the ranking minority member of that committee.

Mr. BEGG. Is it possible that legislation can be considered in the House and the opposition to it not be able to be heard? I think the opposition is entitled to some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that we are proceeding under a resolution adopted by the House a few moments ago.

Mr. BEGG. And the time was turned over to two Members favorable to the bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If the gentleman from Ohio will permit, I will say that I have agreed for two gentlemen to talk against the bill.

Mr. BEGG. The gentleman is not afraid of the proposition; he knows that it will be defeated; but the gentleman on this side will not give us time.

Mr. KINKAID. I will give the gentleman some time.

Mr. BEGG. How much?

Mr. KINKAID. Ten minutes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, does the Chair rule that the ranking minority member means the ranking party member? I know it has been customary to say that the ranking minority member from a party standpoint is to control the time, where it is a party question. That is customary; but I know of at least two instances where if you had had a provision in the rule for the minority member, I would be permitted to control the time, but insisted that we would let those who were opposed control it.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman was here when the rule was adopted. He heard the rule read, and I have no doubt if he had suggested an amendment at that time it would have been changed, but he did not suggest it. It seems to me that the gentleman is talking too late.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, it never occurred to me that the Committee on Rules was going to depart from the practice which it has pursued heretofore.

Mr. MONDELL. It is a very usual rule that the time should be divided between the two sides, with the understanding that the gentlemen in charge of the time on the different sides will be fair to their respective sides. If the gentleman has any complaint to make of the treatment by his side, I am willing to ask gentlemen on this side to give him some time.

Mr. WINGO. I am not making any complaint. I am submitting a parliamentary inquiry, which I trust is a right which a Member still has, without being criticized by gentlemen who ride on white asses, to use a Hebrew expression, on the Republican side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will respond to the parliamentary inquiry. In the opinion of the Chair, the rule which has been adopted in the House is binding upon the committee. The rule provides that there shall be an hour and a half of general debate, one-half to be controlled by the chairman of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands and one-half by the ranking minority member of that committee.

While the rule may be arbitrary, a remedy lay in an amendment when the resolution was being considered; but as no amendment was adopted, the Chair must hold that the words "the ranking minority member of that committee" means the political minority, and so will recognize the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] for one half the time and the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] for the other half.

Mr. WINGO. If that is the kind of rules that we are going to have brought in here, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-seven Members, not a quorum. The Clerk will call the roll.

The committee rose; and Mr. MADDEN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill S. 3477, and finding itself without a quorum, he had caused the roll to be called, when 233 Members responded to their names, a quorum, and he handed in the list of the absentees for printing in the Journal.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, it seems to me that a great deal of the objection and criticism that have been made against this bill arises from the fact that Members are not familiar with the present Government irrigation reclamation law. They are not to be criticized for not being familiar with it, because it has only been available throughout the Western States. As some of you know, the reclamation law has been a tremendous success in some 16 or 17 Western States. There are some 30 prosperous Government reclamation projects which have been in operation ever since soon after the law was enacted on the 2d of June, 1902. That law authorizes the irrigation and reclamation of the public lands to be made from the proceeds of the sales of public lands. The proceeds from the sale of public lands that have been sold since 1902 have been turned in to the reclamation fund, and those funds have amounted to something over $100,000,000. We have also borrowed from the Government $20,000,000, so that we have expended up to the present time something over $120,000,000 in reclaiming Government land through the Reclamation Service and have put millions of acres of barren, arid land under cultivation and placed thousands and thousands of people in happy and prosperous homes upon those lands throughout the arid West. Land that would not support a horned toad or a sand lizard before the water was put on it by the Government now presents a splendid modern settlement throughout these various reclamation projects. I have two of them in my own district in Colorado; one of them, the Uncompahgre project, will soon irrigate nearly 140,000 acres and has cost about $9,000,000. It covers a large part of Montrose and Delta Counties, which is a wonderfully rich country. The other project, the Grand Valley Highline, at Grand Junction, Colo., covers about 55,000 acres. Some of that land is now worth three or four hundred dollars an acre. All this wonderful improvement throughout the West has been brought about by the Government Reclamation Service.

Every dollar that the Government of the United States has put into the reclamation tracts is going to be paid back. The settlers have 20 years within which to pay the money back, and they are already commencing to pay it back. I think some three or four million dollars have been paid already. There is no trouble about the Government Reclamation Service or about the present reclamation projects, but under that law they only apply primarily to public lands. That is, they are started primarily upon and for the public domain. But the fact of the matter is that the public domain has nearly all been disposed of in so far as getting an appreciable amount of money is concerned. We used to receive something like $7,000,000 a year from the sale of coal and other public land. But now that we have adopted the coal and oil and gas and water-power leasing policy we are not yet getting money from that source. The desert-land law, which used to bring in $1.25 an acre, has practically become obsolete by reason of overly strict construction, so that we are getting little or nothing from that law. The $1.25-an-acre preemption law has been repealed, and the stone and timber law and the isolated tract law are construed out of existence. The homestead law only pays $16 a claim. So our receipts from the sale of public lands are very rapidly dwindling down to practically nothing, and unless we can get some royalties from these leasing laws our Government reclamation work on the public lands will gradually and rapidy run down, but I may say I am hopeful that these leasing royalties will commence coming in soon and that this splendid work may go on.

However, be that as it may, this bill provides for the carrying out of the reclamation policy in a different way. This makes the policy and the machinery and skill and experience of the Reclamation Service applicable to private land and provides for their economical and practical reclamation by and with private funds instead of by Government funds. The bill is short and very plain and easily understood, and anyone at all familiar with the practical, everyday working of the present reclamation law can see exactly how this bill will work out. It is very clear and simple to all the western Members, and let me say that this bill was argued for parts of two days in the Senate, on February 6 and March 11 last, and it was passed on April 7 without a dissenting voice in the United States Senate; and it does seem to me that if there were any of the loopholes and objections which we hear here, some of those able and distinguished gentlemen at the other end of this building would have discovered some of them. The fact of the matter is there are many million acres of lands throughout portions of the West that can not now be irrigated. The public lands can not be reclaimed because private capital will not invest in private irrigation enterprises on a large scale and there are no Government funds available for that purpose. There is a good deal of swamp and cut-over land in the South and East and throughout the country that is lying idle to-day that private capital will not undertake the reclamation of; it is too big and uncertain a proposition for them to drain the swamps of the South or undertake large reclamations of the cut-over stump lands of the East, North, South, or Middle West with private capital.

The trouble is that whenever private enterprise has opened up large irrigation projects they have lately generally been a failure, and private capital will very rarely go into them any more. But trust companies and financiers all over the United States say that if Congress will enact some law whereby the United States reclamation engineers and officials can have the absolute control of the construction of the works and the expenditure of the money, and the sale of the lands reclaimed, and collection of the money and repayment to the people who advance the money, so there will be no promotion charges or any graft or rake-off or any kind of private commissions or things of that kind, and they can rely upon and get the benefit of the engineering skill and the 18 years of experience of the reclamation officials, they will put their money into reclamation enterprises of various kinds.

This bill is to enable private owners of lands to put their lands into the hands of the reclamation officials to handle, just as if the lands were public lands, only the owners must furnish the money, if they have it, and if they do not, they borrow it or bond the property in various ways. The best way and the one that will probably be used will be to organize an irrigation district or drainage district, or any kind of a reclamation district, and issue bonds on all the lands of the district for the payment of the cost of the entire reclamation and sale of the lands. While that method, as I say, is, I think, the best way, especially where there are a large number of owners of the private lands to be reclaimed, yet the actual method of raising the money to do the work is not provided in the bill, because that is a detail to be worked out afterwards.

Mr. WINGO. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WINGO. Is it the intention of the framers of the bill that nothing will be undertaken by the Secretary of the Interior under this law that can be handled by private enterprise?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Secretary of the Interior will not interfere with any private enterprise. The Reclamation Service will only undertake the handling, the reclamation, and sale under this bill of privately owned lands that are idle, that no private enterprise is trying or willing or able to handle, or where private enterprise has tried and failed to successfully handle them, and not then unless and until the owners have applied to the Interior Department, and advanced the cost for and obtained an examination by the reclamation engineers. Then if an examination shows that the project is practicable, and the owners can arrange to raise the necessary money to finance the work and accept the estimates of the Government engineers and ask to have them go ahead with the work they can do so. The engineers will ascertain the number of acres of land to be reclaimed and the value of it after being reclaimed and the cost of the land and cost of reclamation, and see if the land will warrant the expense, whether it is drainage of swamp land or clearing of stump land, or irrigation of arid land. The policy and principle is the same. The land must bear the cost and the owners must advance the money themselves or by encumbering the land. If they raise that money and deposit it, then the Reclamation Service will, in case it is an irrigation enterprise, send out experienced irrigation engineers, and if they find there is sufficient water supply, and that it can be made a practical paying proposition, a sufficient acreage involved in the project, and what the charge will be per acre, and report that it is feasible, and then if the people who own the land desire to advance the cash personally, or borrow it any way, or organize irrigation districts and bond the district for the amount the Reclamation Service says is necessary, private capital will take those bonds, and the Government will have absolute control over the construction work and all the handling of its entire enterprise, and the private owners of the land will have nothing to do with it. In other words, this is simply to make the Reclamation Service of the United States available to privately owned lands, where people are willing to put up the necessary private capital instead of going to the United States Government for the money. It permits private owners of extensive tracts of idle lands to practically employ the United States Reclamation Service engineers and officials and machinery and experience to put their lands on a paying basis by building settlements and homes on the lands and thereby benefiting the people and the whole country and not costing Uncle Sam a single dollar.

Mr. WINGO. Right there, for information. Do I understand the gentleman to say after the engineers make the survey and determine the feasibility, then this law provides for the organization of an irrigation district?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes. The owners of the land have got to raise the necessary money somehow. They can get the cash any way they can. I said in any western country on large tracts of privately owned lands, owned by a large number of people without any money, the most practicable and simplest and surest way to get the money in large sums would be to organize an irrigation or drainage district; but that method is not required if they can get the money any other way.

Mr. WINGO. Suppose it is stump or cut-over land, is there any law covering that now?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. We have an irrigation district law and also a drainage district law in the Western States, but I am not familiar with the State laws of your State or other States on this subject. Any State could, of course, I assume, pass such a law if it so desired and has none now.

Mr. WINGO. Might a district be organized under this act for that purpose, the cut-over lands?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. This bill does not require or authorize or say anything about the organization of reclamation districts for cut-over lands or any other kinds of lands. I said the owners of the cut-over lands, or swamp lands, or arid lands, or whatever kinds of lands are desired to be reclaimed, must produce the cash necessary for the Government engineers and officials to do the work of reclamation. The bill does not say how they shall get that cash. I mentioned the formation of a district merely as one way of raising the money. I had in mind the irrigation and drainage district laws of the West.

Mr. WINGO. What provision of the statute? Is it in the existing law, or is it in this statute proposed here?

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. If the gentleman will permit, I wish to say that districts are organized under State laws and not under Federal law. Almost every State in the Union has a law under which districts are or can be organized.

Mr. WINGO. I have not said how I am going to vote on the bill. I asked the gentleman if it was in the existing Federal law or comes under this proposed law?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. The Western States all, I think, have State laws in reference to irrigation and drainage districts.

Mr. WINGO. But is it intended to confine it to irrigation? I thought it was drainage, cut-over and——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; certainly; and swamp land, and every other kind of idle land that is worth reclaiming, and the owners are willing and able to raise the necessary funds to reclaim it.

Mr. WINGO. How are you going to have that——

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. You can under this bill reclaim any kind of land that will warrant reclaiming, that will justify the expense, where it is in large enough tracts to justify the Reclamation Service in taking up the project and where private capital will put up the money for the work. In a nutshell, this is the idea and theory and object of this bill: Trust companies with large sums of money to invest and thousands of capitalists generally throughout the United States have money to invest. They do not want to engage in active enterprises themselves, but they want to loan out their money on absolutely good security.

A great many private irrigation enterprises throughout the West have during recent years proved financial failures for various reasons which it is not necessary to go into, but principally from underestimation of cost of construction and overestimation of quantity of water and cost of promotion, and other things, so that capital will not, generally speaking, now advance money on these kinds of enterprises. It is too much risk and bother to look after them. I understand the same is true largely regarding private drainage enterprises, so that private capital can not be obtained by private individuals to do this kind of development—reclamation work—notwithstanding there are hundreds of competent engineers who absolutely know that there are throughout the United States hundreds of large bodies of land in private ownership that are now lying idle for the want of proper development, but the owners have not the money themselves, and can not get the money sufficient to defray the necessary expense of reclaiming and making those lands productive, and the problem before the country which this bill tries to solve is: How to get together the money and the skill and administrative ability to do this work and make these lands productive and convert them into homes for the people, and if this bill can solve that problem it will be one of the greatest pieces of constructive and beneficial legislation that has been enacted by Congress in many years. Now, the admitted fact is throughout the country that the Reclamation Service has during the past 18 years by wonderfully skillful, conscientious, honest, loyal, and energetic service to the Government inspired and richly deserved and obtained the confidence, respect, and esteem of the country in general, and especially the financiers and the moneyed people generally throughout the country have voluntarily come forward and assured the Secretary of the Interior and the Reclamation Service and numerous Members of Congress that if Congress would enact some Federal law whereby these privately owned idle tracts of land could be handled and reclaimed by and under the authority, supervision, and absolute control of the Reclamation Service, so that they might know, first, that the projects were feasible and practical; and, second, that the money will be skillfully expended; and, third, that the Federal officials will see that the money is repaid, then they are perfectly willing and ready to advance the necessary funds, and that is what this bill attempts to accomplish.

Mr. WINGO. What provision is there in here to authorize the Secretary to go down and organize an improvement district under the laws of my State, for example, for the purpose of developing cut-over lands? What authority would he have? He has none under the State law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I have tried to answer that before.

Mr. WINGO. What provision of this bill takes care of that?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Oh, I regret I have not time and can not yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. WINGO. I am not captious about this. I am making my inquiry in good faith.

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. It says, "The Secretary is authorized to investigate and determine the feasibility of developing farms and tracts of land by reclamation and otherwise."

Mr. WINGO. But not under Federal law. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] understands what I am talking about. The gentleman from Nebraska knows that we have peculiar laws under our State constitution, and we can not do what is done out in Colorado.

Mr. KINKAID. As I understand it, the improvement districts must be formed under State laws. In nearly all the Western States which have irrigable lands, laws for organizing irrigation districts have been provided. Where no such laws exist the legislative assembly may enact proper provisions.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Nebraska is familiar with the law in my State, I am sure, on this very proposition, and from line 8 to line 13, on page 2 of this bill, there is language which would absolutely contravene the constitution of my State. You could not take the funds and put them into the United States Treasury under a State improvement district according to our State law.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Well, if the State law will not fit in with this bill, they will have to make it fit or else not have the advantage of it. Every State that has lands needing reclaiming can enact the necessary laws to comply with the requirements of this bill.

Mr. WINGO. That is what I thought.

Mr. KINKAID. The State is not depositing any money with the United States. It is the individual landowner who has the right to deposit money where he pleases.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Certainly. When we come in here with a splendid measure for the development of our country, when it is provided in the bill that it will not cost the United States one dollar, when the money must be advanced by the people themselves, I can not understand why anybody should object to a bill of this kind. If it were a demand on the Treasury, a grab of $1,000,000 or so, I could understand the opposition; but when it is a plain common-sense business proposition, for the much-needed development of our country, and every dollar of the money is to be provided by private individuals, I can not understand why there should be this opposition.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes.

Mr. KINKAID. Is the gentleman from Colorado going to yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Yes; I will yield to the gentleman from California for eight minutes.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Does the gentleman mean to leave the impression that two or more owners of cut-over land, say, could not appeal to the Reclamation Service for their suggestions rather than have an organization of the States do it?

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. If they can raise the necessary money in any other way they need not form a district. That is not a requisite of the bill. That is merely one means of raising money which we use often in the West.

Mr. McDUFFIE. Then the State would have to do it?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for eight minutes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, to my mind, after having heard the entire hearings before the committee, after reading the report of the committee, after reading what the Secretary of the Interior said on the question, as well as having had more or less personal observation in regard to the irrigation question, I just want to give a few observations to the committee on this question, so that there can be no misunderstanding.

Now, in the first instance, this is not in relation to any particular kind of farm lands in any particular location in the United States. It applies to swamp and overflowed lands in the Southern States; it applies to cut-over lands in the New England and Northwestern and north Pacific Coast States; it applies to the arid and semiarid lands of the West. Any individual, association, corporation, or otherwise that owns land in large tracts, which it is desired to have subdivided, to the end that it may be put to use, can apply to the Secretary of the Interior under this bill for the purpose of having it properly subdivided and placed into farm units and sold to actual settlers and home seekers.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. I will gladly yield to the distinguished gentleman from New York for a question.

Mr. SNELL. Did anybody from the East or from the New England States ever appear in the interest of this bill?

Mr. RAKER. Not in the interest of this bill, but on the question of homes for discharged soldiers we received a good many reports, and a very clear, distinct, and lucid report from Mr. Davis, the Director of the United States Reclamation Service, showing that this law would work admirably, would work well, to the great advantage of much unused, cut-over, and waste and unoccupied and unused land in the Eastern States at the present time.

Mr. SNELL. Was not that an entirely different proposition from what is pending here?

Mr. RAKER. It is a different proposition, but the statement as to the land applies just the same.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. RAKER. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Is it not a fact that after more than two months of hearings before the Committee on Public Lands, during which time hundreds of people, a large number from every State in the Union, appeared before the Committee on Public Lands in behalf of the soldiers' land bill, giving testimony in favor of it, some few against it—is it not a fact that that bill was reported out favorably by a vote of 17 to 4 and placed upon the calendar for its passage and killed by the steering committee?

Mr. RAKER. I can answer as to all except the latter part. All the statements made by the gentleman are true. I want to say that that bill to my mind is an admirable piece of legislation well constructed, and if placed upon the statute books would work well upon every part of the territory of the United States.

Mr. DOWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Just for a short question.

Mr. DOWELL. The bill referred to did not refer to private lands.

Mr. RAKER. Which?

Mr. DOWELL. The one that the gentleman refers to.

Mr. RAKER. It covers private lands as well as public lands.

Mr. JOHNSON of Mississippi. Private and public.

Mr. RAKER. That statement having been made that it applies only to lands that can be used by taking off the water, taking out the stumps, or placing on the water, it is perfectly sound. There is no distinction as to whether it is an individual or a corporation. The Government places no responsibility or restriction. There is no compulsion. There is nothing expected of the State. Each individual or corporation has absolute control of his property.

But here we give a means whereby the private individual owner can have his land disposed of, and it is desirable for many reasons, and I want to describe them to you. There are many large tracts of land owned in this country by estates, by minors, by widows, and by old men who have had a mania for acquiring large tracts of land. They have it, and the question is how to use it properly. It has been the experience in practically every State in the Union, particularly in the Middle West—and everybody who has his eyes open knows it to be true—that where they have tried to open up large tracts of land by individual negotiations, the enormous expense, the high-salaried incompetent managers, the high-salaried incompetent engineers and superintendents have made those enterprises failures because they raised the expenses so high that they could not dispose of the land, and the entire amount of money was used in show and nothing done. But here is the proposition: In the first place, the man who owns the land voluntarily goes before this splendid service of the Government that for 17 years has had experience and has gathered together the best talent that the world could afford in the way of engineering of all classes as to draining swamps and as to irrigating desert land and cutting stumps, and these agents have traveled the wide world over to see what could be done and how it should be done, and have made a success in it.

Now, the private individual goes to the Reclamation Service with this splendid corps of assistants and says to them, "Here, I have a 50,000-acre tract of land. I can not use it." Or a widow or a guardian of a minor goes to this department and says, "Here, I have a similar proposition, and I want you to handle my land. I do not want these speculators to rob me of this land and give me nothing in return, and the one who gets the land nothing in return. I want some fair compensation for my land. I want this land developed so it will make a hundred happy homes"; and the individual, the guardian, the trustee, or the executor puts up a sufficient amount of money to make the survey of the land.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I should like three minutes more.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. I yield three minutes to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for three minutes more.

Mr. RAKER. When the survey is made they find it feasible, namely, that the expense of reclamation, of drainage, of handling, of pulling out the stumps will yield, when properly invested, a large return if the land is sold at a proper price. So they enter into a contract that the individual shall sell this land at a certain price. He agrees to it. It is a voluntary transaction on his part.

Mr. SNYDER. I want to ask one question. Who agrees to buy the land?

Mr. RAKER. There are 100,000 families scattered over the United States in these thickly congested districts who are looking for some place to go out where they may have a pretty, happy home, where they may be prosperous and raise their children as they ought to raise them.

Mr. LAYTON. Send them to me.

Mr. RAKER. When this contract has been entered into, the individual knows what he is going to get for the land, the purchaser knows what he can buy the land for. He knows it will be a success, and that he can procure the land at a reasonable price. I hope the committee will adopt this bill. It is true, as the report so aptly says, the bill is unique among reclamation measures, in the fact that it calls for no money from the Treasury; even overhead expenses and cost of preliminary investigations, as well as the cost of construction and development to be undertaken under the terms of the bill are to be deposited with the Treasurer of the United States before any work is done by the parties to be directly benefited. The underlying principles of the bill are new in American legislation. It aims to combine the benefits of both public and private enterprise without incurring the drawbacks of either. It has been urged on behalf of the bill that it will at least clearly reveal the limitations of private enterprise in the field of reclamation and land settlement, and that every dollar that can be enlisted under this plan is a dollar saved for the general taxpayer and the Public Treasury.

In urging the importance of going forward with the development and utilization of our natural resources, Secretary Lane, in his last annual report, said:

> But in suggesting practicable steps of progress at this time, I do not forget the burden of taxation which confronts our people, nor the delicate and difficult task which Congress is called upon to perform in trying to keep the national outgo within the national income. Hence I am now suggesting such constructive things as the Government may be able to do through the exercise of its powers of supervision and direction.

And the Secretary further said:

> And the principle on which we should move is this: "Not what the Government can do for the people but what the people can do for themselves under the intelligent and kindly leadership of the Government."

The bill under consideration was framed in accordance with these suggestions. The initiative for development under this plan must be taken by landowners or local communities. They will apply to the Secretary of the Interior and ask him to use the engineering facilities of the Reclamation Service to investigate a proposed project, accompanying their application with the estimated cost of such investigation. If their project is approved as sound and feasible from an engineering, economic, and agricultural standpoint, the Secretary enters into a contract with the landowners under which he agrees to organize and develop the project precisely as is now done under the reclamation law, with the important difference that the project is constructed wholly at the expense of the landowners. In financing it they will enjoy the benefit of the fact that able and disinterested engineers, economists, and administrators, representing the Reclamation Service, the greatest engineering organization in the world, with 17 years' experience in the reclamation of arid lands, has approved the project. The financing may be accomplished under either a public or a private corporation. In either case it will be done in accordance with State laws. In no case does the Government assume any responsibility beyond the exercise of its powers of supervision and direction.

As amended the bill will be applicable to conditions existing in several of the semiarid States in the West, where a strong demand is being made for irrigation, as well as drainage, by communities with the land all in private ownership. By the amendments the farms of individuals may be irrigated, drained, or otherwise reclaimed, and held intact by the owners, respectively, without the same being sold, as is required as to "tracts" large enough for several farms, from which latter, however, the owner of the tract will be permitted to retain from the tract sufficient for his own use for farming purposes. In several States of the semiarid West there exist large communities of fairly well-developed farms in private ownership, which by the application of irrigation the production may be doubled.

It is believed that this measure will be also helpful to the smaller class of irrigation projects in the West, consisting of public lands, more or less; also drainage projects in the North and South; likewise that it may be beneficially employed for reclamation in the North and East.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has consumed 21 minutes, and the gentleman from Colorado 25 minutes.

Mr. KINKAID. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SHREVE].

Mr. SHREVE. Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the committee, and I have no land to irrigate, and, more than that, there is no land in the State of Pennsylvania that I know of that would come within the provisions of this act. Yet I want to say to you that I should feel remiss as a Member of this Congress and a member of the great party that is so soon to take over the reins of the Government if I did not express myself as favoring this measure. Why, during the last year it has been my privilege and pleasure to travel across the continent with the members of the Committee on Appropriations. We visited reclamation projects and national parks, and I will say to you gentlemen, coming from the East as I do, it was a revelation to me, it was the great surprise of my life when we traveled down through that country, down through the State of Nebraska, and I first saw a wire fence extending along here, and on the one side great fields of alfalfa rising up three or four feet high, and on the other side I saw sagebrush and sand. Why, it was almost beyond comprehension, when you stop to think that the only difference between the one side and the other side was simply a question of water. Then, as we traversed over that country, we found plenty of places where the land that might be irrigated was not in sufficient quantity to be considered by the Government as a reclamation project, but there were plenty of places where this law would become applicable, where it would develop a large amount of land for the use of the farmer.

Just at the present time, when there is such great demand all over the country for more small farms, it seems to me that this is the one opportunity we will have in this Congress in which to do something practicable in the way of extending this great service to private individuals and the people. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BEGG].

Mr. BEGG. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have listened to the arguments and every statement that has been made in favor of this proposition, trying to find some reason to satisfy my mind why the Government should undertake to develop private property for the sole benefit of the individual for whom it is developed. I listened with great concern and interest to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] in his two speeches of five minutes each. Now, I want to call attention to the fact that this land to be reclaimed is stumpage land, cut-over land, rocky land like that up in Connecticut, swampy land like that in Florida, and arid land like that in the West.

The summary of the arguments that have been presented is that they want the Government to do it because it costs the individual too much, and because private capital will not put its money into the proposition and expend it on the proposition of developing this unclaimed land.

Then in the next breath they say that it is not going to cost the Government a single dollar. I would like to have some gentleman on the floor, some time, some gentleman who favors the bill, like the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska, or Colorado, I would like to have them show me how it will not cost the Government a single dollar to develop a thing that is going to be so expensive that private capital will not go into it.

Mr. KINKAID. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. No; I can not yield; let the gentleman use some of his own time. It seems to me that this kind of a proposition is a pure hoax. If you read the bill carefully, you will find that it does not say anywhere that there can not be funds taken out of the Public Treasury to pay the bills. On the contrary, any jurist in the United States called upon to pass on this section would rule that the cost of all the experimental work, salaries of every one of the engineers, would come out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEGG. I decline to yield.

Mr. SMITH of Idaho. The gentleman does not want to make a misstatement.

Mr. BEGG. If you do not mean it, why use that language? What is the use of having a Government-aid agency?

I can hire as competent men outside of the Government force as in the Government force if I will pay the price, and if you do not pay the salaries, what do you want the Government to do? Why did you not write it in? I will say that I am going to offer an amendment to separate the engineers on this work from the Government pay roll, and every one of you will vote against it because you expect the Government to pay the bill.

Now, gentlemen of the committee, it seems to me that in the light of the campaign we have just got through making—and I made a good many speeches myself, and every Member of the House no doubt made them—and I will make a guess that every man jack of you when on the platform decried the Government's going into private business. [Laughter and applause.] You pledged your people that if you were returned to power you would do everything you could to segregate the Government from private business, and do it right away. Now, that is all you have been doing for the last two or three days, is getting them back into it.

The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID] says there are something like 20,000 acres in Nebraska that if the Government will go out and investigate and reclaim them will probably make it pay $2 to $1. I want the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska to tell me what the State experimental station is doing, particularly since they get an appropriation from the national experimental station at Washington, through the agricultural college, to develop that land. Why, I would like to go out and buy a piece of run-down land, if this bill becomes a law, then have the Government come along and do the work.

You have listened to arguments of every kind. They say make the Government do the experimental work and the private individual will pay the bill. But the Government is to furnish the men. Then, after they have made the exploitation or investigation, the Government will let the contract to do the work in developing my farm. That seems to me, gentlemen, is getting Townley, from North Dakota, skinned alive. [Laughter.]

He is not one, two, three with that kind of a doctrine, in my judgment. The distinguished gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR] said that the reason we opposed this is because we do not understand it. It is entirely possible that I did not understand every phase of it, but I will challenge the gentleman from Colorado in his next speech to show me and this committee where the Reclamation Service of the United States ever reclaimed a dollar's worth of private property and then sold it and gave it to the private individual for a profit. I am not averse to having the Government go and spend millions, billions, if necessary, to reclaim great tracts of land that belong to the whole people and then let the whole people get the benefit of it. This puts me in mind of the high-finance scheme in a city, where a man opens up a new tract of territory and then buys a good big block out of the heart of it and sits down for a generation or two and lets the rest of the citizens build it up and inflate his values from $10 an acre to $10,000 an acre. It is the same proposition. Why should the Government go in and spend money for any private land? Why should the Government send its help even if the private individual is going to pay the bill? I agree with the gentleman from Tennessee who awhile ago said that it is a bad governmental policy to have a private individual or concern or corporation hold the purse strings on a Government employee. How would you like to have the meat packers own the employees who are doing the work for the Government in inspecting the meat? It is the same proposition. I want to say to you seriously that I can not see a single argument in the teaching of my fathers that were handed down to me from the time I went to school and studied elementary history in advocacy of such a proposition as this. There is not a line in the history of the United States from Washington down to William McKinley and Grover Cleveland that ever sanctioned any such doctrine as we have been putting over in the last few days in this Congress. It has only been in the last eight years that these things have been possible, so that whenever a man gets a toothache or anything else he appeals to the United States Government to come and cure him of it. If a man gets in a quarrel with his employer he wants the Government to come and settle the trouble. My God, men, are we living in a Republic, or are we living in a paternalistic form of government where the only right we exercise is once every four years to change to pater. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH].

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I do not see anything in this bill to be especially scared of. I was amused awhile ago when my friend from New York [Mr. SNYDER], in reference to the matter of organizing companies to take over these lands, asked the question, Who was going to buy the land? I want to state to my friend from New York that down in Texas pretty soon we expect to get a pretty big slug of money from the city of New York, where a corporation was being formed to take over 200,000 acres of land under a project of this kind, but they want to know what this particular soil is adapted to grow. Under this bill it is provided that the Secretary of the Interior shall send his experts down there and tell you gentlemen just what this soil is adapted to growing, and then we expect to get some of your New York money in developing Texas lands.

Mr. SNYDER. But the gentleman from California was speaking about an individual who had 50,000 acres of land.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Oh, we have individuals down there in Texas who have half a million acres of land.

Mr. SNYDER. And he painted a beautiful picture, bringing it right down to where somebody was going to pay. I wanted to find out who was going to pay.

Mr. HUDSPETH. You people are going to pay. We want your New York money in Texas. It is legal tender down there.

Mr. SNYDER. There is not a man in the House more in favor of proper irrigation than I am, but I agree with my friend BEGG, absolutely, that the Government has no right to take on anybody's personal business. Therefore I am opposed to this whole scheme.

Mr. HUDSPETH. And my friend from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO] intimates that every man in the Interior Department who engages in this can be haled before a Federal court under some criminal law he imagines is in existence. Does he know that at the present time the citizens of the Pecos Valley made up a $10,000 fund to pay engineers to go down from the Interior Department and survey that land down there and make a report on the feasibility of the Red Bluff Dam site?

Mr. WINGO. I never heard of it.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I am just telling the gentleman. There are lots of things about which I can enlighten my friend from Arkansas.

Mr. WINGO. Proceed.

Mr. HUDSPETH. The gentleman never heard of these engineers going out West and surveying mineral claims. Yet he thinks we could hale the whole Interior Department before a Federal court. There are $10,000 down there, or should be there by this time, contracted with the water users of the Pecos Valley, and they should send engineers down there from the Interior Department.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman realizes, also, that every soil survey made in the United States is under cooperative action—money put out by somebody to help survey the soil.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; and I want to enlighten my friend from Arkansas again by stating that there is nothing in this bill that requires a State to pass a law before the citizen can take advantage of it.

Mr. WINGO. I did not say anything of that kind.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I understood the gentleman thought the great State of Arkansas could not take advantage of this bill until the legislature met and passed a law.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes.

Mr. WINGO rose.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I first want to yield to my friend from New York, because I am interested in New York at the present time, for we hope to get money from New York for the organizing of land corporations in Texas.

Mr. SNYDER. I hope you keep on getting it. My friend HAYDEN over there knows that in the Indian Bureau we found in our investigations that over $3,000,000 had been spent by surveyors of that bureau, which had been charged up to somebody, but to whom we have been unable to find out so far, and that was on a proposition almost exactly like this, where the Government went out to survey lands for some one, land that they were going to allot to somebody, and we found that $3,000,000 were expended, which we tried to charge off here in the last session.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I hope it went to Texas, but I know it did not. We need foreign capital, and that is what we will get if we pass this bill.

Mr. SNYDER. I think we are about to get into the same sort of situation in this.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Why do we men in Texas want this bill? Fake schemes are being organized every day; land corporations are putting land on the market to catch your people in New York by schemes of that kind. Under this bill it can not be done. Why? Because the Secretary of the Interior sends his experts down there and makes a report upon these lands and tells you what they will produce.

Mr. SNYDER. I will say to the gentleman that we up in the State of New York are not looking for that kind of protection. We want to get stung once in a while.

Mr. HUDSPETH. But we do not want you to get stung.

Mr. HUSTED. If the gentleman will permit, in connection with what the gentleman said with reference to the sale of land, I assume all of these tracts will not turn out well. Even if carried on under Government supervision, some probably will be a failure. I would like to ask what will be the advertising value in case some one wants to exploit a worthless tract under this governmental sanction that is proposed?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I do not think he can do it under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUDSPETH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO].

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Chairman, my good-natured friend from Texas must have been having a dream. I confess that I have many things to learn and he nothing, but I did not suggest anything about Federal agents and Federal courts. I was trying to get some practical information. I am not surprised in his dream the gentleman did not comprehend either my questions or their objects. I listened, as I always do, to the charming dissertations of the gentleman from Wyoming, but as usual his utterances were as devoid of information on the practical facts of the pending measure as they were pregnant with stale platitudes.

The proponents of this measure assure us that this bill will develop and sell the cut-over stump lands of my district, spread fertilizer over the infertile lands of the gentleman from Texas, drawing thereto for that purpose the gold of New York, drain the swamp lands of Florida, and irrigate the arid lands of Arizona; but some of us are not so credulous as to take rhetoric in lieu of law, and call in vain on these gentlemen to show us how these things are possible and practicable under the provisions of the bill.

The report says this is a unique bill. True. The arguments made so far in support of it are unique. For instance, we are assured that private capital and private enterprise are now developing these reclamation projects in the West, but the expense is so great it is hard on the landowners, and that if the Government will do it it will be less expensive. Unique suggestion that, but it taxes the credulity of every intelligent man who knows by experience that Government handling of these projects is more expensive than private development.

I have the temerity to say to the gentleman from Texas, wise as he claims to be, that when the great undeveloped resources of Texas are developed for the best interests of Texas it will be by private capital and private enterprise, and not by Federal expert agents, prowling over that State, peddling Government aid. Oh, but you must help the farmer. This is not for the benefit of any farmer. Is it going to increase the food supply? Would you aid the increase of farm products to-day? If so, what you need is labor and a market. Is not that it? Gentlemen talk about its being an expensive proposition to get land, because, as the gentleman from California says, there are thousands who want land. If you come to the great Commonwealth of Arkansas, we can give you land as rich and fertile as the valley of the Nile that you, right now, can buy on 10 years' time, deferred payments, at less than half the minimum cost of any reclamation project ever put over. No; it is not for the purpose of increasing the food supplies; it is for the purpose of increasing the number of experts who will be on the Federal pay roll. I am not deceived. If it is a justifiable activity of the Federal Government, if it is to add to the wealth of a great Nation, if it develops the food supply and increases the strength, credit, and the industrial wealth of this Nation, then the Government ought to pay the expense and ought not to make the private individual pay it; but that is not the object. Make your bill a genuine, practical measure, whereby the swamp lands may be drained, the arid lands irrigated, the cut-over lands brought into cultivation, and I shall be for it. May I suggest that what we need now is not increased officeholders, but a practical plan whereby the farmer can find a profitable market for the products of the lands already developed.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, it seems to be manifest to everybody that we can not finish the consideration of this bill to-night, and inasmuch as I think we ought to have plenty of time for discussion of the question involved, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman withhold that? I think we ought to get through with the general debate to-night.

Mr. MADDEN. No; I think it is time to quit.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois make the point of no quorum?

Mr. MADDEN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-one Members are present, not a quorum, and the Clerk will call the roll.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska moves that the committee do now rise. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. MADDEN as Speaker pro tempore having assumed the chair, Mr. HICKS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (S. 3477) to increase, without expenditure of Federal funds, the opportunities of people to acquire rural homes, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, December 22, 1920, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

255. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental and deficiency estimates of appropriation required for the Public Health Service for the fiscal years 1920 and 1921 (H. Doc. No. 937); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

256. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting supplemental estimates of appropriations required by the Department of Labor during the fiscal year 1921 (H. Doc. No. 938); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

257. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Treasury Department to cover "Contingent expenses, Independent Treasury," for the fiscal year 1920 (H. Doc. No. 939); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. SIEGEL, from the Committee on the Census, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 410) to authorize payment to members of the Army and Navy who were employed as enumerators during the Fourteenth Decennial Census to take the census of persons in the Army and Navy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1140), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HASTINGS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 15159) changing the designation of the superintendent for the Five Civilized Tribes to the Third Assistant Secretary of the Interior, defining his duties, and for other purposes, reported same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1141), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. McFADDEN: A bill (H. R. 15301) to amend section 11(m) of the act approved December 23, 1913, known as the Federal reserve act, as amended by the acts approved September 7, 1916, and March 3, 1919; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15302) to amend the first paragraph of section 20 of the act of Congress approved July 17, 1916, known as the Federal farm loan act, as amended by the act of Congress approved April 20, 1920; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15303) to amend section 9 of the Federal reserve act, as amended by the act approved June 17, 1917; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. WARD: A bill (H. R. 15304) for the adjudication and determination of the claims arising under joint resolution of July 14, 1870 (16 Stat. L., 670), authorizing the Postmaster General to continue to use in the Postal Service Marcus P. Norton's combined postmarking and stamp-canceling hand-stamp patents, and directing him to "determine upon a fair, just, and equitable compensation for the use of said inventions," or arising otherwise; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 15305) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate to the village of Covert, N. Y., a German cannon or fieldpiece; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 15306) to amend sections 301 and 307 of the transportation act, 1920; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BROOKS of Illinois: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 424) authorizing and empowering the President to invite all nations to send delegates to a convention to provide for disarmament; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. PORTER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 425) authorizing the appointment of an ambassador to China; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FISH: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 426) providing for the bringing to the United States of the body of an unknown American killed on the battlefields of France, and for the burial of the remains with appropriate ceremonies; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BLANTON: Resolution (H. Res. 622) providing that it shall be in order to consider without intervention of a point of order amendments to House bill 15275; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. SCHALL: Resolution (H. Res. 623) to investigate the conduct of officers of the Federal reserve banks and the Federal Reserve Board in relation to the extension and withdrawal of credit; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. STRONG of Kansas: Resolution (H. Res. 625) requesting the War Department to furnish information to the Committee on Military Affairs regarding the abandonment of Camp Funston and providing that pending the furnishing of such information and action thereon that no action toward the wrecking and abandonment of said camp be taken; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AYRES: A bill (H. R. 15307) granting a pension to Malissa Leonard; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAREW: A bill (H. R. 15308) to compensate the owners of the steamship Brynhild for damages and expenses in repairing the said steamship and to make an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 15309) to compensate the owners of the American steamship Vindal for damages and expenses in repairing the said steamship and to make an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CLASSON: A bill (H. R. 15310) granting a pension to Annie Rouse; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, December 22, 1920.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we lift up our hearts to Thee in gratitude for the spirit of progress Thou didst implant in the heart of man; for every step toward a higher civilization handed down from generation to generation to the present hour. Make us wise, we pray Thee, in our generation, that we may hold fast to the good and press forward toward the better and higher civilization which is ever beckoning us onward and upward, that we may achieve and leave behind us a record which will inspire future generations. In the spirit of the World's Great Exemplar. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE TO-MORROW.

The SPEAKER. Some months ago the Speaker accepted an invitation to deliver an address in New York at the Pilgrim Tercentenary; and the Chair designates the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] to act as Speaker pro tempore to-morrow.

ARTHUR LUCAS.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Accounts I ask consideration of the privileged resolution which I send to the desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers a privileged resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 572.

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of the contingent fund of the House, $60 to Arthur Lucas for special janitor services rendered during the second session of the Sixty-sixth Congress.

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Speaker, this is the usual resolution that is passed each session for the boy who does the janitor work for the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. I move the adoption of the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. SEARS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WALSH). The gentleman from Florida makes the point of order that no quorum is present. It is apparent that there is no quorum present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will notify absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk called the roll, when the following Members failed to answer to their names:

Andrews, Md.	Foster	Lonergan	Sabath
Anthony	Freeman	Lufkin	Sanders, Ind.
Babka	Fuller, Mass.	McCulloch	Sanders, La.
Baer	Gallivan	McGlennon	Sanders, N. Y.

Focht	Lesher	Rubey

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On this roll call 290 Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Doorkeeper will unlock the doors.

EMERGENCY TARIFF.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, and, pending that, I would like to arrange time for general debate. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] agree to an hour and a half on a side for general debate?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. FORDNEY. Then, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that there be an hour and a half general debate on each side, one half that time to be controlled by myself and the other half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent for three hours' general debate, one-half the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] and one-half by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY]. Is there objection?

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee if that provides for any time for any Members of the House other than members of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. FORDNEY. The bill will be considered under the five-minute rule.

Mr. SNYDER. But I should like to ask the gentleman further if all the time is to be taken up by members of the Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. FORDNEY. Requests for time on this side for more than two hours have been made.

Mr. SNYDER. Would it not be better to have more general debate? There are a few of us who do not need much time, but would like a minute or two without being obliged to get it under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FORDNEY. I should like to see the bill passed to-day, and in order to do that and consider the bill under the five-minute rule we will have to hurry along with the general debate.

Mr. SNYDER. There are a number of men on this side of the House who would like to have a little time under general debate.

Mr. FORDNEY. The Ways and Means Committee will not take up half of the time under general debate, and I will distribute the balance as best I can.

Mr. SNYDER. I have no desire to keep the bill from going through to-day, but it seems to me wise to make it two hours on a side and let a few gentlemen outside of the committee have something to say, although it may not be of great value——

Mr. FORDNEY. It will be of great value.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FORDNEY. Certainly.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is it the intention of the gentleman from Michigan to ask the House to remain in session to-day until this bill is passed?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes; I want to pass the bill to-day.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Is it the gentleman's intention to ask the House to sit until the bill is passed?

Mr. FORDNEY. It is.

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Then why does not the gentleman cut the debate down to an hour and give the Members of the House a chance to discuss it under the five-minute rule? No one will remain here to hear the general debate.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me offer that suggestion to the other side of the House. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois, in order to distribute the time and give more time to gentlemen under the five-minute rule, will it be agreeable to him to have an hour of general debate on each side?

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. That is impossible; I can not agree to that.

Mr. FORDNEY. I have requests on this side for two or three hours' time, but I have cut it down to an hour and a half.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I have requests for two or three hours, too, and those requests are not all from members of the committee. I do not think we can get along with less than an hour and a half.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, it is impossible to get time on this side of the House for those of us who are in favor of this bill. I would like to ask the gentleman from Michigan if the time he has asked for will take care of the time promised by the gentleman to me.

Mr. FORDNEY. I promised to give the gentleman from Texas 10 minutes under general debate, or obtain that amount under the 5-minute rule, if I could. But the gentleman can see the predicament that I am in, without any time for myself to present the bill to the House. I have had requests on this side for more than two hours and a half.

Mr. BLANTON. But we are not working under such great emergency and pressure that we can not have an hour or two to devote to this important bill.

Mr. FORDNEY. We want it passed to-day.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; so that some Members can run off home to-morrow.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 15275.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. I object.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That on and after the day following the passage of this act, for the period of 10 months, there shall be levied, collected, and paid upon the following articles, when imported from any foreign country into the United States or into any of its possessions (except the Philippine Islands, the Virgin Islands, and the islands of Guam and Tutuila), the rates of duty which are prescribed by this section, namely:

1. Wheat, 30 cents per bushel.
2. Wheat flour and semolina, 20 per cent ad valorem.
3. Corn or maize, 15 cents per bushel of 56 pounds.
4. Beans, provided for in paragraph 197 of the act entitled "An act to reduce tariff duties and to provide revenue for the Government, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1913, 2 cents per pound.
5. Peanuts or ground beans, 3 cents per pound.
6. Potatoes, 25 cents per bushel of 60 pounds.
7. Onions, 40 cents per bushel of 57 pounds.
8. Rice, cleaned, 2 cents per pound; uncleaned rice, or rice free of the outer hull and still having the inner cuticle on, 1¾ cents per pound; rice flour, and rice meal, and rice broken which will pass through a No. 12 wire sieve of a kind prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, one-fourth of 1 cent per pound; paddy, or rice having the outer hull on, three-fourths of 1 cent per pound.
9. Lemons, 1¼ cents per pound.
10. Oils: Peanut, 26 cents per gallon; cottonseed, coconut, and soya bean, 20 cents per gallon.
11. Cattle, 30 per cent ad valorem.
12. Sheep: One year old or over, $2 per head; less than one year old, $1 per head.
13. Fresh mutton and lamb, 2½ cents per pound.
14. Cotton having a staple of 1⅛ inches or more in length, 7 cents per pound.
15. Manufactures of which cotton of the kind provided for in paragraph 14 is the component material of chief value, 7 cents per pound, in addition to the rates of duty imposed thereon by existing law.
16. Wool, commonly known as clothing wool, including hair of the camel, angora goat, and alpaca, but not such wools as are commonly known as carpet wools: Unwashed, 15 cents per pound; washed, 30 cents per pound; scoured, 45 cents per pound. Unwashed wools shall be considered such as shall have been shorn from the animal without any cleaning; washed wools shall be considered such as have been washed with water only on the animal's back or on the skin; wools washed in any other manner than on the animal's back or on the skin shall be considered as scoured wool. On wool and hair provided for in this paragraph, which is sorted or increased in value by the rejection of any part of the original fleece, the duty shall be twice the duty to which it would otherwise be subject, but not more than 45 cents per pound.
17. Wool and hair of the kind provided for in paragraph 16, when advanced in any manner or by any process of manufacture beyond the washed or scoured condition, and manufactures of which wool or hair of the kind provided for in paragraph 16 is the component material of chief vaue, 45 cents per pound in addition to the rates of duty imposed thereon by existing law.

SEC. 2. The rates of duty imposed by section 1 (except under paragraphs 15 and 17) in the case of articles on which a rate of duty is imposed by existing law, shall be in lieu of such rate of duty during the 10 months' period referred to in section 1.

SEC. 3. After the expiration of the 10 months' period referred to in section 1, the rates of duty upon the articles therein enumerated shall be those, if any, imposed thereon by existing law.

SEC. 4. The duties imposed by this act shall be levied, collected, and paid on the same basis, in the same manner, and subject to the same provisions of law, including penalties, as the duties imposed by such act in 1913.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, this bill has been reported by the Ways and Means Committee, prompted by the appeals that have been made by people from various parts of the country pointing out the distressed financial condition of the agricultural productions of the country.

First let me say that the sheep growers of the country—and, by the way, that industry is one of the most important industries of the country to all the people. The production of wool in this country before the war, in round numbers, was 300,000,000 pounds annually, while our annual consumption was a trifle more than 500,000,000 per annum. During the war we learned a lesson and have paid the penalty for many of the things used in this country that we can produce but do not. Wool is one of those articles.

Information was brought to the committee that 90 per cent of all the sheep on the western ranges are mortgaged to-day for $9 per head, more money than the sheep will sell for on the market to-day. Information was brought to the committee that 90 per cent of the cattle on the western ranges are mortgaged for $45 per head, more money than they will sell for.

A statement was made, and it is printed in the hearings, of a shipment of sheep to the Chicago stockyards, where a farmer made a shipment that, after paying the freight, the discount, allowances, and commissions, that shipment of sheep netted the farmer 33 cents a head, which he had sold at $2.10 a head delivered.

The most striking illustration of the distressed condition the farmer finds himself in came to my notice last evening when I stepped into a restaurant and ordered some lamb chops. I received two small lamb chops, about two mouthfuls to each chop, and paid 65 cents for the two, twice as much as was received by the farmer for a whole sheep—carcass, hide, wool, and all. [Laughter.]

Somewhere between the farmer and the consumer the value of the sheep got away. The farmer to-day is suffering because of the lack of a market for his products and a price for his products that would yield to him something like the cost of production. What is true of mutton and cattle is true of every article that the committee has included in this bill, or practically so.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman kindly tell us how this bill will provide for disposing of the profit between 35 cents which the farmer gets for his sheep and the $2.10 for which he sold it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Oh, brother, my time is too limited to make a long explanation of that, but the gentleman knows that what I have said is true.

Mr. GRIFFIN. And will this bill bring about an improvement in the situation?

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman must not take my time. Some criticisms may be made because there are some farm products that need assistance that are not included in this bill. There is no possibility of putting through Congress with any hope of success this bill if we include everything asked for by everybody. The committee has attempted to include in the bill the articles of agriculture and the manufactured products of wool and cotton—of long-staple cotton—the things that are in greatest distress. Information was brought to us that the lemon crops of to-day of California and Florida are yet hanging on the trees, because the price that can be obtained for that crop will not pay for harvesting the crop, let alone the cost of producing it. We are aiming to bring some measure of relief in a small way, quickly and for a short time, as an emergency measure, until something more scientific and permanent can be done by Congress to encourage the industries of the country in every line. Gentlemen may criticize this bill and criticize the members of the committee for not including more items than are included in the bill, or we may be criticized for including some things that some gentlemen believe should not be included, but if you were to sit and listen to the information that was presented to our committee I believe you would agree with us that we have made an honest effort to include in the bill the things that the farmer is producing because of the fall in the price of which he is in greatest distress. I do not want to occupy more than a little time, because there are many gentlemen who desire to speak.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I suggest that the gentleman reserve the remainder of his time.

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes. I want to conclude quickly. Some criticism may be made because the committee have included a duty on long-staple cotton. Never before, for at least a half century of time, has there been a duty included in any tariff bill on any imported cotton, but the production of long-staple cotton has become such a great industry in the United States that the importation of sea-island cotton or Egyptian cotton now constitutes competition with the cotton produced in this country to a point where it is necessary that the industry in this country should have some protection. The committee has included a duty on long-staple cotton and also a duty on the manufactured products of long-staple cotton.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORDNEY. Yes.

Mr. BLANTON. Inasmuch as the gentleman has served that item to the country with a slice of lemon and a pinch of onion, we will accept it.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman has told me that he is going to support this bill.

Mr. BLANTON. I am.

Mr. FORDNEY. And if he is, he should not criticize it. Under existing law the revenues collected, as estimated by the Treasury Department, on those items will yield about $6,000,000 in revenue. Under the proposed bill, if it is enacted into law as now written, it is estimated that more than $150,000,000 of revenue will come to the Government. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In the absence of any agreement respecting the limitation of time for debate any gentleman who obtains recognition by the Chair is entitled to one hour?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair so understands it.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Is he permitted to yield that time to other Members?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. In such portions as he desires?

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands it.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, 80 years ago the English Parliament assembled to discuss revenue measures. Already in England there prevailed the highest protective tariff of any country in the world. Corn was protected and had been protected for 200 years. Every agricultural product was protected, and manufactured articles were protected. At that time in England the party which stood for high protective tariffs and the development of a home market had a majority of over 90 in the Parliament. Before the session closed the people of England had rebelled against the illogical system. Before the session closed the first steps were taken which led to England's present tariff system—a system under which England collects more revenues to-day at her ports than we collect, a system which imposes not duties for the purpose of protection but duties for the purpose of revenue, and under the new English system, which came into force, with the entry of Richard Cobden into the Parliament of England 80 years ago, England has prospered as no other commercial nation had prospered. Her exports have increased, her imports have increased, and she became a creditor nation.

Under this system she became the clearing house of all the world. In her home markets farm products increased in price until to-day the products that the English farmers sell on the market bring a higher price than under the old system—and the English farmer receives a higher price to-day for his products than farmers receive in any other country in the world, and English farms are now the best cultivated and the best developed farms in the world—higher than we have ever been able to obtain for agricultural products here in this country.

This country has become a creditor nation almost overnight. To-day we are exporting more than we import. To-day the manufacturing industries which they propose to protect in the immediate future are exporting their products to every country in the world, and we have reached out under our present low tariff system and control the markets of the world. Our exports this year will amount to nearly $3,000,000,000 in excess of our imports, and the nations which will owe us this tremendous balance owe us other balances. We have sold them nearly a billion dollars' worth of war goods, not included in this amount. They owe us moneys that we have loaned to them—nearly $10,000,000,000—and if all the gold that is produced in the world each year was assembled and was under the control of these nations who owe us money it would not be enough to pay us one installment of interest on the amount of the loans our Government has made to them. There are balances due on account of municipal and private indebtedness, and all these tremendous balances must be paid in some way. There are but two ways to pay them, either in gold or in goods. Payment in gold, of course, is impossible, and we propose now to put up the bars and keep them from paying us in goods. Already the great financial institutions of the country, headed by the National City Bank, are warning the Republican Party against increases in the tariff, increases which will accentuate the exchange differences between this country and other nations. This bill levies the Payne-Aldrich rates on the products it reaches, and more than that.

I remember the campaign of 12 years ago. I recall that the Republican platform declared in favor of a revision of the tariff, and I remember that it was necessary for Mr. Taft, the candidate for the Presidency, to make a swing around the circle, speaking in Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Kansas City, and St. Louis, and to announce that this revision would be a revision downward. Then I remember that there followed the Payne-Aldrich bill, which was a revision upward. Then I recall that right in the middle of his term of office sentiment changed and the Republican Party was swept from control here in the House of Representatives, and the foundations were laid for a return to power of our party, which stands for reasonable tariffs for revenue only. It may be that history will repeat itself and that the situation in England 80 years ago may be reflected here to-day. It may be that a similar change in public sentiment is about to occur in this country. It may be that the revolution that we had in the middle of the Taft administration will come again. Half of our exports consists of farm products. By cutting off the foreign demand you can not increase the home consumption of farm products, and this bill may lead in the immediate future to retaliatory tariffs, tariffs which may be reflected in this country in fewer and fewer orders and in mills running on less and less time.

I congratulate the Republican Party upon its leadership. It approaches a period of absolute and undisputed control of all branches of this Government with able leaders in this House. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] stands for a protective tariff. You can not make it too high to suit him; he admits it on every occasion. [Applause on the Republican side.] And yesterday the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], an able exponent of the protective system and one of the leaders on that side, made the astounding announcement that he would favor making the nations that owe us a present of the $10,000,000,000 they owe us rather than abandon the protective tariff system.

Mr. LONGWORTH. If the gentleman will permit, I did not state it exactly in those words. I said, "rather than abandon our home market." [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. The gentleman from Ohio said this:

> Let us sacrifice every cent of the money they owe us rather than sacrifice our industrial independence.

[Applause on the Republican side.]

In other words, the position of the gentleman from Ohio is that industrial independence means the home market, with a production from our mills sufficient only to supply it. Heretofore we have been supplying the home market and we have been exporting $3,000,000,000 more than other nations imported into this country. In order to preserve our industrial independence, and by industrial independence the gentleman means that a high-tariff wall shall be erected around our manufacturing industries, in order that the price may be raised to a level which may satisfy the cupidity and greed of the men who control those great interests, if such a thing is possible, and in order to do that the gentleman is willing to pay the immense sum of $10,000,000,000 for that privilege—$10,000,000,000 contributed by the people of this country, who were advised through the dark days of the war, when the blue of the flag seemed at times to be fading away in the blue of the sky, to save and buy Liberty bonds. The money arising from $10,000,000,000 worth of those bonds was loaned by this Government abroad. This Government acts as the trustee of the people of the country who sacrificed and saved in order that our allies might be kept in the field until our armies got there, and in order that American lives might be saved in northern France—and the gentleman advises that in order to build a tariff wall high enough around these protected industries to enable them to make charges upon our own citizens his party is going to be generous enough to the manufacturers of this country to give away $10,000,000,000 of the people's money. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to advise the gentleman that he has consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

I desire to extend my remarks by printing a recent statement given to the press by Hon. W. G. McAdoo, also a telegram which shows the position of Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN, of North Carolina, now unfortunately detained by illness at his home in North Carolina. Mr. KITCHIN will be the leader of the minority in the next Congress, and I also print a recent editorial from the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, an independent Republican newspaper:

[Statement by Hon. W. G. McAdoo.]

DECEMBER 20, 1920.

As I see the situation, the country can not look with indifference upon the distressing situation in which the farmers find themselves because of the tremendous shrinkage in the value of agricultural products. We can not excuse inaction nor dismiss the matter with a mere observation that deflation is necessary and that farmers must take their medicine along with the rest of the country. The farm industry is basic to the life of the Nation and possesses a superior claim to consideration not alone because its prosperity is our best protection but also because the farmer, by the very nature of his business, is more exposed to adverse influences and has less protection against them than any other class. The bulk of his crop matures at the same time and if forced upon the market all at once or in a short period he may not realize even the cost of production.

To have a chance to make a fair profit he must have credit to carry his crop for a reasonable time. He must have ample, economical, and prompt railroad transportation to get his crop to market at the times when he can sell advantageously, and he must have sufficient convenient and reasonably cheap storage facilities for the conservation of his crop while waiting for a favorable market.

It is in the highest degree to the interest of the people as a whole that the farmers shall have these facilities and opportunities so that speculation and greed may not thrive on his misfortune on the one hand and that the consumer may not suffer from the extortion of profiteers on the other.

When colossal losses like those the farmers are now sustaining overtake them every line of industry suffers, factories close, business shrinks, labor is thrown out of employment, and confidence is seriously shaken. We are already experiencing these unhappy consequences.

Of course, prices in the United States could not be kept permanently on an inflated and artificial basis. Deflation was necessary and inevitable, but the processes of deflation are frequently more dangerous than the processes of inflation. It is easier to climb a tree than to come down. For this very reason the readjustments through which all industry and business are now going must be dealt with intelligently and eased in every reasonable way. It is the imperative duty of those in civil authority and of those who control credit to exercise their powers so as to prevent needless distress and preserve confidence.

I am frank to say that I think that the policies thus far pursued with respect to credits have been too drastic, but whether or not I am right, I am sure that the situation should now be reviewed in the light of existing conditions. A more liberal policy about credits should be put into effect immediately. I think that the reserve bank rates could be prudently reduced and that member banks could be safely encouraged to make loans on agricultural products and to business generally on reasonable time to those who can give adequate security and that the whole situation would be beneficially affected by this procedure.

Every intelligent person sympathizes with the effort to prevent speculation and the use of credit for purposes not beneficial to the general interest, but a wise discrimination should be exercised, and certainly the primary producer like the farmer should not be forced to bear the brunt of the sacrifices.

In many parts of the country, especially in the agricultural districts, credit is almost entirely wanting, and in many lines of legitimate business and industry great losses are being sustained because of the restriction of credits.

The point I wish to impress is that deflation has been carried so far and with such rapidity that we must now reconsider the situation, make an effort to present further distress and suffering, and bring about a revival of industry and confidence.

With this in view, we should make every effort to stimulate and enlarge our export trade. This is especially important to the farmers, because approximately 50 per cent of our export trade represents agricultural products. European nations desire our cotton, grain, and other products, but have no credit. It is to our interest to supply that credit. I therefore think that the revival of the War Finance Corporation is highly desirable. I believe that it can exercise an immensely beneficial influence upon the export trade if it is operated on a sound and liberal scale.

The recent action of the League of Nations at Geneva for the establishment of an international commission to consolidate the credits of some of the central European powers and utilize them in the purchase of American commodities is an important step and offers a new opportunity for helpful service by the War Finance Corporation.

Every influence of this Government should be promptly exerted to secure a prompt determination of the amount of the German indemnity. So long as this question remains unsettled it is undoubtedly true that there can be no economic rehabilitation of Germany and of the Central Powers, and so long as this continues their credit and buying power is reduced to a minimum.

If the German indemnity were fixed to-day, it would enormously help the economic situation throughout the world, and an immediate market would be opened for American food, cotton, and manufactured products which would not only relieve great suffering in Europe but redound to our own prosperity. It is a great pity that the peace treaty was not ratified promptly, as this would have put an American representative on the Reparations Commission, and would have enabled our Government long since to have brought about a settlement of the German indemnity with benefit to the entire world.

I have long been convinced that we ought to reestablish trade relations with Russia. It is not necessary to recognize the soviet government to do this. Why should we refuse to let people in distress in Russia or elsewhere buy our products, if they can pay for them, no matter what form of government they may choose for themselves? We have always stood for the right of peoples to determine their own form of government, and I must say that I have never been able to see any reason for our stand that we must not trade with Russia because we do not like or do not recognize her existing government. The opening up of Russian trade—and I am sure that it can be accomplished under conditions that will reasonably protect our citizens—would be very helpful to our business situation.

Of course, taxes ought to be readjusted and reduced. Last March I publicly advocated funding a large part of our floating debt. This could be done, and should be done, so that its pressure may be taken off of the American people, and especially off of business, at this time of unavoidable readjustment. The tax burden should be lightened, and can be by funding $2,000,000,000 of the floating debt during the next two years. Why should we continue high taxes merely because a relatively few people think it sounder policy to compel the present generation to pay still more of the war cost than to pass a reasonable amount of it on to future generations?

Unfortunately, the present Congress has refused for two years to do anything to relieve the tax burden or to prepare for this inevitable period of readjustment. Taxes should be reduced at this session of the Congress. There is no excuse for delay. It is essential that the business interests of the country know at the beginning instead of at the end of the year the basis upon which business must be conducted, so far as taxation is concerned, and be able to go forward with certainty and confidence. One of the grievous faults of the tax legislation of the last several years was its enactment by the Congress at the end of the year, with retroactive effect for the entire year.

The Congress should address itself unsparingly to economy in expenditures. Genuine economies can be effected by intelligent investigation and legislation. The responsibility, however, rests upon the Congress itself, because it controls the purse strings, and therefore has the power to limit expenditures. The Congress should no longer make gifts or authorize loans directly from the Public Treasury to any class or business in this country. I refer particularly to the gift of $654,000,000 made by the present Congress to the railroad corporations and to the $300,000,000 which the present Congress directed the Treasury to lend to railroad corporations at 6 per cent interest. Why should the people of the United States be taxed to make gifts and loans to railroad companies, aggregating $954,000,000, when we are already overburdened with taxes for purposes which we can not escape? There is no justification for policies like these.

The only way to effectively reduce our tax bill is to cut down our Army and Navy appropriations. If we had joined the League of Nations, that promised the most immediate and successful way of reducing armaments with safety to all nations concerned. But since we have not joined the league, I think Senator BORAH'S suggestions for an immediate agreement with England and Japan for a limitation of naval expenditures is valuable, and that such an agreement ought to be reached, if possible. This would be a practical step in the right direction, even though not a thoroughly satisfactory one. The fact that the suggestion emanates from a Republican, who has been a consistent opponent of the league, and that it is utterly inconsistent with his previous assertion that agreements of this kind are a surrender of sovereignty, makes no difference.

I am opposed to increased taxes on moderate incomes. Already these incomes are bearing a larger proportion of taxation than is justified. A radical revision of the war income taxes is essential to the prosperity of the country, and in that revision the moderate income taxpayer must have his burdens reduced instead of increased.

To sum up, I should say that a more liberal policy about domestic credits ought now to be pursued; that our foreign trade should be stimulated and enlarged; that the War Finance Corporation should be revived to assist it; that the German indemnity should be defined as quickly as possible, so that the central European markets may be opened to our farmers, manufacturers, and business men; that trade relations with Russia should be resumed as promptly as possible; that a large part of the floating debt of the Treasury should be funded; and that taxation ought to be reduced and readjusted at this session of the Congress.

If these steps are taken promptly, I believe that they will greatly relieve the present distressing situation.

[Telegram showing position on the bill of Hon. CLAUDE KITCHIN.]

SCOTLAND NECK, N. C., December 18, 1920.

Hon. CHARLES R. CRISP,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

YOUR, GARNER'S, and DICKINSON'S telegram received.

While you can count on my standing by what the Democrats on the committee do, my judgment is that there is nothing in the proposition that will help the cotton and tobacco farmer of the South and the grain farmer of the West, and much in the future that might hurt him. It may increase prices of some of his necessary purchases. Only oils from agricultural products should be included. Certainly mineral oils should be excluded, their prices already sky high; and, too, they are already the object of outrageous favoritism in the tax act. The proposition may help the live-stock men and the peanut growers for next year's crop—not for this year's. They (the peanut farmers) must sell this year's crop before a bag of foreign nuts can reach here after the act. If Democrats favor the proposition, couple it with a clear, rigid, enforceable, nonprofiteering provision protecting the manufacturers of such products; otherwise they will take it as an excuse to excessively profiteer. The proposition, if enacted, may prove indirectly a virtue by undeceiving the western farmer with respect to the tariff, since, in my opinion, the farmer will experience practically no beneficial effect from it. In our section the only things that will help now are for the Secretary of the Treasury to function according to the intent and purpose of the War Finance Corporation extension act we passed in the Sixty-fifth Congress for the benefit of exports, and for the Reserve Board not to charge discount rate higher than 1 per cent less than the legal rate of interest in the State in which the loan is made. For instance, legal rate in North Carolina is 6 per cent; when money is loaned to banks in this State by the reserve bank, the rate should not exceed 5 per cent. This leaves a margin of 1 per cent to cover the expense and some little profit to the borrowing bank which will loan to the people. Remember if a prohibitive tariff or embargo is good in times of emergencies, it is good in normal times to prevent future emergencies. Can we afford to educate our farmers that high tariffs are his salvation now and hereafter? The products of our farmers in the United States are in large part exported. How can their exports be paid for by foreigners except by imports? An embargo or prohibitive tariff cuts off the means of paying for our agricultural exports.

CLAUDE KITCHIN.

[Editorial from Springfield (Mass.) Republican of December 20, 1920.]

WEAKNESS IN CONGRESS.

Congress is showing decided weakness in yielding so easily to western and southern demands for measures designed to neutralize deflation with more inflation and to shield producers, as against consumers, from the effects of falling prices. The experience following the Civil War, when a bill to inflate the currency was finally passed and vetoed by President Grant, is being recalled by the present temper of Senate and House. Fifty years ago deflation of prices began, after the inflation of the war's greenback issues, and the Greenback Party was formed to prevent, by political control of the Government, the return of prices to a hard-money basis. The recent severe fall in prices has brought into being in the agricultural States of the West and South very much the same sentiment in favor of inflationary measures that swept over the United States in the late sixties and early seventies.

Everyone must keenly sympathize with agricultural producers. Official figures show that the 1920 harvest—one of the largest in history—is worth some $5,000,000,000 less than last year's harvest sold for. This shrinkage in values from $14,000,000,000 to $9,000,000,000 has been parelleled, however, in some other lines of commodities. Grain and cotton growers and live-stock men are not the only ones to be hit. Half the textile mills in New England are shut down or are on half time. The American Woolen Co. in its auction sale of overcoatings in New York last week realized less than 40 per cent of the prices of a year ago. Cloth sold at $6 a yard last year brought less than $1.50. The 22½ per cent wage reduction already announced will affect 100,000 mill operatives in these New England States.

The bill to revive the War Finance Corporation, which has passed the Senate and is expected to pass the House, is really a measure to increase prices of farm products by what amounts to a huge Government subsidy to the export trade. If it should meet expectations, it would force renewed inflation on the country, tend to increase taxes, and add greatly to Europe's debt to America for goods received but not paid for. It means also plunging the Government back into business, although the Republican Party for two years has been demanding on the stump that the Government get out of business.

Other measures are being promoted to much the same end. An increase of the tariff on farm products to prohibitory rates has been decided upon by the House Ways and Means Committee. An embargo on wool is also favored in powerful circles. While these are called "emergency measures," who can doubt that once enacted they could not soon be modified or repealed? Meanwhile, surprising as it may seem, the idea of shutting out all imports seems to be spreading like an epidemic. The economic incongruity between the measures to subsidize exports while prohibiting imports fails to impress the people most directly concerned financially. But there is some logic in the statement of an eastern textile journal, Fiber and Fabric: "Embargo everything or nothing is the only fair course." If prohibitive duties are to be levied on farm products, should not manufactures have them also?

Such an extreme course as an all-inclusive embargo is not to be tolerated, of course, but the passage of some of the proposed bills for the special benefit of producers should be considered with reference to that great class of consumers that work for salaries and wages. In many industries wages are going down. The textile industry is already affected in this way. The iron and steel industry is following suit. These wage reductions are being justified on the ground that the cost of living has fallen. But if the prices of food and clothing are to be kept up to a degree by Congress through legislation, the economic argument for wage cuts will be seriously weakened. In short, the whole readjustment process may be thrown out of gear by the acts which Congress now contemplates. For if there is to be deflation, it must reach all economic classes or social disturbances will be intensified.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I understood that we had agreed upon time. I now understand that we had not, and I move that the committee do now rise and fix the time for general debate.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. WALSH, Speaker pro tempore, having resumed the chair, Mr. ANDERSON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 15275, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I now move that general debate be closed at 3 o'clock.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order against that motion that it is out of order.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Speaker, debate has been had on the bill in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and it is quite competent to close the debate in the House on a majority vote.

Mr. BLANTON. I believe the gentleman is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Michigan.

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that that time be divided between myself and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY].

Mr. GARNER. That is, divide the control of the time between the gentleman from Michigan and the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FORDNEY. Divide the time; I be permitted to control half of it, and the gentleman from Illinois to control half of it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that that time be controlled half by himself and half by the gentleman from Illinois. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15275.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15275, with Mr. ANDERSON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 15275, which the Clerk will report by title.

UMI

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 15275) imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH].

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply for the purpose of putting in evidence just what I meant by the statement I made yesterday, a part of which my friend from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] did me the honor to quote. I fear a false impression might be derived from his quoting only a few words of the sentence that I proposed that we should forgive the debts of our allies. On the contrary, I took precisely the opposite position. I read the entire sentence.

I hope that Europe's tremendous debt to us will prove to be collectible. I am not one of those who believe that any part of the debt ought to be forgiven. I do not think it quite respectful to the debtor countries to assume that their debts, properly and honorably contracted, are not eventually to be paid in full. But if it came to the last ditch, if it should eventuate that the only possible way to collect these debts would be to surrender to the nations of the world the home market of America, I would say, "Let us sacrifice every cent of the money owed us rather than sacrifice our industrial independence."

[Applause.]

I meant that when I said it and I mean it now. There is later in my speech a suggestion as to how we could enable these debtor nations to trade in our markets and thus pay some of their debts with their products, but I confined that to the debtor nations and not to the nations of the world who owe us nothing. I proposed that we should have separate reciprocal trade agreements with those countries, such as Mr. McKinley proposed 19 years ago. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG].

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I entertain a very high regard for my colleague on the committee [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] but I think it is only due to this House that I should correct some of the statements that he has made at this time. He states in his report in respect to wheat:

At the present time wheat is coming in free from Canada. This is the logical result of the reciprocity propositions of the Taft administration.

The fact is that it is the logical result of the Underwood law and not of the Taft reciprocity proposal. The Taft administration proposed a reciprocity arrangement with Canada which many through the West thought was a mighty poor trade. Still it was a trade, and Canada made important concessions to the United States in her markets for the privilege of obtaining the admission of certain agricultural products into the United States, but under the Underwood law a free gift was made to Canada of our markets, and we got absolutely nothing in return. In other words, the gate swung only one way—toward the United States.

The second statement I wish to call to your attention, made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY], is this. He says:

This bill will not help the wheat farmers of the Northwest, the most of whom have disposed of their wheat.

The fact is that only 25 per cent of the wheat in the hands of the farmers through the Northwest has been sold up to this time.

Then, he says again:

Canadian wheat is better than ours and commands always a higher price in Winnipeg than our wheat commands in Minneapolis.

That is the first time I ever heard anybody on earth make such a statement. It is notoriously the fact that the price of wheat always rules higher in Minneapolis than in Winnipeg, considering the fact that the quotations at Winnipeg cover wheat in storage at Fort William, Ontario, and not wheat delivered at Winnipeg.

The statement has also been made that these rates are too high, and complaint has been made that wheat carries 30 cents rather than 25 cents per bushel. The fact is that we will get only about 7½ cents a bushel, as against 25 cents under the Payne law and 10 cents under the Underwood law as introduced.

The discount on Canadian money to-day is 16 per cent. It has averaged lately about 15 per cent. The price of wheat is around $1.50 per bushel.

Figuring it out on the basis of 15 per cent, it would amount to 22½ cents a bushel. Then figuring the rate in this bill, 30 cents a bushel, less the exchange item of 22½ cents, we are left 7½ cents a bushel protection. That is what we actually get for wheat under the present exchange conditions, under this bill.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY] is pretty hard to please. He says this bill will do absolutely no good to cotton because we export 60 per cent of it, or a large part of it. He also says that it will do us no good with wool because we must import to take care of our national requirements and we have an immense supply of wool on hand. It seems to me that is a very poor kind of logic, and I place my prediction against his that this bill will be of decided benefit to the woolgrowers.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I would be very glad to, but for the fact that there is so much pressure for time. Mr. Chairman, to those who say we must compete with the wheat of Canada in the European markets I wish to call attention to the present export conditions. We are experiencing difficulty in selling wheat for export to Europe because of the breakdown of the exchange of European countries. Canada is having the same difficulty. They can not profitably sell there, because the European countries want to pay for it in depreciated money. As against this they are selling here and receiving payment in money which is at a good premium. To-day every $100 paid to Canadians is worth to them $116. Yesterday it was worth $115. It has been averaging of late about $115. We are up against a condition and not a theory.

I am supporting this bill not because it is perfect, nor because it contains all the items I would like to have in it or tried to get in it, but because it represents the best we could obtain. In this connection, I wish to express my appreciation for the courtesy shown me, a representative of an agricultural district, by the members of the Ways and Means Committee. The committee has been generous to me and fair to the Northwestern States, considering what has been done for other sections of the country.

Mr. Chairman, an important conference of western and southern Members of Congress was held last Monday, at which there was adopted a report which I desire to have printed in the RECORD, and, therefore, for that purpose ask for permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE APPOINTED BY A CONFERENCE OF WESTERN, CENTRAL, AND SOUTHERN MEMBERS OF CONGRESS TO RECOMMEND A PROGRAM OF AGRICULTURAL REMEDIAL LEGISLATION AND PLAN OF ACTION IN RESPECT THERETO.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 20, 1920.

To Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON, M. C.,
Chairman of the Conference.

MR. CHAIRMAN: Your special committee on legislative program and plan of action beg leave to report that after careful consideration we have decided to recommend that the members of our conference center their efforts during the next 10 days or so to secure the passage of three measures:

(1) The emergency tariff bill.
(2) The War Finance Corporation bill.
(3) The Young-Tincher bill now pending before the Committee on Banking and Currency, which provides for the loaning, through the Federal land banks, of $100,000,000 of the profits of the Federal reserve banks upon notes secured by agricultural products.

It is already apparent from telegrams received that there will be protests upon the part of certain agricultural interests not taken care of in the emergency tariff bill, and we believe the members of this conference should try, as far as possible, to unite for the passage of the bill as reported from the Ways and Means Committee through the House, reserving desired changes for presentation either to the Senate committee or the conference committee, in order not to delay the passage of the bill through the House before Christmas, so that it may be referred to the Senate Committee on Finance and receive consideration through the brief Christmas recess.

Four members of your special committee are also members of the Ways and Means Committee. The bill as reported does not represent what we requested and fought for in the Committee on Ways and Means, but it was the best which we could secure from a committee which also has in its membership representatives of the great consuming public of the East, and also of manufacturers' interests throughout the country, whose claims for recognition in this bill were refused.

It is quite possible that no member of our conference will find the bill sufficiently broad to meet the expectations of his constituents. We believe, however, that this is a time when all must be willing to sacrifice something in order to secure the passage and approval of a bill which will give a measure of relief to the farm producers. We believe that we should accept what is obtainable, rather than attempt to load up the bill with amendments to such an extent as to endanger its passage in the Senate or its approval by the President.

The bill now includes those particular farm products which have been hardest hit. To add other products might destroy to some extent the emergency character of the bill, which is the theory upon which the bill is being pressed for quick action by Congress and in advance of tariff hearings. We believe it will be the best plan, considering the opposition of the consumers and manufacturers, to make the bill not only emergency in name but emergency in fact.

It should also be remembered that the Ways and Means Committee has already begun the consideration of a general tariff bill, and in its preparation the interests of all producers will be considered.

The membership of your special committee, made up of Republicans and Democrats, have worked together with the utmost good feeling and harmony. We join in the hope that no effort will be made to drag in politics or seek to gain party advantage. Any other course would be unfair and might cause embarrassment or failure.

We hope the members of the conference will exercise patience with the members of this committee, as well as the Ways and Means Committee, in the performance of a difficult task.

We also ask leave to continue the consideration of a further legislative program, to be reported at an early date.

GEORGE M. YOUNG, North Dakota, Chairman.
CARL W. RIDDICK, Montana.
N. J. SINNOTT, Oregon.
CHARLES B. TIMBERLAKE, Colorado.
WILLIAM A. AYRES, Kansas.
FRANK L. SMITH, Illinois.
J. STANLEY WEBSTER, Washington.
J. N. TINCHER, Kansas.
CLAUDE B. HUDSPETH, Texas.
WHITMELL P. MARTIN, Louisiana.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO].

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for this farmers' emergency tariff bill on the ground that it is better to get half a loaf than none at all. I would like to see the bill contain more duty on certain articles, say, rice, for instance. I would also like to see the bill include some other articles, for instance sugar, and others. But the Committee on Ways and Means tell us that this is the only farmers' emergency tariff bill they can submit and pass at this time. However, they promise us that they will begin hearings soon, with the view of bringing in a permanent and scientific tariff bill for consideration in the near future.

I have always considered a tariff an economic and not a partisan question, and I have always voted accordingly. For this reason I have always advocated a nonpartisan, nonsectional scientific tariff commission, on the ground that information and facts must be gathered and conditions of commerce and industry analyzed by such a commission before a policy can be determined upon or tariff rates fixed by the Congress.

The last war has demonstrated to all the necessity of our country having its owa vital industries at home and of not depending on foreign countries in time of emergency. The only way to have our industries going at home in time of emergency is to protect and develop them in time of peace. I am sure the southern Members will remember the enormous loss to the cotton farmers of the South when the war broke out, because the United States had no merchant marine to carry our cotton to the markets of the world. Also, our difficulty in obtaining dyes and many other things we needed at home. I have always contended that protection should be given our agricultural products in proportion to the protection given the manufactured products. The producers of the agricultural sections can no longer survive under a policy that compels them to buy in a protected market and sell in a free market. In other words, this Nation can not prosper as a whole and permanently half protected and half free. There is a general awakening throughout the agricultural sections of the United States on the importance of revising our tariff laws, and keen interest is being taken in our treaty relations with foreign countries affecting commerce and trade. Our farmers can no longer compete with those of foreign countries, for instance in Asia, where they wear very little clothing and live on practically nothing, without sinking to their level or go broke. For years everything in the shape of manufactured goods has been petted and coddled and protected, and the real source of production and the real life blood of America has received very little attention of any kind. This, of course, is due to the fact that labor is organized, capital is organized, industry is organized, and the farmers are unorganized. Farmers are leaving the farm to migrate to the cities because they can no longer afford to pay for the present high cost of labor, implements, and fertilizers to raise corn, cotton, rice, cane, peanuts, and other commodities at the prices they are selling for. We must equalize the cost of production in this country with that of foreign countries, so far as may be consistent with the public welfare, such schedules to be so placed as to fairly distribute the burdens and benefits among all industries, without discriminating against any section, class, or product, to the end that there may be maintained American standards of living in every line of effort.

It should be plain to any thinking man that free trade can never be successfully approached until all the people of the world shall have developed to an equal degree. Not until their education, methods of living, morals, and ideals become the same could we begin to think of free trade, and when that is reached there will always remain the great natural difference of soil and climate, and the nearness to the great markets of the world. Let me call the attention of my southern friends who are interested in the cotton industry and whose constituents are sacrificing their cotton seed for almost nothing to the fact that we have imported, during the last fiscal year, 538,878,000 pounds of oil from foreign lands, as follows:

	Pounds.
Coconut oil	269,226,000
Cottonseed oil	24,164,000
Palm oil	50,162,000
Soy-bean oil	195,326,000
Total	538,878,000

to which we must add 33,906,000 gallons of Chinese nuts, peanuts, and so forth, in the crude state. This should appeal to the peanut growers' Representatives also.

We imported, mostly from Egypt, 690,000 bales of cotton, valued at $159,918,000, during the last fiscal year. This was principally long staple, which competes with our long-staple varieties, produced by very high-priced labor, as against the cheap labor of Egypt and India.

Then, too, let us consider for a moment the rice industry. Our people were appealed to to produce more. They have bought land and implements at high prices; they have bored wells for irrigation; and they have paid labor high to make the largest crop they ever produced, and to-day not only that rice is selling away below the cost of production but there are practically no markets. And yet rice is being imported from Asiatic countries where they produce it for practically nothing.

As a foundation to any stability of values in the live-stock industry, we must have protection against cattle raising in South America and the sheep raisers of Australia and New Zealand. Due to cheap land, cheap labor, tropical climate, luxuriant grass, and the fact that they have a larger percentage of calves and no winter season in South America, meat can be produced in those countries for much less per pound than in the United States. All of the big American packers have plants in South America, some of them larger than anything they have in the United States. As matters now stand, they can put us out of business with cheap foreign meat, or put the price up on the consumer, as they choose.

While we wish to assist other countries all we can, our first duty is to America. In conclusion, I want to say to the Representatives from the large eastern and northern cities, who always take the view that measures for the relief of the farmers mean higher prices to their consumers, that if something is not done immediately for the relief of the farmers to enable them to meet their obligations and plant a crop next year there will be the shortest food crop in the history of the country in 1921. This will not only cause nonemployment, hunger, and suffering, but higher prices to their consumers. Let me also call their attention to the fact that when the purchasing power of the farmers is destroyed their manufactures will be paralyzed. They should also understand that it is not the price of our raw agricultural products that cause the high cost of living. The high cost of living during normal times is mainly due to a faulty system of distribution and marketing which lets in too many middlemen, who profit at the expense of both the producers and the consumers. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNYDER].

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Chairman, to my mind it can not be said that there is not an emergency and a very hazardous condition existing to-day in the agricultural industry of this country. The only reason why I would feel at this time justified in voting for this bill is because of that fact. It may be true, as has been stated here, that the farmers of the country are in many cases on the verge of bankruptcy, but that is a condition that is also true of many other industries in the United States to-day. In the limited time necessary, however, to bring out an emergency measure I can easily conceive that it is not possible to cover all of the industries which should be covered at this time. In voting for this bill I am taking into consideration the statement and the knowledge we have of the fact that in the near future investigations will begin which will very soon bring about a comprehensive tariff measure which will cover all of the industries throughout the whole country that require protection. It would be difficult for me to vote against any measure looking to the protection of any industry in the country. Therefore, as I said a moment ago, I shall, with some reluctance, vote for this bill.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I think the gentleman will concede that at the present time and under the present administration, as a matter of practical legislation, it is utterly hopeless to expect a comprehensive tariff bill to become a law.

Mr. SNYDER. The gentleman is quite right. However, what I am most disturbed about is that throughout the entire United States to-day, particularly in the industrial centers, there is a condition existing where 50 per cent of those who work in the industries of the country are unemployed. They naturally feel that they are just as near to bankruptcy as the farmers in some other sections of the country.

Mr. McFADDEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNYDER. In a moment. It is my belief that if it were not for the difference in the exchange rates to-day as between Canada and the United States, that this bill, if it becomes a law, would increase the price of flour $2 a barrel within 10 days after it does become a law, and the question naturally arises in my mind, how can I justify myself in voting for a measure which will increase the price of flour to the people in the Mohawk Valley, from which I come, 50 per cent of whom are out of work, and are finding it difficult to exist through the winter? That is what I am up against, as are many other men in the House; and yet in the hope that this will do what the proposers of it think it will, and because of the fact that I have some knowledge of conditions in the West, where I traveled a long distance last summer, and where it was impossible not to observe that the agricultural interests of the country are in a very hazardous condition, and also in the hope that the bill will start up business and make a market for some of these products, I shall vote for it. Yet at the same time I can not help realizing that the one industry in which I am particularly interested, and many others in which I am interested in an indirect way, are in practically the same condition as the wool industry or the agricultural industry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. KINKAID].

Mr. KINKAID. Mr. Chairman, I have read somewhere in the Scriptures that "He who does not provide for his own household is worse than an infidel." In keeping with this declaration, I conceive it to be the first duty of a government to promote and preserve the welfare of its citizens. I am a firm believer in the Scripture I have quoted, therefore I have for years been a devout supporter of the beneficent policy of the protection of American labor and American industries. I shall support the pending bill both for the protection it will afford to American producers and for the revenue it will place in the Treasury. It seems very clear to me that if we shall not promote and preserve prosperity in our own country, first by our production and then by maintaining our home market, the best market in the world for Americans and all other peoples, we will be derelict in the discharge of our duties. I maintain that it is a first obligation to be discharged by our Government to look to the success and prosperity of its own citizens. And how can America be of assistance to foreign countries who stand in need of our helpful cooperation for the uplift of their needy without we shall first reestablish our own prosperity? Mr. Chairman, I repeat, I am in favor of the bill for the revenue it will bring into the Treasury, as well as for the protection it will afford to farmers and stock raisers. The present revenue law, passed at the commencement of the Wilson administration, has been placing in the Treasury only about $225,000,000 a year, which is about one-third of what was produced by the revenue law passed under the Taft administration, yet the importations from foreign countries have been increased several hundred per cent over what they were under the Taft law. Why hold open the gates to foreign producers at merely nominal rates of toll when there never was a time in our history when we were in greater need of revenue? Had not the great war occurred, the damaging industrial effects of the low rates imposed under the Wilson administration would have been much more fully realized and extended than has been the case, and this was evidenced by the untoward figures ascertained and unfavorable industrial conditions which resulted before the war. The present situation is peculiar and unprecedented. The effects upon trade and prices and our commercial relations with other nations, including the difference in exchange, are now so upset and demoralized that it is impossible to determine precisely where we are at. The consequence is that the fixing of dutiable rates is attended with risk, yet relief must be afforded with the chance that some imperfections will occur.

When general tariff revision shall be taken up by the new Congress we should so legislate as to not foster profiteering, and diligence will be required to avoid doing so. But, in my judgment, the pending bill does not contain any such possibilities. It looks only to the preservation of the agricultural industry. There perhaps never was a time when such a great sacrifice has been suffered by American farmers. The crops now on their hands were produced on a high cost basis, but since they have been gathered and harvested and before disposition could be made prices had fallen to points below the actual cost of production in most cases. The losses thereby sustained by farmers are estimated in the billions. All know that the obligations of farmers incurred previous to the last few months were contracted when prices were high for all commodities, and, correspondingly, all the moneys they borrowed were expended on a high-priced basis, so that their indebtedness carried down to this time has been virtually doubled or more in what it will take of their products to liquidate. This great hardship has been brought about by circumstances to which the victims have not contributed and could not possibly control, and such relief as the Congress may be able to afford will only be fair and just to these producers, and I am sure what may result will inure to the general welfare of our Republic.

Lack of adequate railway transportation for the movement of crops when they were first gathered prevented many from selling when no loss would have occurred. Since the great drop in prices, the financial situation has been such as to prevent farmers from borrowing money to enable them to carry their surplus, awaiting the return of adequate prices.

To those who oppose this remedial measure, I respond that the case is exceptional, because it is not economic laws, not the ordinary law of supply and demand, which has brought about the present situation. It was not economic laws or the law of supply and demand that first lifted prices of commodities in general, including farm products, as high as the housetops. Neither has it been the law of supply and demand unhampered that caused the prices to come down again independently of governmental orders and policies. At the commencement and during the war the Government did much to stimulate farmers to greatly increase their productions. This of itself required an increase of labor with increased prices to be paid therefor. Take, for instance, amateur carpenters who could handle a handsaw and drive nails were paid $11 a day early in the war in building cantonments and other structures, and at the same time the thoroughly skilled and experienced were paid twice that much. The numerous munition factories, shipbuilding yards, and other activities, preparatory to war, called into their service hundreds of thousands of laborers, paying prices in keeping with these high standards.

Adding to the exhaustion of available farm help, we must not overlook the direct loss of farmers' sons and farm hands from the fields who became enrolled for war service. Due to these causes prices for farm labor were increased from 200 to 300 per cent, and such prices were paid for help in raising the crops now on hand. Again, it must not be forgotten that at the start, to stimulate the growing of wheat, the Congress fixed the minimum price at a certain increased amount, dependent upon the terminal points, notwithstanding other influences may have caused it to go higher had not the legislation occurred. This very act caused corn to reach prices relatively higher than wheat, without any legislation therefor. The embargo effected by the war against foreign importations also made its contribution to high prices in general, including the products of the farm.

But another potent agency in raising prices was the inflation of the circulating medium by the operation of the Federal Reserve Law. Certainly it must be granted that this system was a great auxiliary in the financing of preparations for and waging the war to a successful end, nevertheless it carried along with it the bad effects of inflation of currency and prices, which is always calculated to demoralize business more or less if not duly limited both in extent and duration. It is my recollection that the expansion of credits for the 18 months during the war was 16 per cent. If we had stopped right there when the armistice was signed, the problem of inflation, always a precarious one to business, could have been handled very successfully under the careful administration of the Federal Reserve Law directed to that end. We all have known we had to get down from off the housetops to prewar prices somehow, and the problem was how to go about it in a manner the best to avoid serious injury. To be pushed off suddenly or jump therefrom clear down to prewar prices was sure to result in serious injury. But had the degree of inflation reached at the time the armistice was signed been there permanently arrested, stopped, the process of deflation might have, under the carefully directed guidance of the administration of the Federal Reserve Law, been brought about almost imperceptibly. But what occurred? We did not stop at the signing of the armistice. Only a short time intervened until the same policy pursued during the war of increasing credits was resumed; not only that, but the rate of expansion was increased, so that between March 5, 1919, and February 28, 1920, loans were increased through the agency of the Federal Reserve Banks, inferably by the direction of the Federal Reserve Board, $2,303,000,000, or 24 per cent.

The increase of loans made by the Federal Reserve Banks, combined with those made by State banks and trust companies, aggregated $5,200,000,000. Accordingly, instead of stopping short the inflation of currency and prices when the cause therefor had ceased the policy was continued at an increased rate. Take, for instance, the cattle-growing sections of the West—farmers and ranchmen received suggestions from their bankers, understood to come from the Federal Reserve Banks, presumably with the sanction of the Federal Reserve Board, to buy and carry more cattle, with the pledge that the promissory notes they gave to the banks for the money wherewith to pay for the cattle would be purchased and carried by the Federal Reserve Banks, and that was done and an equal amount of new Federal Reserve Notes was issued in payment of the cattle paper. But before the cattle could be matured the makers of the notes were called upon to make payment without a renewal of their obligations which they had been accustomed to rely upon, with the result that they were obliged to sell their cattle at a sacrifice to meet their obligations.

Another cause which has contributed to the drop in prices was the fact that the war left European countries without any money with which to buy our products, while the individual consumers of the United States were left full-handed as a result of the nominal and more or less artificial and fallacious prosperity caused temporarily by the war. True, things commenced to take a backward course in businesses on the signing of the armistice and the reverses that usually follow wars have been verified in this instance and in some respects excelled. Because money was plentiful in America and scarce in other countries possessed of a surplus of farm products, it was very natural that these competing countries should seek our shores as a market, and that has occurred, especially as to the products of the farm listed in the pending bill, so that our American market has become glutted. All the while American consumers have become less able to buy because of the process of deflation which has been going on, and this has been especially so with labor, because thousands have been thrown out of employment while the wages of those retained have been reduced. A peculiar hardship to the farmer is that the prices of what he consumes have not been reduced in proportion to the decline of prices in his own products. Farmers now find themselves unprepared to protect their interests like manufacturers and other industries are organized more or less to accomplish.

The duties provided by the bill are as follows:

Wheat, 30 cents per bushel.
Wheat flour, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Corn or maize, 15 cents per bushel.
Beans, 2 cents per pound.
Peanuts, 3 cents per pound.
Potatoes, 25 cents per bushel.
Onions, 40 cents per bushel.
Rice, uncleaned, 1½ cents per pound; cleaned, 2 cents per pound.
Lemons, 1½ cents per pound.
Peanut oil, 26 cents per gallon.
Cottonseed, coconut, and soya-bean oil, 20 cents per gallon.
Cattle, 20 per cent ad valorem.
Sheep, 1 year old, $2 per head; less than 1 year old, $1 per head.
Fresh mutton and lamb, 2½ cents per pound.
Long-staple cotton, 7 cents per pound, with a compensatory duty of 7 cents per pound in addition to existing rates upon the manufactures thereof.
Unwashed wool, 15 cents per pound.
Washed wool, 30 cents per pound.
Scoured wool, 45 cents per pound, with a compensatory duty of 45 cents per pound in addition to existing duties upon the manufactures of wool.

The emergency time is limited to 10 months, and it is estimated that the revenue realized will amount to $130,395,586. This estimate is based upon the table prepared by an actuary of the Treasury Department, as follows:

Article.	Proposed duty.	Estimated imports.	Estimated revenue.	Present revenue.
Wheat	30 cents per bushel	$7,008,400.00	$2,109,520.00	$12,290.00

Mr. Chairman, all of the products listed in this bill have been since the war and are now coming into the United States from foreign countries and sold in our own markets in competition with our own products. While our producers are helping to pay the heavy taxes resulting from the costs of the war, these importers are competing with them in their own home market, with the payment of no duties as to some things and very small duties as to others. Is that fair? In other words, is it fair to give the foreign producer a financial advantage over the American producer in our American market? The pending bill is intended to right this manifest wrong. It is a patriotic bill, because it stands for America and American producers. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. FREAR].

Mr. FREAR. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe we are going to realize all we hope from this bill. I do not favor all of the propositions contained in the bill, taken separately, but I do believe that a critical situation confronts this country, and particularly the farmers of the country, which requires the passage of some bill for relief. This bill will go far toward that result. It is true that in the East and elsewhere there is not the relief granted that we would like to give to business, which clamors for aid, but the people are all flowing toward the cities from the country to-day, and you could not haul them out from the cities onto the farms with an ox team. When we find our farms idle there is going to be a problem more serious than the public appreciates to-day. As has been shown by our report, over 64,000,000 pounds of lamb and mutton have been shipped into this country from Argentina and other countries within four months. That meat has been placed on the market in competition with our farmers, who can not get money even to pay the freight to bring their sheep to market, according to their own statements. The price received for their sheep is nearly all absorbed in freight and other charges. With such conditions something must be done to shut off this importation of mutton.

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FREAR. I regret I have not the time.

It can not be done in the House, but in another body I would like to see put upon this Argentine mutton, now being placed in cold storage, a heavy tax on all of the mutton, or that portion of it shipped to this country within the last four months, with a requirement that unless it be taken out of cold storage within the next two months the tax would apply. [Applause.] I would not permit this bill to be used so that dressed meat from South America could be brought in for the advantage of the beef packers. I would make it what we intend to have it, namely, strictly a protection to the farmers. While what I have said is true of mutton and lamb, it is equally true of wheat to a large extent, for we are bringing in millions of bushels of wheat every day. Fifty-six million bushels have come into this country from Canada since the 2d day of December, or in less than three weeks, according to a report furnished our committee.

There are trainloads coming in from Canada constantly and they come into direct competition with wheat raised by our own farmers. I know whereof I speak, for they write to me that they may have to abandon their farms; that they can not get enough to pay their expenses and taxes this year. With that condition, gentlemen, knowing that agricultural prosperity is the foundation of good business conditions, I say to you it is absolutely necessary for this bill to pass in this form if we can not get it in any other.

The measure is drawn to meet critical conditions in the West and South that require immediate relief if we would preserve our farms and save those who are threatening to abandon them. Products of my own State are suffering from competing importations, but I accept the rule of the majority that only the most pressing cases can be cared for in this emergency bill.

With a demoralized foreign exchange and heavy trade in our favor and with $130,000,000 estimated revenue from the bill with which to relieve the Treasury, I shall support it. I do believe a great part of our high retail prices to-day come from combinations that profit out of the necessities of the people. Better marketing conditions, heavy taxes on cold-storage meats, and exposure of profiteering will bring some relief, but during these days of readjustment of business conditions to a normal basis no law, however sweeping, can correct economic conditions brought about by the war. A scientific adjustment of the tariff next session will help to meet the situation, but in the meantime this emergency legislation is demanded by those who furnish the food from the farms.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield a half minute to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GRIFFIN].

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. Chairman, not being a member of the committee that reports this bill, and not being able to get sufficient time to do justice to the subject, I ask unanimous consent to extend and revise my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The manner in which this bill has been shunted upon the floor of this House utterly precludes the possibility of its careful, deliberate, and thoughtful consideration. Outside of the few members of the Committee on Ways and Means, which gave it, I understand, a more or less perfunctory consideration, very few of the Members of this House were apprised of its impending arrival or the full extent of its provisions. It is true that we received an intimation yesterday of its proposed appearance from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH], who was scheduled, by a special order of the day, to talk for 45 minutes, after the reading of the Journal and the disposition of business on the Speaker's table, on "Tariff and trade agreements." Instead of sticking to his subject, however, he launched into a labored defense of the protective policy of the Republican Party and an argument in behalf of the measure which is now before us. He thus was enabled to steal a march upon the House and obtain 45 minutes for the discussion of this bill before it really came before us. Now, the bill is here and the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee proposes that the discussion upon it be limited to three hours, all of which will necessarily be consumed by the members of his committee. The rest of us must be content to sit and listen, and in large measure be denied the privilege of interrogating the speakers to bring out the full intent of the measure.

As one of the Members of the House representing a large constituency in the heart of the metropolis of the Western World, it is not unreasonable to expect that that constituency, through its spokesman, should be heard. The people of my district do not ask me for excuses when matters of great moment are under consideration if I fail to voice their sentiments. They know nothing about the rules of this House, and care less. They do not know that the only legislation that can come before this body is that which receives the approval of the steering committee—an unconstitutional appendix to our legislative system that was never within the contemplation of the framers of our Constitution. Our constituencies do not know that questions of the profoundest import to the welfare of the country may be germinated in the cabal of the steering committee; transplanted thence to the appropriate committee; potted in haste to the House itself, and there brought to flower under the oratory of party leaders.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] gives as an excuse for the haste he demands that the bill must be passed to-day. But why to-day? Is it possible that he is bound under some pledge to the speculators and profiteers—who are the only ones who will profit under this bill—to present them with this legislation as a Christmas present? Such haste is unseemly and brings, somewhat justly, upon this body the oft-repeated criticism that it is not a legislative body in the true sense of the term.

While this debate has been going on I have had placed in my hand a long telegram from W. V. Hamilton, president of the New York State Millers' Association, earnestly requesting my assistance in seeing that this measure is beaten. He says that the measure of protection now proposed is unnecessarily high. I merely mention this in order to show how unjust it is to force through a measure of this kind without giving the people of the country an opportunity to be heard. No doubt after the bill is passed hundreds of similar requests will pour in to us.

The New York World, in an editorial, on December 2, 1920, said:

> Congress has long been the most incompetent, the most shiftless, and the most irresponsible branch of the Federal Government. * * * Its rules are made for the suppression of liberty and the glorification of mediocrity. It functions according to seniority, and seniority is merely a crude western reversion to the Chinese system of ancestral worship. Any fool who can manage to hold his seat will eventually become chairman of one of the most important committees or the ranking member of the minority on that committee.

Of course, it goes without saying, that I am very far, indeed, from approving of that sentiment. A man is not a fool who can hold his seat in this House; although his friends may often judge him unwise in dedicating his life to a service which is so inadequately compensated or appreciated. The management of this bill on the floor, however, and the wholly unnecessary curtailment of debate upon it are some of the things which lend color to criticism, such as that just mentioned, and tends to create general dissatisfaction with congressional methods.

This bill proposes to impose temporary duties upon agricultural products for a period of 10 months, beginning the day following its passage. It is difficult to divine the real purpose of a Republican House in passing such a measure. It is so utterly opposed to the trend of Republican policy in the past, that the inquisitive are justified in venturing the question: Has the great Republican Party reached the parting of the ways and come to the conclusion that it is high time to cater to the cotton States of the South? Perhaps their success in one of the districts of Texas and in some of the States of the South has inspired the belief that there is a chance for further conquests below the Mason-Dixon line. If the South is going to be fooled by this sop to their staple industry, I shall be much deceived.

All previous tariff legislation emanating from the Republican Party has invariably been twisted to suit the supposed needs of the manufacturing and industrial centers. Now, it appears, they are giving belated attention to the needs of agriculture. But, my dear friends from the South, do not be fooled by the tempting bait that is dangled before your eyes. The South has always stood for free trade or at most a tariff for revenue only. There is hardly a word in this bill for the comfort of the manufacturer. The omission is purposely made, my friends, in order to lull you to sleep. Wait until the Republican Party brings out its new tariff bill in the next House. Then you will find your manufacturing friends amply taken care of, and you, unfortunately having been led into this cul-de-sac, will find yourselves estopped from registering any protest against the exorbitant concessions to the manufacturer. You will find that your forces have been broken into and you will have no unity to combat the incursion.

The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] in his remarks told a pathetic story of the ranchman that had a little lamb that he sent to market. Lambs, it appears, were selling for $2.10 per head, notwithstanding which, when the ranchman got his returns from the consignee, all he received after the payment of freight and other charges was 33 cents. This, if true, is truly sad, but how will an increase of $1 per head on sheep help the ranchman? How much of the additional dollar will the ranchman get, and the railroads, the packers, and the middlemen steal? That is the question. If they steal in the same proportion they will receive 85 cents and the ranchman will receive 15 cents out of the additional dollar which this bill will add to the cost of the sheep. Obviously, then, the principal beneficiaries of this legislation will be the railroads, the packers, and the middlemen. Do you not see how futile it is to attempt to adjust inequalities of distribution, such as this, by mere tariff schedules? Those conditions must be removed by thoughtful legislation, controlling and regulating the charges of the railroads, speculators, and middlemen, and controlling, if not preventing, the vast accumulation of products purposely held out of the market to enhance their price.

It is time to understand that there are malign forces at work in this country which have the will and the power to defy tariff laws and check the operation of the laws of supply and demand; forces that can, by combination and secret agreements, create an artificial scarcity, holding back from the markets the products of labor, and set at naught the natural course of the stream of commerce. People wondered, when the Underwood tariff bill was passed, why the cost of living did not immediately decrease. It should have shown an immediate response, but it did not. Why? Because those who should have been competitors regulated imports to suit their own convenience, and entered into secret trade agreements to uphold prices. Products which could be stored in warehouses or put in cold storage were deliberately held by such methods out of the market to maintain high prices.

When capital has such power as this the time for tariff tinkering is at an end. There is only one remedy, and that is a policy of national regulation, both of imports and exports, with the constant view of maintaining normal reasonable prices. The hit-and-miss policy of tariff schedules must be discarded.

A "Tariff For Revenue Only" is merely a camouflage for a tariff subsidy. Where tariffs are employed at all they should be used only to check the flow of importation in order to stabilize the home market. Raising revenue should not be the primary consideration. Protecting home industries is a much more commendable purpose. But only those industries should be protected which are essential to make us self-sufficient and economically independent. The tariff rates in all cases should be elastic and revisable by a competent commission whenever it is apparent that the tariff rates are being taken advantage of to gouge the consumer.

The printed report of the committee accompanying this bill (Report No. 1139) states, on page 2, that there are approximately 600,000,000 pounds of wool in storage in the United States. Just think of it! There is enough wool thus kept out of the market to make a suit of clothing for every human being in the United States! The pertinent question is, Why is it in storage? Winter is upon us and the people need clothing. Many of us are wearing clothing several years old because we will not stand to be gouged by unconscionable profiteers.

Oh, they tell us that the bill is for the benefit of the grazer and the rancher. But tell me who owns the 600,000,000 pounds of wool now in storage in the United States? Do you suppose all of that wool belongs to the rancher and the grazer? No, my friends, that wool is owned by the speculators and the profiteers. And they want to cash in. That is the emergency! And that, perhaps, is the reason why this is called an "emergency tariff."

The bill before us proposes a duty of 2½ cents per pound on mutton and lamb. How, pray, is that going to help the consumer? The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] told about having to pay 65 cents for two lamb chops in a restaurant. If that is a hardship to him, how must the poor mechanic, the clerk, and workman feel about conditions which subject him to such unconscionable gouging? But the point is, how is the hardship to be lessened to the consumer and to the stock-raiser by imposing this tariff? Surely if the stock-raiser is to get more for his sheep the butcher will be bound to ask more for his mutton. So that if it should happen to help the stock-raiser—which I doubt—the gentleman from Michigan will find himself paying 70 cents instead of 65 cents for his dinner.

The argument is made in the committee report and here on the floor that this is also a revenue measure in addition to its other claims for admiration. Well, if it is a revenue measure it can only be such in so far as foreign products are imported. If it fails to keep out the competition of foreign products it can not be of any service to those whom it purports to benefit. If it is going to be of any help to the farmer, it must exclude foreign competition. Is that not the excuse given for every tariff measure—that we must protect our home producers against the inundation of our market with foreign products? If this tariff measure then is going to be a revenue producer the farmer will be no better off than he is now.

There could be nothing devised to show the utter incapacity of the Republican Party to meet the issues of reconstruction so well as this proposed plan of a high tariff to relieve the economic distress of the country. The people are suffering under the oppression of war taxes, and added to their burden is the iniquity of profiteering which is even a greater evil calling for immediate rectification. We are paying war prices for the necessities of life, and yet, in this dire moment of distress, the Republican leaders can think of nothing to lessen the public burdens beyond an increase in the tariff, utterly forgetting all the lessons of our history, that an increase of tariff inevitably augments the cost to the consumers.

The curse of our age is dishonesty. It seems to have permeated every strata of society. Greed and avarice are the idols of the world.

The speculators and profiteers have got this country by the throat.

I do not blame the farmers for their dissatisfaction. Undoubtedly they do not receive adequate returns for their products, but the difficulty is beyond mending by any tariff tinkering. The farmers' products are bought by speculators and the middlemen and storage warehousemen control the output and gouge the consumers to their hearts' content.

The people are subjected to an economic tyranny worse by far than the political tyranny of kings. The world is trembling on the verge of a great change. Either the masses must obtain consideration in our legislatures or they will violently shake off the tyranny and resort to the soviet system, whereby the nonproducers and profiteers are deprived utterly of all political power. Strange as it may seem, the soviet system has been in operation in this country for many years. We have seen the evidence of its presence in our economic history and have failed to identify it or classify it. It was in operation at the beginning of our political life, when the masses were deprived of political power. We had a soviet system then consisting of the wealthy, who were in the saddle and held the reins of Government. Manhood suffrage has tended to abate the evil, but within the last fifty years there has grown up an economic tyranny worse than the old class system, so that to-day we have a soviet of the moneyed classes. Men have become money mad. The lowest and the meanest are not immune from its contagion or exempt from its pollution. We must have a new dispensation—a dispensation of plain, everyday honesty—or the world will sink again into barbarism in a welter of violence and anarchy. The need of the hour is plain, common honesty, and if those occupying places of influence in the land do not consent to deal fairly with the people they must witness soon the end of their domination. The soviet of the moneyed classes will give way to a soviet of the people. Such a denouement would mean the end of representative government and would presage the fall of civilization.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan, Mr. SWOPE, Mr. OGDEN, Mr. CROWTHER, Mr. HARDY of Texas, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. MCCLINTIC, Mr. WILSON of Louisiana, Mr. SEARS, Mr. SUMNERS of Texas, Mr. BOX, Mr. PARRISH, Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. RAYBURN, Mr. BROOKS of Pennsylvania, Mr. RANDALL of California, Mr. NELSON of Missouri, Mr. KNUTSON, Mr. HERNANDEZ, and Mr. LARSEN asked permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit a blanket request.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks such a request is not in order in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection to granting these several requests?

Mr. MANN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I just want this to go into the RECORD. The House refuses time for the consideration of a bill and lets everybody in favor of it print long speeches on the subject, so that the speeches are not made in the House at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. OLDFIELD].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas is recognized.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am opposed to this bill. [Applause.] I can not get the consent of my mind to vote for the highest protective measure that I have had the opportunity to vote for when I know that it will not do the things that these gentlemen think it will do. In other words, my friends, I do not think we need prohibition of articles coming into this country. That is not the thing. What we need is a market for the things we produce, a market for the things that we have on hand, and a market for the things we expect to produce in the future.

Now, they talk about this bill being a revenue measure. No man from the Treasury Department ever came before our committee and said it would raise any revenue whatever. There is a statement in this report here which says that it will raise $125,000,000. I do not believe that statement, because I say to you here that this bill is a higher protective measure on these articles than the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. Therefore it is not for the purpose of getting revenue, but it is for the purpose, and the sole purpose, of protection, an embargo on foreign products.

Now, Europe owes us a great deal of money, as you know, and if an individual owes you $1,000 you are not going to make it more difficult for him to pay that $1,000; but, on the contrary, you are going to help him, if you can, to pay you the $1,000. Therefore, my friends, this will not help the farmers of the South or of the West, because what they have on hand to-day they have no market for. That is the trouble with the cotton of the South. That is the trouble with the cottonseed oil of the South. That is the trouble with the wheat growers and the corn growers and the cattle growers. It is a lack of markets, owing to a lack of money, in this country to buy these various products. Therefore I do not believe we, especially Democrats, ought to vote for it at this time. If there are Democrats who are for protection, I would advise them, for whatever the advice is worth, to wait for two or three months and then they will have all the opportunity they want to vote for protection, because the Republican Party will have a large majority in both Houses after the 4th of March, and they expect to place upon the statute books of this country the highest and most burdensome tariff laws ever imposed upon the people of this country.

We must have revenue, of course, from any source that we can get it, but this bill will not bring in revenue. I do not see how it can bring in revenue when the people of this country can not sell the things that they have on hand to sell. It would shut out imports, and therefore we will lose what we are now getting on these various items.

Now, gentlemen, speaking as a Democrat, let us look at the platforms of the two parties. Of course, you know what the platforms of the two parties are, but I want to put them in the RECORD here. The Republican platform of 1920 says:

> The Republican Party stands now, as always, in the fullest sense committed to the policy of tariff protection to American industries and American labor.

The Republican Party has always been for protection. The Republican Party is going to be for protection in the next Congress. Here is what the last Democratic national platform says on the subject:

> We reaffirm the traditional policy of the Democratic Party in favor of a tariff for revenue only, and we confirm the policy of basing tariff revisions on the intelligent research of a nonpartisan commission, rather than upon the demands of selfish interests, temporarily held in abeyance.

No tariff commission has reported on the items in this bill. There has been no investigation, except that men have come before our committee and said, "We are up against it financially; our banks are pressing us; we can not pay our debts." Certainly that is true, but the remedy is not a prohibitory tariff law against the products that we can not sell here now for lack of markets. The Republican Party thus far has refused to do anything to stabilize the conditions in Europe. You have refused to do anything that would enable our allies to stabilize the conditions prevailing within their territory, and now you are trying to get away from this proposition by making the American people believe that you want to help the producers of this country. I do not think that is the real reason. I think the real fact is, my friends, that it is a carefully laid plot by the leaders of the Republican Party to try to split the Democratic Party on the question of protection. I do not believe they will succeed, because I believe that Democrats, gentlemen on this side of the House, would prefer to wait until after the 4th of March, and then, if you want to vote for protection, you will have all sorts of opportunities.

Now, then, take the wool proposition. Is there a person in this House to-day who believes that, under this provision on the cotton section, imposing 7 cents a pound duty on sea-island cotton will be of any benefit to the people of this country? It just gives the cotton manufacturers of this country an excuse for robbing all the other people of the country on cotton goods and cotton cloth. Take also the wool schedule, the one that put the Republican Party on the rocks in the Taft administration. It is not denied that the woolgrowers and the manufacturers got together and wrote schedule K, and it split the Republican Party—in fact, almost destroyed the Republican Party—and yet this in fact is a higher wool schedule than that in the Payne-Aldrich law.

That can not be denied, my friends. Do you believe that the woolgrowers and sheep growers of this country are as expert in getting money out of the tariff as the woolen manufacturers? Do you not know that the woolen manufacturers of this country will get the best of it when you go to writing tariff laws? They are experts at it, and they will grow rich on it, and they will continue to grow rich on it.

If there is no Democratic Party in this country to stand up against this special tariff privilege for the future, then it will be just a question of how much one man in this country can rob another man in this country and get away with it without anything being said about it.

I am opposed to this bill, and I hope every Democrat in the House at least will vote against the proposition. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL].

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, the farmers of this country are to-day suffering from three causes: First of all, the importation in large quantities of competitive products; second, a falling off in the purchasing power of the American laborer and the average consumer; and third, the outrageous greed of the dealers who have been selling the products of the farms and other industries to the consumer. [Applause.] There has been nothing so outrageous in all the years of our history as this greed. Why, the case that has been mentioned here of the man who sold two mutton chops for 60 cents out of a sheep that brought only three times that amount for the whole sheep, is an example, and accounts for a large part of the trouble we are in now. And this greed is practiced in every city in the country until the people have simply rebelled; they have quit buying. This bill will do only one thing; it will prevent the foreign competition. We shall have to restore the jobs to American laborers next spring when the other end of Pennsylvania Avenue is in sympathy with the enactment of laws that help American labor and American industry. Then we shall have to put the fear of the law into the hearts of the grafters who have been and are an outrage to the consumers of the country. We do not need importations of beef and wheat or any other farm products into the United States, and the gentleman from Illinois is unnecessarily alarmed.

Mr. AYRES. Will my friend yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. AYRES. I understood my colleague to say that we did not need the importation of beef into this country. I should like to know whether he includes frozen meat?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do. We do not need frozen meat, and I should like to have that in this bill. I should like to have a lot of things in this bill. I should like to have the whole tariff schedule in this bill if the man at the other end of the Avenue would sign it.

Our great need in this country is a restoration of the ability of the American consumer—the American market—that made a market in 1910, 1911, and 1912 for 10,000,000 head more of beef cattle than we had this year, with 10,000,000 more people here now than there were then. Why were we able to make a market for 10,000,000 head more of beef cattle then than we are now? Because then all were employed in American industries and getting the American scale of wages, and the seller to the consumer was not acting the hog as he is acting to-day. The seller has destroyed the confidence of the American buyer until the purchaser simply looks in at the window and turns away. Until the seller to the consumer changes his attitude toward business in this country and takes a reasonable profit for the things that he turns over, the consumer will walk by on the other side and refuse to purchase.

This bill will help to the extent that it will prevent the packers and the millers from loading up with cheap imported farm products to have on hand. It will do another thing. It will enable the farmers of this country to save the females of their flocks and herds and prevent a meat famine in this country in the years to come. This will serve the means of producing meat products. We must protect the farming industry in order to have food in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield six minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, if I felt that there was very much chance of this pending legislation becoming a law I doubt if I should feel very much disposed to support it. I do not understand the argument of my friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and do not believe there is anything in this bill likely to affect the final cost to the consumer of food products and the prevention of profiteering by those handling food products. For one I must confess that he did not convince me of the point he was endeavoring to make.

A tariff bill, as I conceive it, can not be made between sunrise and sunset; that, I am sorry to confess, is what the Committee on Ways and Means have endeavored to do in this case. We have not had a single hearing on the bill. We have not asked for a particle of expert advice. We have not called for information from the Tariff Commission, and all that the bill could be based on in the way of a hearing was the very pitiable appeal of the woolgrowers of Texas.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Is the gentleman really serious in that statement?

Mr. TREADWAY. That we had no hearings?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. TREADWAY. I certainly am.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We had hearings. We consulted the Treasury Department. We went over this whole thing. We took all the time we had and could take on an emergency measure that had to have instant action, if any action was to be had at all, and then we brought in this bill.

Mr. TREADWAY. If the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN], one of my esteemed colleagues on the Ways and Means Committee, can bring before this House any document of hearings on the bill that he introduced or that the gentleman from North Dakota introduced, on which this bill is based, I will withdraw that statement.

Until he does so that statement, I think, is good. I repeat, the only hearing we had was the appearance of the woolgrowers. The gentleman from Texas presenting their position made a most excellent speech.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Certainly.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. I desire to corroborate what the gentleman has stated.

Mr. TREADWAY. Thank you. I have every sympathy with the woolgrowers. The situation is a serious one that confronts the wool industry and the sheep-raising industry of this country. To my mind, we would have been much more justified in presenting a bill to this House for the protection of the sheep industry, possibly also of the beef industry, than to endeavor to care for the various interests and producers that are in the bill.

The section of the country that I represent is both a manufacturing and a producing section. Certainly there has been no attention given to the welfare of the manufacturing and textile industries of the country in this so-called emergency legislation. The employees of those industries are already feeling the effect of falling off of business.

My friends, we are starting from a false basis. It is not the influx of importations that is causing the serious financial loss to certain sections of the country; it is the reaction from the war, the depression of the value of the dollar, and the so-called emergency tariff bill will not accomplish the result, in my opinion, desired by the proponents of the measure.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I will.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Would not that have the same application to manufactured wool, cotton, and shoes that it does to the agricultural product?

Mr. TREADWAY. The price of the manufactured article is depreciating in exactly the same way. The industries in New York, New Jersey, and New England, and in the other manufacturing States are suffering just as much as are the agricultural interests. Nevertheless, my friends, I appreciate the emergency of the agricultural interests of the West and the great interest of Members from that section in this bill, so I intend to give them the benefit of the doubt and vote for this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. TREADWAY had leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I offer no apology for supporting this bill. Every item of duty in it is levied upon foreign products annually imported into the United States in competition with the products of our farms and ranches. It is to save our farmers and stock raisers from bankruptcy that this bill is designed. It is true that it does not go far enough, but as far as it does go it is all right. By all means this bill should place a duty upon all foreign oil cake, frozen beef and veal, and cattle hides, and I want to say that these items would have been in this bill but for two influences—first, that of the big packers who operate their tremendous packeries in foreign countries, and second, the clamor of the millions of consumers in the big cities who do not care whether our farmers and stock raisers make a living wage or not, but demand all food and clothing at low prices.

I want to repeat here the statement I made to my colleagues and the press on December 4, 1920, before this session met, and to which I again called attention on December 9, 1920, before this committee framed this proposed legislation.

Time has proven that free raw material is not a fundamental of true democracy. It has been a fatal policy and constitutes one of our gravest mistakes. It has almost bankrupted some of our southern producers who by law have been forced to purchase everything they have to buy in a protected market and then sell all of their raised products in a free one, where the whole world, dissimilar as it is, competes on an equal footing. The illusive, seductive doctrine of permitting raw materials from every foreign country of the world to enter the United States absolutely free of duty has taken away from our home producers their home market and is largely responsible for our southern planters now being forced to sell their cotton, which means their living for a whole year, for less than they paid out to have it picked and ginned; for the Chamber of Commerce in Ranger, Tex., now offering some of the splendid farms of Eastland County rent free to any farmers who will agree to cultivate them next year; for our warehouses now bulging out with both the spring and fall clips of domestic wool which can not now be sold for its cost of production; for the crippling of our great peanut industry; for stagnating our important stock-raising and dairy interests; and for swiftly depopulating our farms and ranches. Our farmers and stockmen of the United States, sturdy producers who yearly feed and clothe our 105,000,000 people, are now with their backs to the wall facing a most serious crisis.

In Mexico, South America, Australia, Europe, Asia, and Africa there exists an entirely different state of conditions, a different standard of living, a different standard of working hours, a different standard of wages, a different standard of necessities, morals, intelligence, hopes, ambitions, and aspirations. Mexican peons are content to work for a miserable existence. Chinese and Japanese laborers are perfectly satisfied to work from 10 to 14 hours each day for less than 20 cents' pay, to live on rice, to go almost naked, and to let the future take care of itself. Must our intelligent, ambitious, deserving men and women on the farms and ranches of the United States be longer placed on the same level by being forced to compete directly with the peons and slaves of the universe? I am one loyal Democrat who is not in favor of it.

I have had Hon. Thomas W. Page, chairman of the United States Tariff Commission, to assemble for me the following authentic statistics concerning recent importations. During the last fiscal year ended June 30, 1920, the following raw materials were imported from foreign countries into the United States absolutely free of any duty, to wit:

Cotton	pounds	345,314,126
Corn	bushels	10,229,249
Wheat	do	4,744,712
Wheat flour	barrels	157,896
Wool	pounds	427,578,038
Beef and veal	do	42,436,333
Mutton and lamb	do	16,358,299
Cattle	head	575,328
Sheep	do	199,549
Cowhides	pounds	439,461,092
Calf hides	do	68,359,825
Cabretta hides	do	101,848
Buffalo hides	do	14,682,279
Other hides	do	275,964,213
Oil cake	do	145,026,652
Vegetable oils:
Chinese nut oil	gallons	10,613,638
Coconut oil	pounds	269,226,966
Cottonseed oil	do	24,164,821
Palm oil	do	50,163,387
Palm-kernel oil	do	53,503
Olive oil, for manufacturing	gallons	216,145
Soya-bean oil	pounds	195,773,594
Other oils	worth	$1,542,271

During the recent four months of July, August, September, and October, 1920, the following raw materials were imported from foreign countries into the United States absolutely free:

Cotton	pounds	42,961,691
Corn	bushels	5,317,376
Wheat	do	12,040,541
Wheat flour	barrels	221,989
Wool	pounds	44,435,246
Beef and veal	do	19,456,961
Mutton and lamb	do	64,623,776
Cattle	head	142,139
Sheep	do	94,960
Cowhides	pounds	80,023,347
Calf hides	do	10,782,491
Cabretta hides	do	488
Buffalo hides	do	3,270,450
Other hides	do	53,013,186
Oil cake	do	128,615,571
Vegetable oils:
Chinese nut oil	gallons	3,354,901
Coconut oil	pounds	62,402,486
Cottonseed oil	do	579,172
Palm oil	do	12,962,010
Palm-kernel oil	do	1,403,651
Olive oil, for manufacturing	gallons	9,896
Soya-bean oil	pounds	26,923,725
Other oils	worth	$378,053

It does not require an expert to realize just how much the above free competitive imports have discriminated against our farmers and stockmen, and their consequent losses thus occasioned, besides the great loss in revenue to the Government.

We have in the United States about 75,000,000 to 80,000,000 head of cattle and we annually raise here less than 30,000,000 head of calves, while South American countries, with only a little more than a third of our population, now have on hand from 80,000,000 to 85,000,000 head of cattle and anually raise approximately 35,000,000 head of calves.

Due to their tropical climate, cheap and luxuriant grass, cheap labor, ample water, and little feeding, our cost of production is about five times as great as theirs per pound.

The time has come when we must take products of American farms and ranches, and all competitive substitutes, off of the free list and let our American market afford a living wage and return to our producers, and when we must so arrange our tariff schedules on such products and substitutes as will equalize our cost of production with that of foreign countries. To a certain extent this principle was recognized and followed in the tariff act of October 3, 1913, in placing a duty on certain products largely raised by cheap labor in foreign countries. And during the last fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, the following dutiable products were imported from foreign countries into the United States and duty paid upon same, to wit:

Rice, uncleaned, 22,437,197 pounds, duty five-eighths cent.
Rice flour, 1,265,198 pounds, duty one-fourth cent.
Rice, cleaned, 156,217,566 pounds, duty 1 cent.
Beet sugar, 1,219,834 pounds.
Cane sugar, 7,533,200,338 pounds.
Molasses, 154,670,200 gallons.
Peanuts, shelled, 120,344,425 pounds, duty three-fourths cent.
Peanuts, not shelled, 12,067,998 pounds, duty three-eighths cent.
Butterine and cocoa butter, 41,500 pounds.
Olive oil, edible, 6,812,596 gallons, duty 30 cents.
Linseed and flaxseed oil, 4,550,391 gallons, duty 10 cents.
Peanut oil, 22,064,363 gallons, duty 6 cents.
Rapeseed oil, 1,229,526 gallons, duty 6 cents.
Other dutiable oils, 1,432,695 gallons.
Certain wheat, 35,052 bushels, duty 10 cents.
Certain wheat flour, 1,160 barrels.

If it is democratic and American to place a duty upon rice, peanuts, and cane products, then why not upon corn, wheat, cotton, wool, hides, live stock, and far-eastern vegetable oils and substitutes that daily compete with our farm and ranch products? And why beg the question any longer? Why not place a proper and adequate duty upon all such items to do some good?

The millions of city consumers who inhabit New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Washington, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis, and our other large cities, while demanding and getting their $6, $8, $10, $15, $20, and $25 for six to eight hours' work each day, are constantly demanding that everything they eat and wear be furnished to them at the lowest minimum. They never give a serious thought to the subject of a living wage to the producer who feeds and clothes them. And I am afraid that it has been the clamoring of these millions of city consumers, whose votes are very much desired, which has caused free raw materials to be written into Democratic platforms. Much too long have we Democrats permitted rest-needing politicians to entwine into our platforms and policies some city-vote-catching slogan to the detriment of our producers. With blinking eyes we Democrats have sat by and let our brother Republicans pass their measures to place a duty upon pearl buttons, chemical glass, surgical instruments, tungsten, magnesite, and the numerous other products their rich millionaire friends are interested in, thus placing unneeded millions into the pockets of a few wealthy millionaires, and we have let our worthy producers appeal to us in vain.

The proper solution of this question more vitally concerns the consuming millions in cities than anyone else. Suppose our producers were to get tired and quit. There would be starvation in cities. When the manufacturer can not make a profit he shuts down and prevents loss. But after the producer prepares and plants his ground in the spring and arranges for the season's growth of his flocks and herds there is no shutting down for him without losing his whole year's income. He must combat drought, floods, disease, grasshoppers, boll weevil, rust, depredations, plots of gamblers, and the score of other enemies that seem to combine for his destruction. Just now there is ample demand for our products abroad, but want of funds and credit prevents a sale. At an enormous expense we have built a large merchant marine, so essential in bringing the markets of the world to our producers, and we must not let it stand for naught or slip out of our hands. We must find a safe way to assist worthy purchasers to obtain necessary credit. We must see to it that our producers are not forced off of their farms and ranches.

The price our farmer receives for all of his products is the market price of same in the town or city near his farm where he is forced to sell. Will any sensible statesman contend that when hundreds of millions of pounds of farm products are permitted to be imported from foreign countries absolutely free and dumped into the markets of the United States, where when sold at a profit they are sold at prices far less than the cost of production in this country, that they do not affect and lower the price of every product of every farm in the United States?

Ask our farmers what they are getting for their cotton. You will find that they can not sell it for what they have paid out to have it picked and ginned. Ask them if they want us to permit this 345,314,126 pounds of foreign cotton to be imported into the United States absolutely free of duty to compete with their products. Ask our sheep and mohair men, whose wool has gone down from 72 to 15 cents per pound, if they want us to continue to permit 427,578,038 pounds of foreign wool to be imported into the United States each year absolutely free of duty, and for us to continue to permit 64,623,776 pounds of foreign mutton and lamb to be imported here in four months duty free, as was done in July, August, September, and October, 1920.

To prevent our farmers and stock raisers from being bankrupted and run off of their farms and ranches by this foreign competition, on December 14, 1920, I introduced in the House the following:

A bill (H. R. 15083) to prohibit for one year the importations of cotton, cotton seed, corn, wheat, wheat flour, oil cake, vegetable oils, cattle, sheep, hogs, hides, beef, veal, mutton, lamb, wool, mohair, rye, barley, flax, peanuts, oats, and all food substitutes for farm products raised in the United States.

Be it enacted, etc., That for one year after the passage and approval of this act the importations of cotton, cotton seed, corn, wheat, wheat flour, oil cake, cattle, sheep, hogs, hides, beef, veal, mutton, lamb, wool, mohair, rye, barley, flax, peanuts, oats, vegetable oils, including Chinese nut oil, coconut oil, cottonseed oil, palm oil, palm kernal oil, olive oil, and soya bean oil, and all food substitutes for farm products raised in the United States, are hereby prohibited, and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby suspended for the time stated in this act.

The principle of so arranging our tariff schedules on our farm and ranch products, and all substitutes, as will equalize our cost of production with that of foreign countries, was a part of my platform when I came to Congress, and I am still standing on my platform.

My colleagues over on the Republican side are not fooling me with this bill. I know that it does not go far enough. I know why they have left beef, hides, and oil cake out of it. The big packers and the millions of city consumers would not let them put in these items.

Look at this item from the press:

EASTLAND WOULD CUT WAGES IN ALL BUILDING TRADES.

EASTLAND, December 17.

Claiming that the high wage scale is retarding building activities, the leading building contractors drafted proposals for reduction of the wage scale and requested the labor leaders to accept reductions, to reduce carpenters' pay from $10 to $8 per day; bricklayers from $13.50 to $11; painters from $10 to $8; electricians, $10 to $8; plumbers, $13.25 to $11; common labor, $6 to $4; mortar workers, $8 to $5; cement finishers, $13 to $11; plasterers, $13 to $11; lathers, $10 to $8.

The unions have not acted on the proposition.

And in this same county of Eastland, where city laborers are getting as high as $13.50 per day, a chamber of commerce has been begging farmers to come and cultivate the farms next year absolutely rent free. Ought city laborers who are getting $13.50 per day to object to farmers and stock raisers receiving a living wage for their products? They depend on the farmers and stock raisers for what they eat and wear. If our producers quit, they will be robbed then sure enough with the price they then must pay for foreign products.

Again, I say it is the howl from the packers and millions of city consumers of the East that has caused beef, hides, and oil cake to be left out of this bill. And under the rules we can not put them in this bill. When it is read under the five-minute rule I intend to offer amendments to place a duty of 1½ cents per pound on oil cake, 3 cents per pound on cattle hides, and 5 cents per pound on beef and veal shipped from foreign countries to the United States, and 5 cents per pound on all foreign mutton and lamb, beef and veal now in cold storage. And if such items are defeated by points of order, the blame will be on the Republican Party. For to make such items in order I introduced the following:

House resolution 622.

Resolved, That in the consideration of H. R. 15275, being a bill imposing temporary duties upon certain agricultural products to meet present emergencies, to provide revenue, and for other purposes, it shall be in order to consider without the intervention of a point of order amendments to said bill proposing to place a duty upon frozen beef and veal, hides, and oil cake imported from foreign countries into the United States.

After introducing this resolution for a special rule I went to the distinguished gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], chairman of the Rules Committee, and begged him to give us 30 minutes' hearing, but he refused, notwithstanding that several members of the Rules Committee expressed a willingness to have the hearing. I felt sure that he would refuse, but I wanted to put it on him and his party and the steering committee which kept it out. [Laughter and applause.]
